PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 28, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and ever-living God, before whom the generations come and go, whose mercies are infinite, whose love is eternal: We beseech Thee to bless our country and help us here and now to advance the onward march of Thy kingdom of right and justice by the increase of our devotion to our national ideals and the reign of law and self-discipline.

Thou has shown us Thy ways and we have forsaken them; Thou hast brought us to great honor and we have wearied of Thy service; nevertheless, we beseech Thee to spare us from adversity and restore to us the vision lost in paths apart from Thee. Grant to us such calm and measured wisdom in all our deliberations, that confidence may everywhere prevail, that our people may be of one mind and one purpose in fulfilling the destiny unto which Thou dost call us. We ask it in the name of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Education, Niagara Falls, N. Y., requesting that certain appropriations be made for the United States Office of Education to be allocated to State departments of education and local communities to cover the costs of a program of vocational training designed to prepare workers for employment in essential war industries, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Education, Niagara Falls, N. Y., offering the facilities of the Trott Vocational School to the New York State Department of Education and the United States Office of Education to be used as a center for training workers in essential war industries, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Allied Marine Contractors Association, New York City, N. Y., praying that the United States promptly render all possible assistance to the allied nations by furnishing them with necessary equipment in the present war situation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Lions Clubs, of Greenwood, S. C., and Amarillo, Tex., endorsing the national-defense program and favoring the immediate enactment of legislation to stop subversive activities of citizens or aliens and the agents of foreign nations in the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the president and members of the Pottstown (Pa.) Chamber of Commerce Minute Men, praying that Congress remain in session during the present emergency, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers, Atlanta, Ga., praying for the enactment of the so-called Norris-Sparkman bill, providing for tax replacement in connection with the operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority to each county and school district in Georgia lying in the Tennessee Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented the petition of the monthly meeting of the Society of Friends, Park Avenue, Baltimore, Md., praying for the adoption of certain peace measures as drafted by the National Peace Conference, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. BARBOUR) presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Whereas the port of New York Authority has reported after extensive research and investigation that a drydock adequate for the largest naval and mercantile ships is a vital need in the port of New York; and

Whereas several sites on the New Jersey side of the port of New York have been mentioned in the said report as possible locations for the said drydock; and

Whereas the New Jersey side by reason of its superior natural advantages is ideally situated for such purposes; and

Whereas the interests of the whole port of New York and of the Nation will be best served by the construction of a drydock and shipyard on the New Jersey side of the port: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring):

1. The Legislature of the State of New Jersey urges and petitions the Congress of the United States, the Navy Department, and the port of New York Authority to recognize the superior natural advantages of the New Jersey side of the port of New York, and to authorize at the earliest possible time, the establishment of a drydock and shipyard on the New Jersey side of the port of New York adequate for the largest naval and mercantile ships.

2. A copy of this concurrent resolution duly authenticated by the speaker of the house of assembly and attested by the clerk of the assembly be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Senators and Representatives of the State of New Jersey in Congress, the Navy Department, and the Port of New York Authority.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. BARBOUR also) presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

An assembly concurrent resolution memorializing Congress and the War Department of the United States to operate Central Airport, Camden, N. J., as an integral part of the United States defense program

Whereas a national-defense program is now under consideration to include the construction of 50,000 additional airplanes and the training of additional fliers; and

Whereas there is located in the township of Pensauken, adjacent to the city of Camden, N. J., an airport which has been used for 10 years as a base for the largest air lines and a landing field for the largest airplanes; and

Whereas this airport known as Central Airport has achieved a national reputation for safety, a point emphasized as recently as Friday, May 31, when 37 large airplanes, unable to reach La Guardia Field, N. Y., because of heavy fog, took haven at Central Airport; and

Whereas the opening of the Philadelphia Municipal Airport has caused commercial air lines to transfer their Philadelphia district base from Central Airport to Philadelphia Airport by July 1, 1940, with the result that the closing of Central Airport on that date has been announced; and

Whereas the Civil Aeronautics Authority, in a report published last year, estimated that 3,500 modern airports are necessary for civilian use under its expanded training program, even without regard to wartime needs; that airport facilities are so meager with only 20 Army and Navy air bases in the entire country that the United States could not even begin to cope with an aerial war and that the President's goal of 50,000 planes manufactured per year hardly will be worth achieving unless a comprehensive program of airport construction is begun immediately; and

Whereas Central Airport has many natural advantages, including its excellent location, sufficiently inland from the Atlantic seaboard to be protected and yet close enough to make an ideally situated base; easily accessible to freight, trucking, and shipping service and yet far enough from the Delaware River to escape the worst fogs; strategically located to defend the Philadelphia metropolitan area, and thoroughly equipped for a training field, with available land to the east and north for enlargement if deemed advisable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring):

1. That the Congress and War Department of the United States be urged to take over the operation of the Central Airport in Pensauken Township, Camden County, N. J., as a training field for student fliers or in any other manner deemed important to the national defense; to prevent the abandonment of an adequate, well-equipped, excellently located airport in light of the proposed program and to remedy the shortage of airport facilities in this country; and

2. That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the United States Senators from New Jersey, to each Member of the House of Representatives from New Jersey, to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate recessed yesterday there was no amendment pending. The question is on the third reading and engrossment of the joint resolution. The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] has notified the Chair that he desires to address the Senate. Having had that notice, and the Senator from California being on his feet, the Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

SENATORIAL COORDINATING COMMITTEE

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, yesterday I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 279) providing for the appointment and composition of a special committee of the United States Senate, to remain here in Washington from day to day in the event of adjournment or recess of the Congress. First, I desire to state that the submission of that resolution is no admission on my part that I think the Congress should adjourn. On the contrary, if a motion to adjourn is presented, my vote shall be cast against it. I desire, however, very briefly to present to the Senate today a discussion of the resolution I have submitted, because of the extreme possibility that a resolution for final adjournment may be presented sometime next week and hurriedly passed by Congress without any opportunity for an argument upon the pending resolution.

In order that Senators may be thoroughly informed of the nature of the resolution I have submitted, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 279) submitted by Mr. DOWNEY on June 12, 1940, was read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby established a special committee to be known as the Senatorial Coordinating Committee to consist of 21 Senators, 3 of each from the following standing committees of the Senate and appointed by the chairmen thereof: Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Finance, Foreign Relations, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Post Offices and Post Roads. The special committee shall select a chairman from among its members. Any vacancy in the special committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee and shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

The members of the special committee shall remain at the seat of Government during any recess or adjourned period of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and shall meet each weekday during any such period.

It shall be the duty of the special committee (1) to confer with and give advice to the President or his duly authorized representatives on matters relating to the existing world and national crisis, (2) whenever the committee deems it advisable, to recommend to the President that Congress be called into special session, and (3) to consider and investigate such matters as the existing emergency may present, including (a) the best methods of fostering friendly relations, commerce, and understanding among the nations of the Western Hemisphere, and providing for the defense of the peoples of such nations, their territorial boundaries, and their governmental sovereignties; (b) the best means of restoring the American people to full employment and the operation of their industries to full capacity; (c) the best methods of rebuilding the highways in the United States so that they may be effectively adapted to national safety, defense, commerce, and traffic, (d) the best methods of providing adequate financing for the future defense of the Western Hemisphere; (e) the advisability and best methods of shaping our national economy so that it may be self-sufficient in essential war materials; and (f) the best plan to be adopted to guard against so-called "fifth column" activities and the best way to mobilize our people, industries, and resources for the defense of this country and such other areas in the Western Hemisphere as may be deemed advisable.

The special committee shall make reports of its findings and recommendations to the President and the Senate at such times as it may deem advisable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the special committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, first I desire to make clear to the Members of the Senate that this resolution is in no way a reflection upon the Chief Executive of the Nation or upon our executive branch, but it is an implied criticism of the failure of the American Government to meet the problems developing in the past 2 years, including the Chief Executive, the Army, the Navy, and the Congress of the United States.

I shall now say some things that may perhaps seem harsh. I say them, not merely to be critical, but because I believe it is essential that we, the representatives of the American Government, shall awaken to action out of the apathy that has gripped us for the past 2 or 3 years.

Preliminary to that, I should like to recall to the Senators here that the first month I entered the Senate of the United States I attended a joint meeting of the Military Affairs Committees of the House and the Senate. We there heard our two ambassadors to Great Britain and to France outline to us the military conditions existing in Germany, in France, and in England; and they then and there prophesied to us the coming of almost exactly what has happened in the past 60 days. They told us not only what would happen when this war began in earnest, but they told us why it would happen; and yet, with every governmental representative knowing exactly the military strength of the combatants in Europe, we apparently are surprised, excited, and shocked, and almost in a hysteria, because the war has turned out just the way we should have known it would turn out.

Ambassadors Kennedy and Bullitt told us that the air power of Germany was so great, and the air power of her adversaries so inadequate, that France and Great Britain could not withstand Germanic military assaults. As a matter of fact, they prophesied that the war would not last very long before both Paris and London would be compelled to capitulate or face destruction.

Mr. President, I understand now that our intelligence services at Berlin, London, and Paris have filled the archives of our Government with reports of the great mechanized instrumentalities of Germany and the weakness of France and Great Britain, showing that nothing could have happened in this war save what has happened. And let us not forget that more than 2 years ago Charles Lindbergh warned the world of the accelerating air power of Germany, but his warning was ignored, or at least it did not spur either France, England, or the American Government to energetic action.

Mr. President, in the face of those facts, why this hysteria and confusion when the war has resulted the way all of the military prophets said it would result? I might say that the President of the United States stated to me—and it is no violation of ethics when I say it, because he proclaimed it in the press—that the military power of Germany was so great that the overwhelming odds were in favor of Germany winning this war. Yet, knowing all those facts for 2 years, have we prepared ourselves adequately either for operations at home or abroad to meet this crisis? We have not.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I had the honor to attend the meeting of which the able Senator speaks, and I heard the statements made by these two Ambassadors and can testify to the absolute correctness of the able Senator's statement.

May I say that since 1919, 21 years ago, I have not only advocated supremacy in the air, and voted for the 6,000 planes when we had before the Senate a bill looking to that end some time ago, and a separate department of the air, which Germany has, Britain has, France has, and Japan and all the other great nations have. I am glad this subject is being brought to the attention of the country.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the able Senator from Minnesota who though he has consistently opposed our intervention in Europe has vigilantly urged national defense.

My reason for making the remarks I am making is not merely that I desire to be critical. I say that we are just as blind and apathetic today toward what we should undertake for the future as we were blind and apathetic 2 years ago as to what we should have been doing during the intervening 2 years.

I desire also to make this statement, that there has never been any conflict over national preparedness between Senators who believe in intervention in European affairs and those who believe in isolation or "continental insulation," if you prefer. While I myself voted against the President's program at the last extraordinary session, at that very time and in that session I urged that reasonable vigilance required the immediate preparation of an air fleet of from 25,000 to 50,000 planes, quoting Mr. Lindbergh and Eddie Rickenbacker, and our other war experts, as authorities on that subject.

That my own attitude on preparedness may be clear, I want here to quote from my remarks in the Senate at the special session last year on October 9, 1939. I would avoid the charge of hysteria, and therefore assert that the position I am now assuming is fundamentally the position I occupied 2 years ago.

Of course, I admit freely that I have been surprised and alarmed at the power of Germanic military might and believe we should accellerate our own defensive mechanism to meet all possible eventualities that may reasonably be expected in view of world conditions now known to exist.

My remarks, to which I have adverted, at the special session were as follows:

[Excerpt from Senator DOWNEY's 7-hour senatorial speech of October 9, 1939]

Mr. President, there is a wide difference of opinion among military experts themselves as to how efficient our Army is. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], after long experience as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, has assured me that he believes within 6 months we will be able to mobilize and have properly equipped from four to five hundred thousand first-class troops. Most of them could be assembled within 30 or 60 days. Many of the military men point out—and I think correctly—that we lack certain arms, certain ammunition, certain mobile artillery, and certain other implements of war for the greatest efficiency. So far as I am concerned, as a Member of the Senate, let me say to the military men of America: Make us safe against any foreign aggression without weakly counting upon the support of any other nation that well may fail us when we vitally need help. Whatever we ought to do by way of preparation we should do. And Congress, of course, must be guided by its military advisers. How idiotic we would be if, like the statesmen of European empires, we should allow ourselves to be overbuilt so that we could truly be said to be the prey of reasonable apprehension and fear. Whatever amount we have to spend for the protection of our people against foreign aggression should be cheerfully spent. Of course, I hate to say it, but I must say that such expenditures should come ahead of every other expenditure, even expenditures for the unhappy submerged half of the population, because, after all, national defense is the supreme necessity of all.

Colonel Lindbergh and our great war ace, Eddie Rickenbacker, have suggested that if we had 25,000 more military airplanes, then even the most timid and hysterical citizen in America would know that we were absolutely safe, because the first submarine, the first war vessel, the first soldier that came in a belligerent way within 500 miles of the Western Hemisphere would be destroyed overnight by our many airplanes. Some Senators may ask, "But what would be the cost of 25,000 airplanes?" I say to you it would be negligible.

I have secured from one of the great airplane companies—I must keep the name in confidence, because the information was so given to me, but I take it that any company would verify these figures—that with an expenditure of $250,000,000 we could build factories which would produce 3,000 first-class planes every month. I do not know whether or not Mr. Rickenbacker is right that we ought actually to build 25,000 planes, of which we are already building 5,500, but, in any event, I think the Government should undertake the financing of private airplane companies to build those factories, and let them stand as notice to the world that the first hostile vessel, the first submarine, the first soldier that dares to undertake aggressions in the Western Hemisphere will start the operation of those factories at full capacity.

One can easily see the immense value of an air force of twenty-five or fifty thousand planes. It could fly 25,000 or 50,000 soldiers to any point in the Western Hemisphere almost within a day. They could strike at any submarine bases. They could mobilize overnight to protect the whole Western Hemisphere. Who is so deluded as to suggest that we should fight battles in Europe to protect our western safety, with the loss of millions of lives and billions upon billions of dollars, when we can make ourselves invulnerable in the Western Hemisphere for a comparatively small amount, and be thereby assured no one will attack us?

I am here appealing to the Senate of the United States to use its initiative and its high ability in the critical years which lie ahead, and that is why I want to point out, Mr. President, that for the last 20 years 9 out of 10 American citizens in the highways and the byways of our land have said that in the next great war the air power would be a tremendous instrument of offense and defense, 9 out of 10 of the laymen of America have said, "Why in heaven's name do we not appropriate substantial sums for our defense."

I have talked with Senators here over the past 2 years, I have heard them expressing themselves in the Committee on Military Affairs, and almost every Senator has made the same statement, that we should be investing more money in airdromes, the training of pilots, and in airplanes. But the Senate has never manifested its own will and wish in these matters.

When the airplane bill came before the Committee on Military Affairs, did that committee refuse what the President of the United States or the military officials asked? No. Most of the committee thought their request was too small; some took the position that we could not hope to get anything more than might be requested by the executive department. Some believed we should accept without question the judgment of the Executive and military.

I say it is high time that the Congress, more directly representing the common-sense judgment of all our people than any other branch of our Government, should make its will, energy, and talent felt in our governmental operations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just to make the record straight, I think it will be shown that for the last 4 or 5 years, perhaps longer, the Congress has approved every appropriation for the Army and for the Navy and for the air force which the President and the Bureau of the Budget have sent to us. While many have thought that their requests were too small, nevertheless, whatever has been asked for has been written into law.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland for that contribution, and I am sure he is correct, that every dollar of appropriation that has been asked by the Executive of Congress for military preparedness has been granted, and I think more, too.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member. Did the Senator attend the joint committee meeting when Ambassadors Bullitt and Kennedy appeared before us?

Mr. DOWNEY. I did.

Mr. MINTON. And the Senator criticized what was expressed by those men at that time—that Germany was in a position to win the war if they got into one. Did not the Senator do that?

Mr. DOWNEY. I am very sure I did not, though I do not know to just what the Senator refers. But let me answer his question in this way: It is true that I left that meeting amazed, questioning, and shocked, and wondering whether the statement given to us by the Ambassadors of the overwhelming military superiority of Germany was correct or whether it was for some reason exaggerated. But the President of the United States and the Intelligence Department of the United States knew whether or not those statements were true. I afterward came to believe they were wholly accurate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator that for 4 or 5 years, at least that long, almost every government on the face of the earth has been informed of what was taking place in Germany. There have been perhaps four or five hundred books written on the subject, and in the last 2 or 3 years many of these books have been among the best sellers. Without attempting to escape any of the responsibility which, as the Senator well points out, falls upon Congress, because, after all, it is the legislative arm of the United States, there has not been any considerable thought in this country that any damage could be done here. We have been under the illusion that the Atlantic and the Pacific were as wide as they were 200 years ago, in spite of all the evidence. I am glad to see the Senator raising his voice today, because the information to which he alludes as to the strength of Germany's planes has been in the hands of this Government for 5 years, 4 years, 3 years, 2 years, and 1 year, as it has been in the hands of the French, the Polish, the Hungarians, the Czechoslovakian and all the other governments.

Colonel Lindbergh returned from Europe and gave some exposition of the air power of Germany. We have known about it all along. But the thought was that, no matter what happened in the whole world, we would not have to do any preparing here, even though we would not intervene, that we did not have to prepare here. The Senator is right; we should have had our ears open long before, and should have acted long before, and we would not have been so jittery and nervous today.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think we were justified, perhaps, in relying upon statements so often made by Mr. Hitler, that when he obtained Austria and when he obtained Danzig he would have no other territorial conquests in mind, that he was satisfied with the delimitations upon the Rhine, and that when he acquired those territories he would be satisfied. He assured Mr. Chamberlain of that fact. I did not believe his representations, but many people in Europe and many people in the United States believed Mr. Hitler was sincere. Obviously he was not. He simply was bent upon deceiving the people of Europe, as well as the people of the United States, by his subtle methods, and in the meantime he was preparing the most formidable military machine the world has ever seen. Now we are witnessing the result of the inertia and the lassez faire policy of many European governments, if not our own.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator from Utah for his fine contribution. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Anyone who has read Mein Kampf, by Mr. Hitler himself, knows he is very frank in stating what he is going to do. His first plan was to harmonize all the German people in every country in the world, no matter where they were situated, and after he had worked them into a whole, with allegiance to the fatherland, he uses this expression:

> When we have done that, we can then settle our hunger for colonies.

Mr. Hitler said first he was going east; that he was not going west. Then he went west. So we cannot excuse ourselves on the ground that we have believed Mr. Hitler, because there have been a great many contradictions in the last 4 years between what Mr. Hitler has said and what he has done. The whole truth of the matter is that we have always assumed that, no matter what happened in Asia or in Europe, we did not need to prepare in this country even to defend ourselves; that the Atlantic Ocean and the Pacific Ocean, with a navy, were all we needed. That is why we are situated as we are today, and there is no other excuse, in my judgment.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator for his very able contribution.

Mr. President, one of the issues I should like to present to the Senate, to be considered by the proposed committee if it should be appointed, is involved in the question of the strategic war materials.

I have no desire to discuss the policy of trade reciprocity generally, but let me say to the Senate that any nation that allows itself to depend upon the production of its strategic war materials from points five and ten thousand miles away, across the distant oceans, has placed itself in a position where it might, overnight, receive a blow to its financial, business, industrial, and defense structures that will rock them to their very foundation.

I know, as the President of the United States has recently informed us, that we are now scouring the earth in a wild and largely futile search to bring in what scanty hoards of tin, rubber, manganese, and other strategic materials we can. We are now trying to do in the course of a few months what we should have done over the course of years. Nine out of ten American citizens have proclaimed the wisdom of gathering strategic war materials; hundreds of our veteran and civic organizations have urged it. Bernard Baruch and Hugh Johnson vehemently have proclaimed the vital necessity of such action for years, but the Government has done nothing.

Let us consider the facts to show how grossly careless we have been. On January 1 of this year we actually had in the United States 92,000 tons of crude rubber—less than we had 1 year before. With the world aflame, with our own

Chief Executive cautioning us to take every vigilant step, we allowed our supply of crude rubber, which may become vital for our national existence, to depreciate to the lowest level that it has been in any recent year, and we were just as grossly careless with tin and other essential military supplies.

I take it that Mr. Stettinius, in whom I have the greatest confidence, is right now doing everything he can to gather from the four corners of the earth tin and rubber, and other metals and chemicals, whose lack might almost paralyze us if their supplies are cut off.

Mr. President, I say that this Nation, if it values its national existence and welfare, should tomorrow begin to go beyond that, and to shape its economy to produce synthetic materials and substitutes for tin and rubber and manganese and other military essentials that possibly, within 6 months, we will not be able to get from our accustomed sources.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I may call the Senate's attention to the resolution introduced a long time ago by the able minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], dealing with strategic war materials. It proposed an exchange of these necessary war materials for the billions of unpaid war debts due us from the Allies.

Nothing was done about that resolution. For months I have been asking that we acquire strategic war materials and apply them on the debts owing to us by the dearly beloved countries known as the Allies that we are worrying so much about, but nothing has been done about it. Let these great empires turn over their West Indian island bases to us. That is one method of real defense. Let them turn over strategic war materials and receive due credit on the debts owing to America from our advances to them in the first World War.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his valued contribution to the discussion.

Mr. President, let me say that for the last 2 or 3 months I have done some study upon this question of lack of war materials in America, and the tremendous difficulty in rapidly building factories to produce substitutes and synthetics for our strategic war materials, I wish to say, without being an alarmist, because I do not want to be alarming to the Nation, that there are vast difficulties lying ahead of the American Nation if within the next year our supply of tin and rubber from the Dutch East Indies and Malaya is cut off. I do not say that those difficulties cannot be surmounted by American genius and talent. They can be. They will be, I am sure. But I say to the Senate that our failure to develop factories for the production of our own war supplies, our failure to lay in stock piles of strategic war materials, has been a grievous mistake. Let us make a few more such errors, and we will be out on the same kind of desperate stormy waves that now engulf the empires of France and Great Britain.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to ask the Senator from California if he recalls—I do not myself recall—what happened to the bill relating to the acquisition of strategic war materials. I know we passed a bill relating to strategic war materials. That bill, as I recall, encountered considerable difficulty before it was passed by the Congress of the United States. How did the bill, as passed, compare to the bill as it was introduced? Does the Senator from California recall that?

Mr. DOWNEY. The history of that bill was as follows: The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which handled this question. I desire to compliment the Senator from Utah for the splendid battle he put up attempting to provide this Nation with strategic war materials, even though he was unsuccessful. The Senator from Utah has told me that from information given him by Mr. Baruch, from his own study and experience, he became convinced years ago that in our lack of tin, rubber, manganese, quinine, and other strategic war materials, there existed a dangerous defect in our war economy. The Senator from Utah, from the Military Affairs Subcommittee, reported a bill calling for the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the purchase of strategic war materials. There were several Senators on the Military Affairs Committee who had known that the War Department had expressed a desire for three or four hundred million dollars, and they said to the Senator from Utah, "Why not appropriate $250,000,000 or more?" The Senator from Utah said, "It will not do you any good. I do not believe that we can even get this measure passed, which provides for $25,000,000 a year for 4 years, or $100,000,000 in total. If we ask for any more we shall certainly fail."

After a statement of that kind the Military Affairs Committee reported to the Senate the strategic war materials bill calling for the appropriation of $25,000,000 a year for a period of 4 years. The bill did not pass in that form. There was a long argument in respect to the bill. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] finally offered an amendment to the bill to reduce the amount from $25,000,000 per year to $10,000,000 per year, and upon a very close vote that proposal was adopted. Even with the assurance of the Senator from South Carolina that the President of the United States would not use the $25,000,000, and did not want it, still there were only 33 Senators who voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina while 31 voted against it.

I have here the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina at the time, and I will read it, since the Senator from New Mexico has asked for the information. This is taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 30, 1939, page 3534:

> Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the amendment.
> The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$25,000,000" and to insert "$10,000,000."
> Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the question of the purchase of critical and strategic materials has been before the Committee on Appropriations for several years, particularly under consideration by an able subcommittee.
> I have communicated with the officials of the War Department, who state that the President has said that should the pending bill be passed he would not submit an estimate for more than $10,000,000 for this purpose. I have conferred with the Director of the Budget, who made the same statement to me.
> I, therefore, submit to the Senate that it would be unwise to authorize the appropriation of the sum of $25,000,000 a year, or a total of $100,000,000.

On the strength of that statement, many of the economy-minded Republicans voting with the Senator from South Carolina, and many of the Roosevelt-minded Senators voting against the amendment and against the alleged wishes of the President, the amendment was carried. It went into conference. Under the direction of an able representative whom I saw in the Senate Chamber a few minutes ago, in the conference the amount was lifted to $20,000,000 a year for 4 years, but when the Budget estimate came to the Appropriations Committee it called for only $10,000,000, and that was the amount granted by the Appropriations Committee.

I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I believe that is the history of the legislation.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I was going to suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that when the strategic-materials bill was voted on in the Senate, the Senator from California was not present.

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes, Mr. President; I was not present. On that afternoon we had a public hearing here in Washington of vital importance to the State of California, which I had to attend. I realize my own faults and limitations of time and space. I realize that every Senator here acts under great handicaps in endeavoring to carry on the work for his State, to do his political errands, his duties for his constituents, and to perform his other Federal duties.

No, Mr. President; I was not present and probably I am to be censured for that. But it made no difference, because, though the amount was increased in conference, the Bureau of the Budget did not even then avail itself of the added money.

Mr. President, I am not saying this to be critical and harsh. I am saying this for the reason that there is a grave possibility that 3 months, or 6 months, or a year from now, some condition may arise in Asiatic waters that will close to us our present rubber and tin supply. We can get ready for that now by beginning to find substitutes and synthetic materials. But let no Senator think it does not mean tremendous problems for business and industry to accomplish what must and should immediately be done. And the solution of the many problems that will arise in our own production of synthetic war materials will require the prompt and energetic action of both the Chief Executive and Congress.

I, for one, Mr. President, do not believe that job will be promptly undertaken and carried out unless it is initiated by the Congress of the United States, whose primary duty it is. I have no doubt of the large energy and high ability of Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen and the other members of the President's Emergency Defense Council who are now performing most valuable services for the United States, but they cannot wholly take over the duties of Congress in such vital respects as this. Consequently, Mr. President, I say to the Senate that if we adjourn or take a recess, a committee of Senators should certainly remain in Washington to familiarize themselves with the situation, to investigate, and to make plans for what lies ahead. If we do not do so, if we continue to follow the deluded path and the apathy of Mr. Chamberlain, there is at least a probability that we may ultimately meet with the same fate as the unfortunate opponents of Germany.

Mr. President, I am not prophesying that Germanic armies will undertake the conquest of the United States. I hope not. I pray not. Probably not; but in national defense the worst should be anticipated, and the most destructive possibilities should be guarded against. The worst we can anticipate in this respect is the cutting off of our supplies of tin, rubber, and manganese. Let us not lose a single day in acting upon the assumption that that will occur, and doing the best we can to meet the situation.

Mr. President, I shall not speak any further upon that provision of my resolution. I have no desire to be an alarmist. I should very much have preferred to present this matter solely in the executive session of some committee and thereafter in Congress but if the expected adjournment of Congress takes place that action would be futile unless this committee is created. Hence this statement on the hazardous position of the American people arising from our lack of war materials.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Before the Senator leaves this particular part of his subject, I wonder if he recalls the fact that during the months of September, October, November, and December Russia became the No. 1 customer of the United States for the strategic and critical materials to which he refers, including molybdenum, gasoline, oil, tin, and rubber. In fact, exports of the latter two commodities became so voluminous that in January Assistant Secretary of War Johnson and Secretary of the Navy Edison were obliged to issue a pronunciamento calling upon American exporters not to export any more tin or rubber to Russia, for the reason that an emergency had been created in this country, and that less than 6 weeks' supply was on hand. Whatever the policy of the Government was over that period when Russia became our No. 1 customer for such materials, let it also be noted by the Senator from California that the Neutrality Act and its embargo provisions were applied to Poland, Germany, England, and France, then to Denmark, Norway, Holland, and Belgium, and finally to Italy, but never to Russia.

Mr. DOWNEY. I appreciate very much the contribution of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that when we first started the W. P. A. movement I suggested to the War Department and to the W. P. A. that we create some stock piles of manganese. I called attention to the fact that a great amount of manganese was produced in my home city of Butte, and neighboring cities. I called attention to the fact that those who owned the manganese mines were perfectly willing to go ahead and mine it and stack it, at a cost which would be the minimum cost plus about 6 percent; that they could use a large number of W. P. A. workers, put men to work, and at the same time build up a great stock pile of manganese so that we would not be dependent on foreign countries. The War Department and some of the other departments were very much in favor of the idea, but we were unable to get anything done with reference to the matter.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. President, when the realization came to the American people a few short weeks ago—and apparently likewise to our executive department and our Army and Navy—that we had better begin to prepare to defend North America and the United States, I suppose everyone would concede that the most immediate duty before us was provision for pilots, airplanes, tanks, arms, artillery, and ammunition. I have no doubt that under the very able War Advisory Council appointed by the President, that duty is now being energetically and ably performed. Mr. Knudsen is a great industrial genius, beyond doubt. Mr. Stettinius is likewise of highest character and ability. Indeed, all of the personnel of the Council is of the very highest caliber.

We are also fortunate in the United States in having great industrial corporations such as the General Motors and the United States Steel with which Messrs Stettinius and Knudsen are connected. In these, and others like them, is found the greatest technical skill and organization genius in mass production in all the world. I think the Germans have been a great people in production, but I still think that American technicians, engineers, and industrial leaders are the best in the world. It should be heartening to the American people to hear the statements of Mr. Ford and his son Edsel of their ability to manufacture airplanes. I have no doubt that they are capable of following promise with performance.

It was called to Mr. Sloan's attention that some military men were disturbed about where the Army might get twenty-five or fifty thousand trucks immediately. Mr. Sloan called the attention of the public to the fact that General Motors turned out 200,000 trucks a year ordinarily, and could speed up to produce twenty-five or fifty thousand more without the installation of one new machine and, I doubt not, with the employment of only a few more workers.

I think, Mr. President, when once we can mobilize our great industrial corporations, our technical leaders, and the rank and file of American workers, the most loyal and ablest body of workers, I believe, in the world, we will have no difficulty getting into tremendous mass production to meet any aggression against this continent.

So, Mr. President, my attention has been turned rather to some other problems. What are "Achille's Heels" of our defense here in the United States? The first, the lack of essential war materials produced on this continent, I have already discussed. What is the second? I take it, it is the problem which has arisen because we have not used prompt and vigorous means to build up the harmonious cooperation with Mexico that we should.

I have no doubt that many internal disturbances will sweep the continents of North and South America within the next 2 or 3 years. I have no desire to discuss that subject on the floor of the Senate, but I do desire to point out that if we would take prompt, fair, generous means to tie the people of Mexico in with the people of the United States in the same sort of relationship that exists between our people and the Canadians, all the nations of North America would thereby incomparably better their defensive positions. As a matter of fact, I have been told by one of our leading military experts that we cannot even successfully defend the Panama Canal against a heavy attack unless we can utilize the areas of Mexico and Central America in its defense.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this question at any length, but I should consider myself neglectful if I did not make one statement which I hope will be carried to the four corners of this land. I have discussed the question of United States cooperation with the Government of Mexico in planning our mutual defense, and, Mr. President, I have heard certain statements made that have shocked me to the heart because of the lack of ethics and morality and enlightened wisdom involved in them. It is being said by some few of our citizens, "Yes; we agree that the United States would be in a much stronger position if it could cooperate with the people and the Government of Mexico in mutual defense, but we think that the only thing to be done is for us to make an actual conquest with our Army of the territories and lands of Mexico." This sentiment is so violative of the very noble ideal that we in America have been preaching as to shock the conscience of the American people. As a matter of fact, there have been columnists and there have been editors who in the past 2 or 3 weeks by implication have urged that very thing. I say that if we are driven to a violation of our own standards which we have been urging upon the world in the last few years, then, indeed, is democracy destroyed right here in the United States.

Mr. President, I desire to point out that if the United States ever should move into Mexico with arms, and make any assault, not only would all the people of Mexico be aflame against us but almost every citizen in South America would consider it a holy crusade to help wage a war against the Colossus of the North.

I pray that we shall all soon perceive the necessity of closer cooperation between all the nations of North America, and that by just, generous, and noble standards we shall help to weld Canada, the United States, and Mexico into an unbreakable union in which all shall combine in the mutual defense of the sovereignties of their governments and the territorial boundaries of their lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I regret to learn from the observations of the Senator from California that any American newspaperman or columnist or statesman or man in the humbler walks of life—and I think sometimes our statesmen are "in the humbler walks of life"—would express the view which has just been suggested by the able Senator, namely, that there was a possibility, or even a thought, of our Government invading Mexico. I confess that I have never heard such an idea expressed. I know a number of years ago, when Carranza and Villa were important factors in Mexico, when a good many Americans were driven out of Mexico, and their property, amounting to several hundred million dollars, was confiscated, there was considerable resentment in the United States, but I did not hear even then—and that was in 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922—any suggestion that the United States should invade the territory of Mexico.

I do not believe that the people of this great Republic have ever contemplated the invasion of Mexico. I think they would resent it with as much vigor as would the people of Mexico themselves. I think that, on the contrary, the American people, by and large, have sympathized with Mexico because she has had economic and political problems which have pressed very heavily upon her. The American people have sympathized with the peons; they have sympathized with the underprivileged; they have sympathized with the Indians who have been denied, as many believe—and I am making no statement of fact for myself—privileges which they ought to have received under a democratic form of government.

I recall—and the Senator will pardon me for intruding longer upon his time—having had the honor to be chairman of the subcommittee of the platform committee of the Democratic Convention which met in New York in 1924, and I wrote the plank with regard to our relations to an interest in Latin America. After indicating that we must work in harmony with Latin America, that her problems were our problems, that we were together in this Western Hemisphere, and that whatever would make for their advancement would make for ours, I concluded the statement by saying, "God hath made us neighbors; let justice keep us friends."

I think that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull have demonstrated over and over again their profound interest not only in Mexico but in all Latin America. They have looked, as I think most of the people of this Republic have looked, upon South America and Latin America as really a part of the Western Hemisphere, have considered that our interests are linked together, and that we should work together for the development of democratic institutions and for the preservation of the high ideals and religious sentiments which have animated the American peoples and have made such important contributions to the development of civilization throughout the world.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator for his contribution. The distinguished Senator has said, much better than I could say, what I would have liked to have said. I agree with him that the present Government of the United States, in its conduct with Latin America, has displayed enlightened wisdom and high national standards, and I am glad to say that there is today a closer and kinder relationship, I think, than there has been for many years between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States.

I desire also to clarify the reference I have made by saying that in discussions which I mentioned it was, of course, assumed that the world was going into confusion and chaos and that in Mexico and in the United States, as well as elsewhere, there would be the threat of revolutionary movements and "fifth columnists" and saboteurs and spies, and it was in connection with that contemplation that several of the persons with whom I have talked made the statement of aggression against Mexico which I suggested. If the Senator desires I can furnish him privately with the columns and editorials to which I adverted. I have no desire to display them publicly.

Mr. President, let me say that I have the very highest opinion of and admiration for the present Mexican Government. I have no doubt that they will meet the American Government more than half way in any just plan for mutual cooperation.

I do not desire to protract this discussion very much longer, but I do say that right now there are things that ought to be done looking to the development of closer relations between the nations of this continent that are not being done, and I should like at least the opportunity to express my own ideas, humble as they are, before some committee of the United States Senate if in this critical hour we should decide to adjourn.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have not heard the remarks of the Senator from California as a whole, but I came into the Chamber at the time he was discussing the possibility of a revolution across the line in Mexico.

Let me say to the Senator from California that I have been in Mexico on several occasions, and whenever I heard any talk there about a revolution it usually came from some representative of an industrial enterprise, not of Mexico, who was indulging in wishful thinking about a revolution.

There is not going to be any revolution as far as the Mexican people are concerned; and I feel quite confident that I know what I am talking about when I say that revolutions will not occur in Mexico any more, because Uncle Sam is not going to let anyone from this side start a revolution in Mexico.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator for his very valuable contribution. He speaks with a much better knowledge of the subject than I do, and I am thoroughly in accord with the tenor of his statement.

Mr. President, I take it that there is another duty which the Congress of the United States should immediately undertake, and that is to restore all of our people to employment and all of our factories and resources to immediate work. I dogmatically make the statement that if the Congress of the United States and the Chief Executive do not in the immediate present concentrate upon some plan of bringing about full employment in the United States within 1 year, we shall, indeed, be derelict in our duties.

In connection with the statement I made about Mexico, I should like to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I apprehend that if and when Hitler wins this war, the dictatorial governments will proceed to a tremendous industrial renaissance, and if that is not equaled in the Western Hemisphere we shall see right here in our own land, as well as in Mexico and South America, tremendous waves of disorder, discontent, and perhaps of revolution. Senators here are vastly disturbed about "fifth column" movements. Let me tell you that there is one very simple way to cut off the head of that horrid monster—a terribly destructive monster it may become—and that is the full employment of our people at just and adequate wages.

Do some Senators suggest that our present rearmament program is going to restore many of our people to employment? I say to you upon the advice of two of the ablest economists in two different bureaus of the Government that it is not going to do anything of the kind. It may not bring about any more employment than we have right now. One expert advised me that it might result in the employment of a million more men, and the other man said not to exceed 2,000,000; and we must remember, Mr. President, that hundreds of thousands of workers will be disemployed in our export industries in the next 6 months, and 2,400,000 young boys and girls will become 21 years of age. I say to you, Mr. President, that if we do nothing more than carry out the President's rearmament program, the unemployment in America will be just as great 1 year from now as it is today. Let me say further that when men begin to throw bouquets at Hitler because he is a conquerer of other nations, as later some may do, they are going to begin to compare our democracy and our economy with that produced by a dictatorship; and as much as I fear, dread, and hate a dictatorship I know there will be many jobless, frustrated, bitter, hungry men in the United States who will be inflammable material for the leadership of "fifth column" movements. Do not doubt it.

I listened the other day to the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], for whom I have the highest admiration, for his brilliant intellect and his incisive method of statement. I agree with him that if we go into this era much longer, pyramiding our debt as we are, the destruction of our national solvency, with all that means, will come upon us; but I disagree with him about the necessity of cutting expenses and raising taxes. I say that what we should do is to increase our productivity and our wealth; and I desire to place before some committee of the United States Senate, if I can only get the opportunity, the statements of bankers, industrialists, economists, experts, that we have one way by which every unemployed person could become employed within 1 year, performing a social service of great permanent value for us civilly, and performing a vital duty for our military defense, and that is through the construction of great superhighway systems in the United States.

Mr. President, we think we have done some things of note in building great public projects in the United States during the past few years. We have not done anything that is really big. I greatly admire the T. V. A. project and the work of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in bringing it to fruition; but do you know that all of the T. V. A. units employed on an average less than 12,000 workers a year? We tell what a tremendous project that was in doing away with unemployment. It provided labor in actual construction to only 12,000 workers and perhaps to as many more in producing the materials that went into the various dams and other uses. We boast in the West because of our great projects, Bonneville and Grand Coulee, and our San Francisco bridges, and our Boulder Dam, and our Central Valley project in my State, near where I live. Why, Mr. President, not one of those projects employed as many as 5,000 men over a period generally of 4 or 5 or 6 years. We have in America millions upon millions of frustrated and bitter men asking the right to work, denied the right to recreate here in America a great empire with noble highways that could double the mobility of our artillery and our military defense; and we have not even time to stay in session to listen to experts telling us how it can be done. The experts, I may say, are almost a unit on the accuracy of the statements I am making here.

Mr. President, consider for a moment: The cement plants of America are today operating at about one-half capacity. The sand and gravel plants are operating at less than half capacity. Everywhere in the United States, in every State, almost in every city, are gigantic monsters of metal and human ingenuity ready to tear this Nation apart to rebuild and bring beauty where there are now scars, and safety where there is now danger. Multitudes of powerful machines that could build us a thousand T. V. A.'s, or tens of thousands of miles of highways, are here right now, ready to go at the touch of millions of men who want to assist in operating those machines.

Mr. President, I have been talking to some of the greatest contractors in the United States. They say that around every cement plant, around every gravel plant, around every sand plant, around every projected highway are thousands upon thousands of men anxious and begging to do this work; and out of the colleges of America would come the engineers to oversee it, if we would but employ them in this great proposed highway project.

Mr. President, we have not only 10,000,000 unemployed workers in America; we have as many more part-time workers. We have tremendous idle manpower in this Nation that is ready to and wants to work.

Is it not our duty to remain in session until we have achieved the rational plan to end all idleness?

I am told by expert advisers that in every city and every State the blueprints are ready for some great highway project which would tend to make that city and that State more beautiful, a safer place in which to live, a wealthier city and State, and a better place for military defense. Within 90 days, if Congress would remain in session and see that it was done, we could be rebuilding the highways of America, employing our people, increasing the striking power of our military defense.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] must agree with me in at least one thing, that there is one very great city in the United States which certainly could stand a few superhighways over it, under it, and around it, and that is the city of Baltimore. [Laughter.] If I can but be given the opportunity, I will present before a Senate committee the most noted traffic experts, if Senators want to listen to them, who will tell them that the prime foundation of adequate military defense is wide, broad highways. I heard one of our foremost traffic experts state day before yesterday—I do not know that he is correct, and one distinguished Senator cast some doubt upon his statement, but he is a great expert—that there is not one road along the Atlantic seaboard which for any considerable distance can carry the heavy artillery of America. The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who knows much about the military, indicates that that is correct. One reason is that the bridges are not strong enough. I would feel apprehensive for Fredericksburg or Washington, D. C., if our military had to come from the other side of Baltimore at 75 miles an hour. There would not be very much of Baltimore left, or possibly of Fredericksburg or Washington, when our military forces arrived. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am not suggesting that we employ 10,000,000 men in rebuilding the highways of America. I doubt whether there would be over four or five millions employed in that work, including the subsidiary and supporting industries. But their larger purchasing power would result in a better market for merchants and farmers and railways and barbers and every other class in America, and we could so regulate our highway building as to bring about full employment. As a matter of fact, we should start upon that program, and we should not stop it until every man in the United States who wanted it had a job, and every able-bodied man on relief who would not work was put off relief. We will have no right, in the chaotic days which lie ahead of us, to burden our economy with relief-supported men who could be doing some constructive work for this Nation, and earning two or three times as much for their families as they now receive.

Mr. President, I desire to present but one more point, and then I will have concluded. The economists and the experts tell us that if we would regain full employment within the course of 2 or 3 years we could so increase the national income, and thereby the Federal receipts, at the present tax rates, that we could finance a military defense program of seven or eight or ten billion dollars a year without higher taxes or without borrowing. I believe that any Senator who would sit down and listen to the experts for a week would reach the certain and definite conclusion that we are the wealthiest empire of all times and places, that all we have to do is to run our farms, factories, stores, and railroads at full capacity to increase our national income within a year or 2 or 3 from 25 to 50 percent, and thereby increase our Federal taxes far more than that, because as we go into the higher tax brackets in income levies the tax receipts are increased out of proportion to the national income.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Maryland in his gloomy prophecies about what is going to happen to our solvency, our finances, and our business structures, in the way we are going, and I have no doubt that if he himself, with his brilliant intellect, would sit down around a table with the experts, he and they would reach some conclusion as to the way we must proceed if we are to restore this Nation to prosperity and our Government to solvency.

Mr. President, I dislike to say what I am about to say, but out in California we probably have 2,000,000 people frustrated, unhappy, miserable, their supporters seeking jobs and unable to get living wages. That group is almost to a man for the present administration because they are among the submerged and the unfortunate groups of our people. I have been at dinner with some of them where I have seen a lone piece of meat upon the table in my honor, and the children looking at it hungrily. Probably they had not had meat for months. I have been out in our jungles of our unfortunates and seen the children of the outcasts there, diseased, dirty, hungry, insufficiently clothed.

Almost every one of those people could and would be a loyal, patriotic American. But let this economy continue to function, with them as its victims for a few years longer, let them see their living standards further reduced by higher taxes and higher prices, and, knowing California, I say that they will be rich material for "fifth columns" and revolutionary activities which all the Army of the United States and all the agents of the F. B. I. and the Department of Justice will never be able to check.

We need have no fear of "fifth column" movements if our people are prosperous. There will be psychopaths, there will be Communists and bund leaders preaching disloyalty and treason, but our intelligence service can deal with them. It cannot deal with millions upon millions of frustrated, hungry, and unhappy people. Yes, general employment is the answer to our military defense, our "fifth column" activities, the financial difficulties of this Nation. I pray and hope that the Senators of the United States, who are of the highest ability and intelligence and devotion to duty, may undertake this problem with a sacred concentration upon their duties.

Mr. President, in the last few weeks there have been some words which seemed to me rather hysterical, from people in high offices here in the Senate and elsewhere, describing the terrible condition in which we would be if Hitler won the war. Those words seemed to me to be words of defeatism and despair. Here we are, a land of tremendous population, great wealth, resources, and technical skill. I declare that marshalling our people and our resources we can stand against all the world and hold the torch of democracy high and safe against every effort to dim its light. When leaders in high places again preach despair and defeatism, when they speak of our enslavement because the empires of France and Great Britain may crumble, I hope our citizens will go back to colonial days for inspiration, when a few million people, inhabiting a continent in which three great powers struggled for mastery, had the courage to enunciate this American dream of freedom and democracy, and in a world where tyranny everywhere prevailed, strike out against the greatest empire of the time.

Yes, Mr. President, there were leaders in those days who in a world of absolutism, though representing a weak and numerically small people, dared to preach the redemption of mankind, and to strike the blows against oppression and to emerge free. If we of the United States, now with 130,000,000 people, cannot hold our freedom and democracy, our national existence and independence, then we are no longer worthy of the heritage of democracy and freedom. And we shall lose them. But only despair anticipates that loss. The courage and hope of America will proclaim, and, if necessary, fight to preserve and glorify the American way of life. I am sure we shall come through this crisis safely and bravely to a yet greater destiny.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment, which is pending and lying on the desk. Before calling up the amendment, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum for a moment? I was out of the Senate Chamber when the Senator from California made a statement to which I wish to reply.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, does not the Senator from South Carolina wish that the absence of a quorum may be suggested in order that more Senators may be present when he makes his statement?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not wish to cause delay. The statement I wish to make will take only a few minutes.

I wish to refer to the statement made by the Senator from California because I have been asked the question as to the barter arrangement for the exchange of cotton for critical materials. In May 1939, when the Senate was considering a bill providing for the purchase of critical materials for $100,000,000, the purchases to be spread over 4 years, it is a fact that, based upon a statement of the Navy Department to the Appropriations Committee, $5,000,000 was sufficient for the needs of the Navy for that fiscal year and an estimate for only $500,000 for the next year. I moved to amend to make the amount $40,000,000 instead of $100,000,000. Under that amendment, $10,000,000 would have been spent each year. But the bill was not passed in that form. While the Senate agreed to that amendment, when the bill went to the House, $100,000,000 was inserted, and the bill went to conference.

Before the bill was returned from conference, as the result of an investigation I reached the conclusion that the amount of $100,000,000 should not be reduced but should be agreed to, and, in addition, that we should use some of the surplus cotton owned by the United States Government to secure additional supplies of rubber and tin. With the Secretary of Agriculture, I submitted the proposal to the State Department. The Secretary of State succeeded in negotiating a treaty between the Government of Great Britain and the Government of the United States for the exchange of cotton which we held in warehouses for tin and rubber. Under that agreement, up to this date we have received approximately 20,000 tons of rubber; there are approximately 15,000 tons ready for delivery, and the remainder of the 80,000 tons we were to secure has actually been purchased by the representatives of the British Government. Because they did not possess the rubber, they had to go out and purchase it. We own the cotton. Under our agreement, we asked the British not to purchase the rubber all at one time, because it would affect the market price of rubber in the United States. But that rubber has been purchased for delivery in the very near future. Some will be shipped next week, some the following week. Our State Department is endeavoring to facilitate these shipments.

One reason why a larger amount has not been secured to date is that our own people insisted that the British ships available should be used to carry the cotton owned by individuals and shipped by exporters, instead of cotton owned by the Government, which was to be exchanged for rubber. But that, I believe, is being worked out, and the deliveries will be facilitated so that the remainder of the 80,000 tons can be secured at an early date.

In addition to that I may say that under the $100,000,000 authorization, which was agreed to when the conference report was submitted to the Senate, $22,500,000 has been appropriated by this Congress within the year, to be applied on this $100,000,000 authorization. Pending in the Senate at this time is another bill making an appropriation of $47,000,000 for the purchase of critical materials. That will make the appropriation in 1 year of $80,000,000 instead of the appropriation of $25,000,000, which was authorized by the Congress for its program of 4 years.

I must say that I share the views in a great measure of the Senator from California as to the importance of the subject. I am not one of those who will say that 1 year ago, or 6 months ago, or 3 months ago, I knew what was going to happen in Europe. I did not. But after my investigation of the critical-materials subject, I became convinced of its importance, not only from the standpoint of defense, but from the standpoint of industry, should we ever have trouble.

I know that the Senate will hear shortly from the Senator from New York, who has charge of a bill he is anxious to have considered by the Senate, and under which undoubtedly other purchases of critical materials will be made.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I should like to express the opinion that the barter deal largely worked out by the Senator from South Carolina was a most advantageous and sound measure, and he and the others who participated in it deserve the congratulations of the country. I have no desire to minimize that. It was a very wise and a very helpful transaction. But that we may keep our perspective in this matter, let us recall that we use over one-half the rubber produced in the world. Our economy is largely dependent on rubber. As a matter of fact we consume more than 700,000 tons a year. Those 85,000 tons therefore that we were to receive were about 12 percent of what we consume in 1 year. Likewise do not forget that only about one-quarter of that is now in the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. When the Senator from California says "we consume," he means not the Government, but that industry consumes that amount.

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Of the 80,000 tons included in the barter the Government now has 20,000 tons in this country today, 15,000 ready for delivery. The remainder has been purchased, and the reason it is not being delivered is because of the failure of this Government to ship the cotton which we owe the British on the trade. The $80,000,000 will make a substantial addition for the needs of the Army and Navy. We are not making purchases for private industries.

SENTIMENT AGAINST PARTICIPATION IN EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, much has been said with reference to telegrams which Members of Congress have been receiving urging that the United States take an active part in the war. I wish to call attention to some telegrams which came to me this morning from all parts of the country after I spoke yesterday.

The first telegram reads:

You are quite right in checking the direction our Nation is heading. Congratulations on your stand of yesterday.

THE NORWOOD ENTERPRISE,
(For 46 years a Democratic newspaper.)

Here is a telegram from New York:

Your statement today opposing American entrance into the European war voiced the sentiments of the inarticulate masses of our country who are almost unanimously against sacrificing their sons on European battlefields. Would you be willing to address a great antiwar rally in Madison Square Garden if I can arrange it within the next week or 10 days?

WILLIAM GRIFFIN,
Editor and Publisher, New York Enquirer.

Here is one from Jane Martin, a member of the New York State Democratic Committee:

Congratulations on your speech today. Glad to see that one liberal has not turned his coat.

Here is one from Louis B. Ward, of Pontiac, Mich. He was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Senator and was defeated by a comparatively few votes: He says:

Heartiest congratulations your Senate speech today.

Here is one from St. Louis:

We feel that all mothers, as well as an overwhelming majority of clear-thinking Americans, agree with you, which is not involvement in the European war. Continue the good work, which we hope will stop the hysteria in this country.

A. D. NIEDRINGHAUS.
M. WILLIAMS.

On behalf of American youth we command your stand against war.

CHESTER BEAMAN,
JEROME BURDICK,
EDWIN HUMPHREY,
Students, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Here is one from Las Cruces, N. Mex.:

Your pronouncement against war hailed by many here. Wild hysteria ill becomes anybody and our Senate should rise above any such.

Dr. B. B. MCGEE.

There are two telegrams from Albuquerque, N. Mex.; one from Rev. Edward F. Angluin, of Manchester, N. Mex.; and one from New Orleans.

Mr. President, I shall ask unanimous consent to have these telegrams printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, together with a letter signed by 40 or 50 women members of the State Junior Department, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, Montana Division. I call attention to the fact that these telegrams all came in this morning, or were sent last night, after my statement on the floor of the Senate yesterday. In addition, I have received at least 1,500 or 2,000 letters commending the speech which I made the other night against our involvement in war. Those letters run at least 4 to 1 in approval of my speech. With respect to the telegrams which came in this morning, there were 6 telegrams opposing my stand, while there were a great number favorable to it, which I hold in my hand. I ask unanimous consent that the telegrams and the letter to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegrams and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 13, 1940.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The British Empire has a population of 495,000,000. Why cannot it draft men from all its colonies and send them to France instead of expecting us to do so? Since we are sending them aircraft and munitions, the least they can do is to supply the fighters. We got nothing out of the Versailles Treaty. They got enough to arouse the enmity of Germany and Italy, the primary cause of the present war. Let them settle it themselves.

Mrs. S. W. BROWN.

MANCHESTER, N. H., June 12, 1940.

Your warning in Senate yesterday meets this section's full approval. The hysterics of the East are not here in the West. We perhaps deal in sounder things and are stirred by facts and not emotions. To break party ties is difficult, but we must look to you for your usual courage and wisdom to bring organized party opposition to combat present apparent desire to build war party and by speeches, actions, and inferences bring a declaration of war upon us which may not be of our choosing.

STATE JUNIOR DEPARTMENT,
FARMERS EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA,
Great Falls, Mont., June 8, 1940.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the mothers of the soldiers who must fight in the world war if the United States should enter the conflict, beg and implore that you honestly, earnestly, and at all cost refuse your assent to any direct or indirect move that will cause the death of those to whom we gave life and for whom we would die.

We believe that other mothers in other nations, human like ourselves, have the same feeling. We can be enemies only if we are ignorant of each other—ignorant especially of our economic problems. We believe the problems of our potential enemies are the problems with which we ourselves are struggling.

We are firmly convinced that war will not solve but rather complicate these problems by adding fear, suspicion, and hatred to our already real miseries. We petition you, therefore, to seek to avoid war where the avoidance can alone be possible—in the respect of human rights; in the recognition that all men, not only Americans, have the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We wish that to all the peoples of the earth. We wish and we demand that for ourselves and for every potential enemy of any state and on both sides of the present European struggle.

We firmly believe the human family to be a family with God as our Father. We ask that you, in all your thinking, remember that we are God's children; that we are members of each other; that in that family Jew or Gentile does not matter. All that matters is that we are brothers in one bond.

As our representative you must not, you dare not, go beyond our will. If you hesitate in your mind as to what our will may be, recess the Congress and come to us and we will tell you.

We sincerely hope you will give heed to our petition.

Sincerely,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7074) to amend an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, projectiles, and other condemned material in their respective departments.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 17 to the bill, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I have offered, and which is now on the desk, be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, line 17, after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used to defray the expenses of transferring or maintaining the existing officers and personnel embraced in subdivisions (1) and (a) and (b) of (2) at points other than in the cities and States where now located.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment does not make any change in the amount of money carried in the joint resolution. It does not suggest that any item be transferred from one place to another. It relates wholly to the existing set-ups under the Treasury Department in the various States.

At the present time I am advised that every State has an accounting office under the Treasury Department. We have the procurement division, and likewise the disbursing division, already set up in the several States. These offices are being maintained in the States in connection with the relief work.

If the joint resolution is enacted as now written, without this limitation, I am advised that the State offices will be abandoned, and that regional offices will be set up to handle the work of two or more States.

At the present time we have a State office in my State of Oklahoma. We have employed there something like 100 persons handling the three activities, accounting, procurement, and disbursing. It is now planned practically to close the State offices and transfer the functions to regional offices. In the case of Oklahoma the agencies will be transferred to a proposed regional office located either in Texas or Missouri, and I understand the same thing is proposed for other States.

Mr. President, there are something like 5,000 employees in the various State set-ups. If the proposed program is carried out, 100 families in my city of Oklahoma City will be forced either to transfer to Texas or to Missouri or to lose their jobs. What happens to Oklahoma will happen to other States.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a poor time to propose such a violent readjustment of the relief agencies. My amendment has for its purpose providing that the State agencies shall be maintained where they now are at least until later in the year, or until we meet next January. I understand that if the proposed program goes through, the State offices now maintained in the State of Maryland will be consolidated with the offices in the District of Columbia. What happens to Maryland will happen to Oklahoma. What happens to Oklahoma will happen to Kansas, and to all the States except those in which the regional offices are proposed to be established.

I understand that regional offices are proposed to be established in the cities where there are Federal Reserve banks. That means that 12 regional offices will be established in the 12 States having Federal Reserve banks; and the other States, some 30 of them, will lose the existing personnel.

Mr. President, as I said before, this is a poor time to propose such a radical readjustment of the present set-ups in the various States of the Nation. For example, in my State, as in most other States, there is a W. P. A. organization. We have a number of W. P. A. relief persons, which necessitates the making and writing of about 100,000 checks a month. At the present time the checks are prepared in the capital of my State, Oklahoma City. If the office there is abolished, and the work is transferred to some other State, then my State must send its list of checks to another State where the same work must be done, and then the checks, a hundred thousand of them each month, must be sent back to my State. I do not think the saving, if there would be any saving, would be at all commensurate with the disadvantage and inconvenience the State would be put to in the event the proposed transfer were made.

So, Mr. President, I submit the amendment. Its only effect would be to maintain the status quo in the several Federal set-ups in the States under the Treasury Department. That is the whole force of the amendment, and, at the proper time, I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma should be adopted, the amount of money appropriated by the bill would not be adequate to carry on the functions of the Treasury Department which are devoted to W. P. A. accounting and bookkeeping. The practical effect of the provision of the bill is that in an effort to economize there has been a program of regionalization. I do not happen to know whether or not it would affect my State; I assume my State would be affected the same as would Oklahoma. The saving which would be effected would be $1,200,000. It is merely a question as to whether or not we wish to spend an additional $1,200,000 in order to maintain the employees who are now distributed in the various States. If the amendment should be adopted, there should be provided enough money to carry on the work. In other words, there has been a reduction of $1,200,000 from the appropriation of last year for carrying on this work, and the Treasury Department feel that there will be an increase and not a decrease in efficiency.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Colorado in charge of the bill makes the statement that if this amendment should prevail, then the item should be increased in toto $1,200,000?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that if this amendment should prevail there are ample funds in these three items to maintain the present organizations at the present places until the meeting of Congress in January? Then, if we desire at that time, after further consideration, to concentrate and regionalize these offices, we can do so; but there will be no necessity for increasing these items now, as ample funds will be afforded to carry on until Congress meets again next winter.

Mr. ADAMS. That would be true if we disregarded the antideficiency law, which requires that money shall be apportioned over a 12-month period. If we desire to disregard the law, that can be done, but otherwise it cannot be done. This amount of money is appropriated for a 12-month period on a basis to make the saving I have suggested. I think the Senator should understand that, and I believe that, under conditions as they are, we ought to be willing to stand the removal of a few offices from our States. Only some 500 employees would be affected throughout the United States. I suppose in a State such as my own, which represents, roughly, 1 percent of the population of the United States, five or six employees would be affected. In other States, I imagine, the State of Oklahoma, for instance, there would be perhaps twice that many.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would affect a hundred in my State, 85 in Alabama, and other States in proportion to population. In populous States such as New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, with millions of people, it would probably involve several hundred, and in smaller States, of course, a smaller number would be involved, but the average would be about a hundred for each State.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator and I are differing in the use of the term affected. I mean there will be an economy by taking out from the service altogether some 500 employees. The Senator is thinking of those who would be transferred and who would still remain in the Government service.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If this amendment should prevail, no doubt there would be some employees who would lose their jobs.

Mr. ADAMS. About 500.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They would go on some form of relief in all probability. That is the first point. The second point is that, if the action contemplated is taken those residing in Denver and in Baltimore who fill the present positions must close their homes and move to some other town in another State. If they do not do that, they lose their jobs and go on relief. So, as I see the picture, it is about 50–50. If we turn these people out, and they cannot find other jobs—and but few can now find other jobs—then they go on the other side of the equation, the relief side. Under present conditions, I think it is a bad time to make such a radical change in our relief set-up. Upon that basis I submit the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, the Senator and I draw opposite conclusions. It seems to me that this is just the time, when we are being driven to great expenditures for other purposes, to economize in the administrative agencies of the Government, when it can be done without sacrificing functions or efficiency in any way. So I have been inclined to feel that in my State I am willing to take what little consequences may come in order that we may make this very substantial saving without sacrificing efficiency.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am wondering if the Senator has made any investigation as to the question of efficiency and whether or not it would be sacrificed. We have had in New Mexico some rather unfortunate experiences in the transfer of State offices to regional offices. Some small saving may have been accomplished, but it has resulted in marked inefficiency in service to the people of my State.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator, perhaps, has in mind the Home Owners' Loan organization situation?

Mr. HATCH. That is exactly it.

Mr. ADAMS. I am entirely in accord with the Senator in refrence to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation set-up. I think the regionalization of the Home Owners' Loan offices was improper, and I think it resulted in inefficiency. In that instance titles had to be examined and collections had to be made, which involved operations in the immediate locality.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Colorado has mentioned the very institution I have in mind. We were told at that time that the establishment of regional offices would work a great saving and work toward efficiency. Exactly the opposite has taken place in my State. I doubt whether there has been any saving from the standpoint of economy; and I know that there has been no increase in efficiency; but, on the contrary, a great deal of inefficiency has resulted.

Mr. ADAMS. I accept the Senator's statement. In this instance I do not answer as to efficiency, but I know there is a saving in the bill, for there is a reduction of $1,200,000 because of this proposed regionalization.

Mr. HATCH. I quite well understand what the Senator says, and I have been impressed with what he has said about the necessity, if the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma were adopted, for increasing the appropriation. I do not see how, under existing law, we can possibly carry on under the plan suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LUNDEEN obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amendment pending provides for maintaining State offices under the Treasury Department. It is suggested by the Senator from Colorado that if this amendment should prevail it would thereafter be necessary to either increase the items in the sum of $1,200,000 or else those items would be too small to maintain the offices in the States. That could be easily obviated, in the event my amendment should prevail, by offering three small amendments to increase these items in the total sum of $1,200,000.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I concur thoroughly in what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has said with reference to the H. O. L. C. offices. As he has said, we were told that abolishing those offices, and regionalizing or merging them, would make for efficiency and economy. On the contrary, experience has shown that that was not true.

Now, we are confronted with exactly the same situation today that we were confronted with about the H. O. L. C. offices. We ought not to permit the abolition of these offices; we ought to vote for and support the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, and assure the continuance of these offices.

If the Senator from Minnesota will yield for that purpose, I wish to indicate to the Senate the States where offices will be abolished. I read now from page 317 of the House hearings:

> In region No. 1 State offices would be abolished in Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont.

These offices would be abolished and the people in those States, instead of being served as they are now being served, and as they have been served for the past 6 years, by their State offices, would have to petition or to take some other action to see if they could get some kind of service from the regional office in Boston, Mass.

In New York, region No. 2, there are two offices today. New York is one region unto itself, with an office at Albany, which is the capital of the State, and one in New York City. Under this proposal the office at Albany would be abolished, and persons would have to go to the great city of New York to see if they could get their problems attended to there.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. HILL. I will be glad to do so if the Senator from Minnesota, who has the floor, will yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator makes the statement that people would have to go down to other cities. As a matter of fact, there is no occasion, except in the rarest instances, for people to go to the Treasury or the procurement division or the division of disbursements. It is a matter of mail service, and of mailing checks.

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes; I realize that any business may be transacted by mail; but there are times when, if it is desired to have a job done, it is necessary to go and attend to it in person. I realize that these checks perhaps will be sent through the mail.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter has to do merely with the accounting system.

Mr. HILL. It has to do with purchasing supplies. That is what the procurement office is for. I realize that you can send a letter down here, and if you do, you will get the nicest little form letter, No. 1,579,000,000, the same letter that all these other 1,579,000,000 folks have received. The Senator knows that.

Now to go to Region No. 3, the offices will be abolished in the States of Delaware and New Jersey, and all the work concentrated in Philadalphia, Pa.

Region No. 4: The Kentucky office will be abolished, and everything concentrated at Cleveland, Ohio.

The next region—the offices in the State of Maryland, the State of North Carolina, the State of Virginia, and the State of West Virginia will be abolished, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] must transact his business with the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order that we may fix the responsibility for the nefarious crime which is about to be perpetrated on the State of Maryland, may I inquire whether this bill originated in the House of Representatives?

Mr. HILL. It is an appropriation measure, and originated in the House of Representatives; that is true. Let me say, however, that it lies within the power of the Senate of the United States to assert itself, here and now, to prevent this action from being taken. While the House of Representatives did it, we have equal responsibility with the House of Representatives. We are now confronted with the necessity of doing our part, meeting our responsibility, and stopping this action.

The next region: Offices will be abolished in Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is not disturbed about the abolition of the Alabama office; is he? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Yes; I am disturbed, because I want the people of Alabama to have the right kind of service. That is why I am on the floor now. I am pleading for the people of Alabama, and for the people of all the other States. I want all of them, including my people and the Senator's people, to have the right kind of service. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that that is the reason why I am on the floor. When we get to the Senator's State, however, I think we shall find that his office will not be abolished, if my memory correctly serves me.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me to do so, I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] has the floor.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I simply wish to ask the Senator from Alabama if the office for the region in which New Mexico is located happens to be in Denver.

Mr. ADAMS. No; it is not.

Mr. HATCH. The regional office?

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. HATCH. We shall probably have to go to Dallas.

Mr. HILL. Why, certainly. Before the Senator from New Mexico leaves the floor I want to assure him that there is a regional office at Denver, Colo., in the home State of our distinguished friend, the great Senator from Colorado; and his office not only will not be abolished but it will be enlarged, increased, and augmented. It will greatly grow in size by drawing from the other States and the other offices.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator realizes that that is inevitable by reason of the geographical location of Denver, and the beauty and attractiveness of the city.

Mr. HILL. Denver is one of the most beautiful cities I have ever seen. It is a city of rare beauty; but we do not establish offices on the basis of the beauty of the city. We sometimes do establish offices on other bases.

Region No. 8, Arkansas and Missouri: The office in Arkansas is abolished, and the part of it which is transferred will go to St. Louis.

Region No. 9: The offices in North Dakota and South Dakota are abolished and centralized in Minneapolis, Minn.

The next region: The offices in Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma are to be abolished, and the people of those States will have to be served from another State, from Kansas City, Mo., which, from this table, is not even in that region.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Since that hearing was held, the Department has decided to change the office for my State from Kansas City to Dallas, Tex. I have no objection to the change; but it simply shows that the office is to be taken away from my State either to Kansas City or to Dallas.

Mr. HILL. The Senator's office will be abolished just the same.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. The office in Nevada will be abolished, and the people of that State will have to get their service from California.

We next come to the Colorado region, where the office of Wyoming will be abolished, and the people of that State will have to go to the State of my distinguished friend from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, how many employees will be removed from Wyoming by that change?

Mr. HILL. Of course, that is only one office.

Mr. ADAMS. There is only one employee.

Mr. HILL. That is a small office. I am going to say something about the employees in a few minutes, and about the effect on the employees. I want the Senator to understand that, too.

Arizona also will have its office abolished, and the people of that State will have to go to Los Angeles, Calif.

The office in the State of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] will be abolished.

Out on the far western coast, the office in Oregon will be abolished, and the people of that State will have to get their service, if such service be possible, from Seattle, Wash.

Mr. BONE. It will be promptly rendered.

Mr. HILL. Speaking about the personnel, let me say that the testimony shows that when these offices are abolished, a minimum of one-third of all the employees will absolutely lose their jobs on July 1. One-third more, I suppose, will have to be taken care of under the other provisions of the joint resolution which make provision for relief. They will be transferred, I suppose, to the relief rolls. In the case of the remaining third, some of them may be transferred to the regional offices, but there is no assurance that they will be transferred, or how many of them will be transferred; and even those who are transferred or have the opportunity to transfer on July 1 will have no assurance whatever that if they move from Wyoming, we will say, to Denver, Colo., they will be permitted to stay there over 30 days with a job. None of them will have any assurance at all that even if they are transferred they will not lose their jobs within 30, 60, or 90 days after being transferred.

So we have a situation in which we shall have some 29 State offices abolished, wiped out, and we shall have any number of persons discharged and turned out with no jobs; and so far as efficiency is concerned, we have before us a striking example of the consolidation and regionalization of the H. O. L. C. offices. I do not believe there is anyone on this floor who will rise today and say that we did a wise thing or a good thing or an efficient thing when we abolished the H. O. L. C. offices.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield in order that I may make an inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I ask the Chair whether or not section 15 of the pending joint resolution is still subject to amendment. I desire later to tender an amendment to it, and I am compelled to leave the Chamber now, and do not want to be robbed of the opportunity to tender the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Subdivision (a) of section 15 would have to be reconsidered before an amendment to that part of the joint resolution would be in order.

Mr. BONE. It is a committee amendment, and I did not know whether or not it had yet been reached in our deliberations.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on an amendment of the Senate to House bill 8913, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 13, 1940.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17 to the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Provided, That hereafter the compensation of the legislative counsel of the Senate shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY BANDMASTERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: That section 6 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"After the date this paragraph takes effect there shall be a number of commissioned officers, to be known as bandmasters, equal to the number of authorized bands of the Regular Army. Bandmasters shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and there shall be one bandmaster for each such band who shall be the leader thereof in lieu of a warrant officer band leader. The Secretary of War shall select a chief bandmaster from the bandmasters so appointed who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain while so serving, who shall be charged with the duty of administering uniformly the affairs of all authorized bands of the Regular Army, and who shall advise the Secretary of War on all matters relating to the musical organizations in the Regular Army. Bandmasters shall be selected from band leaders in the Regular Army who are found to be physically qualified, and, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe, from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least one year of service in a band of the Regular Army, and from officers in the National Guard of the United States or in the Officers' Reserve Corps. Any bandmaster with service of less than 5 years shall be entitled to the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement benefits of a second lieutenant; and any bandmaster with service of 5 years or more shall be entitled to the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement benefits of a first lieutenant: Provided, That in computing such service in the case of any person appointed as a bandmaster all his active service as a band leader in the Regular Army prior to his appointment shall be counted: Provided further, That no person appointed as a bandmaster shall suffer the loss of any pay by reason of the provisions of this paragraph. Any warrant officer band leader who fails to pass the prescribed physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service shall be placed upon the retired list of the Regular Army with 75 percent of the pay to which he would have been entitled if he had been appointed as a bandmaster as hereinbefore provided."

SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, is hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of band leaders who receive commissions as bandmasters in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. This act may be cited as the "Army Bandmasters' Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

SHERMAN MINTON,
CHAN GURNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. MAY,
DOW W. HARTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

FLOYD B. OLSON—PIONEER OF SOCIAL PROGRESS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, in these days of relief legislation and huge defense appropriations we find 12,000,000 unemployed, ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed in the midst of unlimited abundance. It is now certain that the old parties have no remedy or solution for our problems of today. Some day, somehow, a new party founded on the great farmer-labor elements of our population will advance its program. The program and creed of a pioneer of social legislation, Floyd B. Olson, will then lead the Nation onward toward a better and a happier day.

America today, perhaps more so than at any time in its history, needs the social and economic philosophy of the late Floyd B. Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota.

On January 4, 1933, Olson, America's first Farmer-Labor Governor, in submitting a program of social and economic reforms to a conservative State legislature, said:

> We are assembled during the most crucial period in the history of our State and of our Nation. An army of unemployed, some 200,000 homeless and wandering boys, thousands of abandoned farms, an ever-increasing number of mortgage foreclosures, and thousands of people in want and poverty are evidences not only of an economic depression but of the failure of government and of our social system to function in the interest of the common happiness of the people.

Unquestionably we have made some advances since that time.

We enacted, to be sure, an Unemployment Compensation Act, for which Floyd B. Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party pioneered for years.

We placed the Wagner National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act upon our statute books, both representing principles for which Floyd B. Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party pioneered.

We have set up the National Youth Administration, which is creating some opportunities for the young people of this country—a "brain child" of Floyd B. Olson.

T. V. A., Boulder Dam, Bonneville, and Grand Coulee, all attest progress in the direction of Government ownership of power. To a limited extent, we are taking care of some of the victims of the depression and looking after some of our more unfortunate citizens; we have taken initial steps in various forms of social insurance; we have started to do something by way of slum clearance and decent housing for the poor—all planks in every Farmer-Labor platform since the party's inception.

CRISIS STILL WITH US

It is, nevertheless, true that the crisis of which Governor Olson spoke in 1933 is still with us. The avenue of opportunity for great masses of our citizens remains closed to them. More than 10,000,000 men and women, capable and willing to do useful work, are unable to find employment. To take up this unemployment slack, we are looking forward to a wartime economy, which, sad experience tells us, must have disastrous consequences. One-third of our population is still "ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed." Wealth concentration in the hands of the few continues, while many persons are deprived of the material needs and comforts which a mass-production industry and almost limitless resources could easily supply them. Monopoly, operating in restraint of trade, now has greater control over commodity prices than ever before, and is fast destroying business competition and free private enterprise, gradually eliminating the independent merchant from American economic life. Youth has not yet found its proper place in the economic sun, and the aged have not been afforded that life of security and comfort to which they are entitled.

Government is still unable to function "in the interests of the common happiness of the people." We have not been able to keep pace with the crushing economic events of recent years because we refuse to tackle the fundamentals of our economic problems. We fear that in tackling these problems that the toes of the mighty will be trod upon. Therein lies the chief difference between the Farmer-Labor Party and the two old political parties.

AN AMERICAN LABOR PARTY

The Farmer-Labor Party is an American party, fighting for American principles, American rights, an American standard of living for all the people—a standard of living commensurate with the vast wealth which this country is able to produce.

The Farmer-Labor Party has its origin in the very soil of America. It came into existence because of the crying need for a solution of problems which neither of the old parties was able or willing to provide.

These principles and ideals, personified in Floyd B. Olson, are found in the Declaration of Independence, in this immortal passage:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed, by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men; deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

THE BANNER TO CARRY ON

To know Floyd Olson is to realize the background from which he sprung. This great leader of the common people was a product of the economic and political trends of our Nation. His brilliant rise to public acclaim was the necessary answer to the needs of labor and farmer alike. Before there could be a Floyd Olson, before there could arise the active liberal party we have today, early political parties had to protest, fight, and die, leaving us with a banner to carry on their work. Their history and struggle is the groundwork leading to the rise of Floyd Olson and a new third party.

ORIGIN OF FARMER-LABOR PARTY

The political forbears of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party were the Greenback-Labor, Granger, Populist, and People's Party movements, the Farmers' Alliance, Equity Cooperative Exchange, Nonpartisan League, and other progressive movements which sought to remove economic inequalities and secure economic justice for the masses. They played their roles upon the political stage, and then left the arena of politics for others to carry on. But they left an unmistakable imprint upon American life—a very deep and wholesome imprint that we see and feel today. In that sense they never disappeared. The Granger movement swept the prairies in the eighties, and the Populist movement, whose chief support came from the Northwest, rose to its heights in the nineties.

At their peak, these movements each polled about a million votes. The correctness of their position is to be found in the fact that most of the things for which they stood—for which all of the movements I have mentioned stood—have since been enacted into law.

What were some of the reforms they demanded? The Grangers fought for popular election of United States Senators, woman suffrage, Government regulation of railroads, and graduated income and inheritance taxes. The Populist Party presented a platform including demands for Government ownership of railroads, taxation in accordance with ability to pay, a graduated income tax, the initiative and referendum, postal-savings banks, and similar reforms. Its convention significantly went on record condemning the use of Federal troops in labor disputes. The fight which they conducted against monopolistic tendencies in the United States is still going on.

EARLY PROGRESSIVE VICTORIES

These early progressive campaigns were not without some victories at the polls. The revolt in Minnesota sent Ignatius Donnelly to Congress as a Progressive Republican, where he served three terms, 1862–68. From the western part of the State the Farmers' Alliance elected Kittel Halvorson to Congress, 1890–92. There were numerous local victories in Minnesota and elsewhere. The People's Party achieved signal success in Minnesota in 1898 when it joined with the Democrats to elect liberal John Lind, Governor of the State on the Democratic ticket.

FARMER AND LABOR UNITED

The argument that the Farmer-Labor Party is an unholy alliance of labor and farmer which cannot endure because these two great producers of wealth are naturally hostile and have no mutual economic interests was raised in those days. But many workers and farmers then were able to see clearly through the specious nature of this argument as labor and farmers in Minnesota see through it today. They detected that its real purpose was to keep them separated, to make it easier for their enemies to exploit them. One of the outstanding contributions of the Farmer-Labor Party to the progressive political life of America is that it has not only proven that the worker and the farmer can cooperate to their mutual advantage politically, but that it is necessary that they do so if they are to attain real economic emancipation. Once that fact is brought home to the toilers of this country the ultimate victory of the common people is assured.

The immediate predecessor of the Farmer-Labor Party was the Nonpartisan League, which attained commanding political power in North Dakota and wielded much influence in adjoining States, particularly Minnesota. No political movement in this country was more deliberately vilified and misrepresented by the press than the Nonpartisan League. No impartial student of this movement, however, will dispute the fact that it brought great and lasting benefits to the people of North Dakota.

THE MINNESOTA MOVEMENT

In Minnesota the militant farmers, organized in the Nonpartisan League, joined hands politically with militant city labor, organized in the Working People's Nonpartisan Political League, forming the basis for the Farmer-Labor Party. At first the strategy was to capture the Republican Party, at that time the dominant political party of the State. Although the name "Farmer-Labor" first appeared on a Minnesota ballot in 1918, and in all subsequent elections, winning a signal success in the contest for the United States Senate in 1922, it was not until 1924 that they decided to disband the Nonpartisan League and the Working People's Nonpartisan Political League and to form a full-fledged political party.

This political movement of labor and farmer, which welcomed into its fold the independent business and professional people, entered the scene during the fitful days of the first World War. The party was opposed to America's entrance into that war; it opposed sending the flower of American youth to die on foreign battlefields for a cause that was not its own. That made it possible, once war was declared, for professional patrioteers to organize a merciless attack against its leaders. These superpatriots saw, in this period of war hysteria, a chance to overthrow a young, virile political movement that threatened to storm the citadel of entrenched wealth.

WITCH-HUNTING DAYS

It took courage to be Farmer-Labor in those days. Mob fury was whipped up against them. Tar and feathers, nearlynchings, physical assaults, and many other forms of mob violence were the order of the day. Houses of Farmer-Labor leaders were painted yellow, and they were held up to public scorn and opprobrium. Goaded on by the notorious Minnesota Public Safety Commission, even the university board of regents engaged in vicious witch-hunting by discharging the head of the department of political science, a national authority in his field and one of the most beloved professors at the university, on a flimsy charge of pro-Germanism which had all the earmarks of having been trumped up. There was not even a semblance of a fair hearing. I am glad to say that the university regents, under a Farmer-Labor administration, have since removed this stain from the university's record by exonerating this professor and conferring upon him the title of professor emeritus.

OLSON ENTERS THE ARENA

In that era of witch hunting, a young and at that time unheard-of Minneapolis lawyer, Floyd B. Olson, went into the Hennepin County District Court to make a name for himself by defending James A. Peterson, a Minneapolis attorney, who was indicted for daring to oppose this country's entrance into the World War. This young lawyer was later to become the State's and the Nation's first Farmer-Labor Governor and a most outstanding champion of the underprivileged. The persecution of Peterson set off a spark in Olson that only death extinguished.

Following the war, growth of the Farmer-Labor Party was stimulated by the double-barreled campaign of the reactionaries to destroy labor unions and make the farmer the first victim of a heartless deflation.

The history of the progressive movements of the Northwest records a host of names of illustrious pioneers, now dead. In addition to Donnelly, Halvorson, and Lind, there are Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr., Sidney W. Owen, Dave Evans, Magnus Johnson, John A. Johnson, James Manahan, W. J. Carss, Knud Wefald, O. J. Kvale, George Loftus, Dr. L. A. Fritchie, Thomas Van Lear, Fred E. Tillquist, A. C. Welch, Thomas Meighan, Fred Pike, Andrew Devold, and many others.

BEGINS POLITICAL CAREER

Floyd Olson—humanitarian, man of peace, man of action, realist and dreamer, practical politician and idealist—started his political career as a member of the Democratic Party. In 1920, at the age of 29, while he was assistant Hennepin County attorney, he made the race as a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket from the Fifth Minnesota Congressional District.

At that time this was one of the Republican strongholds of the State, and his defeat from the outset was regarded as a foregone conclusion. This district is still conservative, though moving toward the liberal column.

Olson entered that campaign because he had a message for the people. This he delivered fearlessly. In that sense he achieved the victory he sought, because, sterling orator that he was, he got an audience, and people listened to him.

JOINS FARMER-LABOR PARTY

It did not take long for the leaders and the rank and file of the vigorous, fast-growing political movement of labor, the farmers, and the independent business and professional groups to discover that this young, raw-boned, confident, fighting giant, at whose eloquence people marveled, was of their own flesh and blood; that his ideology was their ideology; that he was fighting the same forces that they were fighting—that he and they were crusading in a common battle, with identical objectives. And it did not take long for this product of Minneapolis' melting pot to discover in this liberal movement the outlet for his own social and economic philosophy.

A movement with a genuine mission is always certain to find a dynamic leader, a personality with the necessary courage, fighting zeal, ability, and resourcefulness to take its message to the people. In Floyd Olson the Farmer-Labor Party found that leadership.

In 1924 Olson was nominated on the Farmer-Labor ticket for Governor. That was the year that "Fighting Bob" La Follette of Wisconsin, at the behest of the liberal forces of the Nation, made his bid for the presidency of the United States on an independent ticket. He campaigned the State for the national independents and for the Farmer-Labor Party, and himself came within 40,000 votes of being elected Governor. This amazing run stunned the Republican machine. In 1930 he was elected Governor by an overwhelming vote, and reelected in 1932 and 1934 by staggering majorities.

OLSON'S PHILOSOPHY

The crusading spirit of the Farmer-Labor Party appealed to him. Frequently, in addressing Farmer-Labor meetings or conventions, he called attention to that crusading spirit and the need for preserving it. As long as a political movement retains its crusading characteristic its ship will never be wrecked on the shoals of opportunism.

What were some of the things that Floyd Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party advocated? What was his philosophy of life, his philosophy of government—the Farmer-Labor philosophy of life and of government?

He and his party advocated stimulating business and restoring prosperity by aiding those at the bottom of the economic ladder rather than those at the top; developing a high standard of living through compulsory payment of living wages for the worker and placing agriculture on a parity with industry by Government guarantee of cost of production and a fair profit; removing the unfair advantages which the fast-expanding chains and monopolies enjoy in competition with independent business; equalizing educational opportunities; payment of decent professional salaries to school teachers and strengthening teachers' tenure; aiding growth of both consumer and producer cooperatives; Government ownership and operation of public utilities in the interest of the people; taxes based upon ability to pay; opening the door of opportunity to our young people; providing security for the aged, and the physically handicapped; maternity, health, accident, and other forms of social insurance; social security for all members of society.

Olson advocated an economy of abundance rather than an economy of scarcity. The latter he held to a be a confession of fatal error in our economic system. He opposed payment of benefits to farmers to produce less foodstuffs; he favored rather payment of benefits to farmers to produce more foodstuffs and to distribute this food to the hungry men, women, and children of this country.

WANT IN MIDST OF PLENTY

Suffering and want in the midst of plenty presented a challenge to the Nation's economists—and still does. Olson clearly saw the unjustified and unwarranted contradiction. Said he:

> We find granaries bursting and thousands starving; cotton piled high in warehouses, millions insufficiently clad, and prices so low as to be the despair of the planter; banks bulging with money, and widespread poverty; machinery equipment standing idle with multitudes in need of the things the machine could produce; mountains of coal and people freezing; ablebodied men and women, eager to work, forced to take the necessities of life for themselves and their children from charity.

He insisted that the industrial practices of the past were responsible for the deplorable conditions of today, and maintained that a system motivated by the element of "blind and selfish profit" must inevitably result in concentration of wealth on the one hand and concentration of poverty on the other. He read into the record of bankruptcies, business failures, and mortgage foreclosures the gradual elimination of the middle class.

> Had a foreign foe, he once said, invaded our shores, taken the savings away from millions of small bank depositors, driven hundreds of thousands of small farmers off their farms, seized furniture and chattels of millions of families, all the manpower of the Nation would be thrown into a titanic struggle to expel the invader. But our foe has come from within. And as the people of old ran to their Government beseeching protection from the raiding horsemen of the foreign foe, so today people are asking Government aid from the perils here at home.

DUTIES OF GOVERNMENT

While Floyd Olson was a severe critic of the present economic order, his criticism was constructive in nature. He did not want to destroy anything that is good; he wanted to destroy only that which is evil. He wanted to build the house on a solid foundation. But he did not believe in glossing over faults; he did not hesitate to call attention to the pitfalls. He was convinced that unless we saw the picture clearly, faced the issues courageously, and possessed the intelligence to do something about it, there some day would come a sad awakening.

The chief fault, in his opinion, lay in our inability to distribute equitably the tremendous wealth which we are able to produce—that we were suffering not from overproduction but rather from underconsumption due to insufficient mass purchasing power. Economists are becoming more and more convinced that only a great increase in mass purchasing power, bringing about a higher standard of living, can bring permanent prosperous conditions and solve unemployment.

The remedy, Olson insisted, must come from governmental action. He had no confidence that industry, if left to itself, would or could do the job. He maintained that it was the duty of government to restrain the strong and defend the weak, and said that—

A nation cannot be preserved which does not preserve its citizens. Industry is retrenching—reducing wages, lowering the standard of living, destroying buying power, and throwing more and more men and women on the streets to shift for themselves. Just how that is going to solve our economic problems is beyond understanding.

To the allegation that Government effort to bring about better economic conditions would be destructive of individual liberty, he once replied:

Whose liberty? Liberty for what purpose? Liberty of the Citizens' Alliance to arm thugs to shoot defenseless strikers in the back? Liberty of promoters of spurious stocks to fleece widows and orphans? Liberty of millionaires to escape taxation? Liberty to make slaves of workers and serfs of farmers? These are the individual liberties that these people mean.

OLSON'S YOUTH

Floyd Bjornsterne Olson was the offspring of immigrant parents—a Norwegian lumberjack, Paul A. Olson, who came to America from now war-torn Trondheim, and a Swedish servant girl whose birthplace was in Varmland, Sweden. They were married in Minneapolis and their only child was born to them on November 13, 1891.

Mrs. Olson selected Floyd as the first name for their son because she wanted to give him an American name and Floyd sounded nice to her. Bjornsterne was the father's choice for the second name in memory of the Norwegian poet, Bjornsterne Bjornson, whom he revered. But none of Floyd's friends ever knew that his second name was Bjornsterne, and he never took the pains to tell them. Matter of fact, his second name appears in his high-school records as William, a much "safer" name.

It was a modest, humble home in which Floyd Olson first saw the light of day—a poor workingman's home in a poor workingman's neighborhood, but a neat and refined home. The houses in the district have since been cleared away for a slum-clearance project, but friends of Olson's saw to it that the house in which he was born is preserved for posterity. It is now an attraction in one of the North Minneapolis parks.

But Floyd Olson's boyhood neighborhood was not depressive despite its unmistakable evidences of poverty. It was not a slum district in those days as we generally understand the meaning of that term. There were plenty of wide, open spaces for the boys to play in. The youngsters were a rough and ready sort, in whose company a mollycoddle was just out of luck—and there was nothing of the mollycoddle about Floyd. The boys were filled with the zest of life. They engaged in normal pastimes, played baseball, football, did ice skating, went fishing; they formed their gangs; fought—sometimes for the sheer fun of it; and sometimes played "hookey" from school.

HUMBLE BEGINNINGS

Floyd was pretty much like the rest of them. He liked his play, especially when the play was hard. He was particularly good at baseball, running, and skating; delighted in playing pranks; and always went along with the rest of them on their escapades.

He was a normal boy, but he had one distinct advantage over the rest of his playmates—his mental keenness made it easy for him to get his school work done in jig time. He thus seldom came to school with lessons unprepared, no matter how long he played. He liked to read, his tastes running to such works as Dumas' The Count of Monte Cristo, Victor Hugo's Les Miserables, and detective and Wild West stories. Even as Governor he was able to relax by reading good detective stories. Much of his spare time he devoted to memorizing and reciting passages, which varied from Casey at the Bat to Hamlet's soliloquy, To Be or Not To Be. These recitations greatly delighted his cronies, and they showed him off on occasions.

Most of the children in the neighborhood had to supplement their parents' meager incomes in various ways. Floyd sold newspapers. During the summer fishing season he picked up a few pennies by catching frogs and selling them for bait. He was fond of animal pets and went in for raising rabbits and pigeons not for financial reasons but rather as a hobby. That explains why he once kept a large delegation at the Capitol waiting for more than an hour because he took to a veterinarian "for repairs" an injured bird he observed fluttering alongside the roadway.

"THEY CAN'T TELL ME THAT'S RIGHT"—FLOYD

It was an impressionistic neighborhood in which Floyd Olson was reared. In a sense, it symbolized the very essence of Americanism—everything that America stands for. It was a neighborhood of mixed nationalities—of people who had come to this country to find not a life of ease, but rather reward for honest toil, opportunity for themselves and for their children, a chance in life. There were blond Vikings from the northland, deep-throated Germans, Irish, French, English, Welsh, Scotch, Jews, Slavs—in fact, all the races that form America's great melting pot which makes this country different from and more hopeful than any other land on earth.

On the outskirts of the neighborhood were many beautiful homes, and Floyd, even in his early days as a youngster, set to wondering why it was that some people could afford to live in those pretentious houses while other people, who worked infinitely harder, had to live in simple and even dilapidated houses; why the wives of the rich could employ servants to do their work while the equally good wives of the poor workers had to do scrubbing and mending and cleaning all day long which sapped from them all their energies. "They can't tell me that's right," he would remark. And he disliked the school teacher who preached a Pollyanna philosophy that "God's in His heaven, all's well with the world."

During his high-school years, when he achieved fame as a debater, those thoughts more and more impressed themselves upon his mind, and he was more intent on finding the answer. He discussed these matters with some of his teachers, who tried "to put his thinking straight." In reality it was he that was trying to put their thinking straight.

ANCHORED WITH THE POOR

More adventure was packed into the life of Floyd Olson from the time that he graduated from North High School in Minneapolis in 1909 to the time that he received his law diploma from the Northwestern College of Law in Minneapolis in 1915, from which he graduated as the valedictorian of his class, than is contained in the entire life of the average person. He went in for manual labor; became a freight handler in Minneapolis railroad yards; took to the harvest fields of Minnesota and the Dakotas; tried his hand as a house-to-house book salesman; did lumberjacking; worked as a scowman on the Fraser River in Canada; took a fling at gold mining in the Canadian Rockies; and attended the University of Minnesota College of Law for a year before entering the Northwestern College of Law.

American history is replete with tales of poor boys who "made good," and surely Floyd B. Olson, of humble beginnings and of humble origin, must be placed in that class. But that does not tell the real story—it does not give an accurate picture of the life and significance of this remarkable man. He never said "good-bye" to the world of poverty in which he was reared; he never pulled up his anchor from that world; he never left it behind him as so many others do. In that world he maintained his friends, his sentiments, his attachments; he always remained part and parcel of it. And he went through life with a burning mission to do something to help ease the life of all people who suffered, socially and economically, as did the working people in the district in which he grew up.

A REMARKABLE MAN

It is often asked how far Olson would have gone up the ladder of national fame had fate decreed for him a longer span of life. There is no telling. Possessing in abundance the sterling qualities of leadership that put men on top—vision, courage, capacity, a magnetic personality, the art of inspiring others—it is almost certain that the liberals of America would have selected him to head a new national political movement.

He possessed not only unusual charm and eloquence as a speaker but unusually marked ability in many directions. He was a man of almost unbelievable versatility and of great intellectual stature. Had he chosen the stage as a career, he unquestionably would have reached the foremost ranks of that profession. When he played the leading role in his senior high-school class play his teachers were so amazed at the display of histrionic talent by this youngster that they urged him to continue along that path. Had he chosen journalism as a profession he also would have excelled, since he wrote with an ease, a facility, a penetration, and a grasp of subject matter that was at once a source of envy and admiration of newspapermen and writers who knew him.

Hundreds of practicing lawyers in the Northwest today still remember Floyd Olson as their teacher at the Minnesota College of Law. He had the faculty of imparting knowledge to others with a lucidity that made the most intricate problem appear relatively simple; no other teachers at the law school could approach him in that respect. His classes were always crowded.

OLSON AS A LAWYER

As prosecuting attorney, Minnesota never saw the equal of Olson. His ready wit, his ability to anticipate every strategem of the opposition made him the scourge of criminal lawyers when he was Hennepin County attorney; he excelled them at their own game; he beat them to every punch, so to speak. Personally, these lawyers loved and admired him because he never violated his word; never took an unfair advantage; always kept their confidences. However, they dreaded the very sight of Floyd Olson taking the opposite seat in the courtroom.

But, as he excelled as prosecuting attorney, so was he equally effective in arguing a case at law before the court. Federal judges in Minneapolis will tell you that they never heard a more masterful presentation of State's rights than when Olson appeared personally before them to defend his action in calling out the National Guard and proclaiming martial law during the now famous truck drivers' strike when the antilabor forces sought to restrain him by Federal injunction action. The courts, you can be sure, did not seek to give the Farmer-Labor governor the best of it, but they nonetheless sustained his legal contentions.

The corporations of Minnesota were quick to recognize Olson's legal talents—and it is no secret that he was the the recipient of very flattering offers for his services if he should desire to give up his public career to enter private law practice. Fortunately for the common people of Minnesota—and the common people of America—he thought in terms of public service, not in terms of becoming a rich man.

As an orator, Olson had few who approached him—none who excelled him. At no time did he ever become boresome to his audience, no matter how late the hour nor how long the speech; no audience ever walked out on him. Now serious, now talking in a light vein, now accusing, now "calling the roll," as he called it, he was always able to keep the interest of his audience at a high pitch until he concluded.

HENNEPIN COUNTY ATTORNEY

The first public office held by Floyd Olson was that of assistant Hennepin County attorney, to which office he was appointed in 1919. This is the largest county in the State, in which is situated the city of Minneapolis. The board of county commissioners the following year named him county attorney when the chief was removed from office. He thus became the youngest man ever to hold that important office.

So excellent a record did Olson make as prosecutor that he was elected to that office in 1922 and reelected in 1926 by the biggest majorities that county had ever given a candidate for public office.

Two series of investigations, followed by successful prosecutions, which Olson conducted as county attorney, won for him national attention. The first was in 1925, when he went before a county grand jury and obtained indictments against several leaders of the Ku Klux Klan. These Klansmen were tried, convicted, and sent to prison—the first successful prosecution of the Klan in the entire country.

The young county attorney in 1926 again displayed his mettle when he conducted an inquiry into municipal graft and corruption in Minneapolis, and sent several members of the city council to the penitentiary for accepting bribes. Before entering upon this investigation he was warned that he could go through with it only with the most dire consequences to himself. These threats, instead of deterring him, merely made him more determined.

"JUSTICE"—HIS RECORD

Olson was different from other prosecutors in that he never enjoyed the smell of blood in "getting" his victim; he did not glory in having another successful prosecution chalked up to his record. He did not regard the record in itself as of primary importance. The only thing that counted was to what extent he had furthered the ends of justice. The role of prosecutor never hardened him; rather it gave him a keener insight into the frailties of man.

An implacable foe of the professional criminal, he differentiated between the criminally inclined and those led into the ways of crime through adverse economic circumstances. While his record of convictions obtained was one of the best in the country, he likewise appeared more often in court to plead leniency for defendants whom he thought would become useful members of society if extended a helping hand. Proportionately more first offenders received probation in Minneapolis and Hennepin County as the result of intercession by Olson with the court than in any other large city or county in the United States. The social correctness of Olson's position is supported by the fact that most of the first offenders for whom he obtained probation made good instead of becoming hardened criminals, which so often happens when they are sent to prison.

A case which serves as an excellent portrayal of Olson, the humanitarian, and his fearless social outlook was when a young man pleaded guilty to a charge of embezzlement of funds from his employer, one of the giant corporations of the Northwest. This young man, married, handled thousands of dollars of the bank's funds daily. He was compelled to maintain a social front in accordance with the "respectable" position that he held—and he had to do this on a monthly salary of less than $100. He succumbed to temptation.

Olson asked the court to extend probation to the defendant, and during the course of his plea for the young man he declared that the bank for which he worked was equally, if not more so, guilty of the crime. In the eyes of the court this was tantamount to committing lese majesty—an insolent slur against the very pillar of the city's financial respectability.

EXPOSES CITIZENS ALLIANCE PLOT

Another incident, still vividly recalled by newspaper reporters who covered the courthouse run in Minneapolis in those days, occurred during a labor strike in North Minneapolis.

The strike was in connection with an electrical job in a schoolhouse. There had been an explosion, apparently caused by dynamite, which had all the earmarks of sabotage. The damage was very slight—intentionally slight, as proved to be the case.

The same night, following the explosion, a drunken union man had been arrested in the vicinity by the police, who found several sticks of dynamite on his person. Obviously here was conclusive proof that the union was behind this dastardly dynamite plot.

The newsmen had gathered early the next morning at the county attorney's office for a statement, but the statement was not immediately forthcoming. This man, destined to become a prominent leader, was conducting an independent investigation of the case; he had refused to accept as conclusive the confession that the police had extracted from the prisoner. While the newspaper reporters were "cooling their heels" outside his office, Olson himself was examining this man.

When he was ready with his statement to the press it did not make the kind of a story for which the editors of the dailies were holding their presses. It was not the kind of a story for which the banner headlines held in readiness could be used.

Olson told the reporters that his investigation disclosed the fact that the prisoner the previous night had been in company of certain persons who got him intoxicated, that these persons purchased the dynamite and "planted" it on his person, and that a check as to the identity of these individuals further disclosed that they were stool pigeons in the employ of the Minneapolis Citizens Alliance, a notorious organization of the city's open-shop employers.

If there is to be a prosecution in this case—it will not be of the prisoner but rather of the president of the Citizens Alliance. I charge specifically that this was a plot hatched by paid agents in his employ for the purpose of discrediting the union.

He told the reporters—

It was then that Olson first incurred the enmity of the Minneapolis Citizens Alliance—an enmity, be it said to his everlasting credit, that followed him to his very grave. Without question the Minneapolis Citizens Alliance was one of the most vicious antilabor organizations in the entire country, setting a national pattern for anti-labor practices.

OLSON ACCOMPLISHMENTS

In considering the accomplishments of the Olson administrations it is well to bear in mind that in not a single instance did he have the support of a liberal legislature. This fact makes these accomplishments the more remarkable.

Time after time, in order to compel legislative action on vital social measures, such as passage of relief bills, it was necessary for him to go before the people. This very often was productive of good results; it had a salutary effect upon the conservative members; they feared public opinion, and Olson was a master in marshaling public opinion to his aid.

This lack of legislative support was one of Floyd Olson's greatest disappointments in public office. Said he in his last address before a Farmer-Labor convention:

I look back at my three terms as Governor with one great regret. I did not have, on any occasion, a majority of the members of the legislature who agreed with the principles of this (Farmer-Labor) movement. To have had that, I say from my very heart—to have had that in any one session—would have been sufficient gratification so that I would have been willing thereafter to retire from public life.

The election of a liberal Governor and a conservative legislature is one of the anomalies of American political life.

His accomplishments, nevertheless, stand out as one of the most significant progressive achievements of modern-day America.

NATIONAL GUARD CALLED TO PROTECT LABOR

The workers and the farmers of Minnesota—the two large groups whose labor produces most of our social wealth—as well as the independent business and professional groups, know what it means to them to have political action of their own.

While old party politicians, even those claiming to be friends of labor, render lip service to the cause of the workers by talking of "the rights of labor," "the dignity of labor," and utter similarly flattering phrases, it remained for a Farmer-Labor Governor, Floyd B. Olson, to be the first State executive in America to call out the State militia during a labor strike for the purpose of protecting the civil rights of the workers and the public in general. He did not call out the troops against the strikers. Olson showed how a people's Governor acts in a crisis when he called out the National Guard during the now famous 1934 truck drivers' strike in Minneapolis.

I've covered a lot of strikes and I've seen a lot of National Guards in action—

Said the late Paul Y. Anderson, nationally known Washington correspondent and winner of the Pulitzer prize for reporting, when he came to Minneapolis to cover the strike for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch—but this is the first time I have ever seen the National Guard being used to help the laboring man instead of shooting him down. In fact, it is so unusual that my paper thought it worth while to send me over a thousand miles to cover it. There are 47 Governors in 47 other States, and you can bet that they are watching this with a great deal of interest.

In this strike so-called employers' advisory committee, at the behest of the Minneapolis Citizens Alliance, declined to accept Governor Olson's proposed terms for settlement of the strike—terms extremely fair to both sides. Two things prompted the Citizens Alliance to reject Olson's proposals—they saw in the strike a golden opportunity to crush organized labor; they also refused because they feared that acceptance would add to the political prestige of the Farmer-Labor administration. The latter argument was definitely advanced when the committee met in executive session to discuss the proposal, several members of the committee later divulged.

Although the employers in the so-called market group voted 19 to 3 for settlement of their differences with their workers, they were restrained from doing so by the Citizens Alliance.

POLICE PROVOKE "INCIDENT"

The troops were called out by Governor Olson after an "incident" deliberately provoked by the Minneapolis police, at that time under the thumb of the Citizens Alliance. This occurred in the market district of the city, where a truck containing a handful of merchandise was moved under police convoy. The fact that the truck was going to be moved, as well as the exact time of moving, was advertised in advance by a news item in all Minneapolis papers.

The "incident" was carefully planned and ruthlessly executed. As soon as strikers got in the path of the truck to prevent its being moved, police opened fire. The workers, in panic, fled, but the police pursued them relentlessly, shooting some down as far as 4 or 5 blocks from the scene of disturbance. More than 50 workers were shot; some were killed. An investigation immediately conducted by Governor Olson produced the startling fact that virtually every one of the wounded and killed strikers was shot in the back. It was a cold-blooded assault upon unarmed men. Not a single striker was found to have carried firearms.

The police—and by police I do not mean the rank and file—were prepared to mop up on the workers at whatever price it entailed in human blood and win the strike for the Citizens Alliance. But they failed to reckon with the fact that Minnesota had a Farmer-Labor Governor. It did not, however, take them very long to find that out—and neither did it take the workers long to find out that they had in Olson a Governor different from any other Governor of any other State.

RAIDS CITIZENS ALLIANCE

Governor Olson was in possession of information of the part being played by the Citizens Alliance to prevent a settlement of the strike. He knew that employers who wanted to settle with their workers were being intimidated, and threatened with financial ruination if they did not follow the line laid down for them. To fix responsibility he ordered the National Guard to conduct a raid of the Citizens Alliance headquarters.

Although it is known that a tip-off was received by the Alliance enabling them to remove a truckload of telltale evidence, sufficient documents were seized to establish responsibility for the strike. The documents disclosed not only the part that the small, controlling group within the Alliance had been playing in the current strike, but also revealed that the Alliance maintained an elaborate spy system within the labor unions; employed agents provocateur to stir up labor strife; and cooperated with other antilabor forces in various sections of the country in carrying on antilabor espionage, strikebreaking, and similar activities. It likewise showed that the Alliance maintained a powerful lobby at the statehouse for the purpose of defeating all labor and liberal legislation.

Governor Olson exposed the activities of the Citizens Alliance in a radio address to the citizens of Minneapolis, who were shocked by the revelations of the intrigue carried on by a group which did not represent the sentiments of the great majority of employers of the city. In such disrepute was the Alliance placed that it later felt it necessary to change its name. The Minneapolis Citizens Alliance no longer exists as such.

Federal mediators were called in to help settle the strike. After a bitter, needless struggle the terms finally accepted by both sides were substantially the same as the terms originally proposed by Olson as a fair basis of settlement. Several lives would have been spared, bloodshed averted, and millions of dollars saved had Olson's sage advice been accepted from the beginning.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABOVE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Olson regarded the preservation of human life as more important than the preservation of property. When the strikers at the Hormel plant in Austin, Minn., in 1933 seized the company property Olson, instead of calling out the National Guard to expel the workers by force, for which certain antilabor elements clamored, went there in person.

I am dealing with intelligent people on both sides, and I am satisfied that they will listen to reason—

He said. Both sides did listen to his intelligent appeal, and submitted their case for determination to the State industrial commission. The Hormel plant today enjoys a national reputation for its enlightened labor-relations policy.

In the case of two other labor strikes in Minneapolis—the Flour City Ornamental Iron Works and the Strutwear Knitting Co.—Governor Olson took drastic steps to close down the plants in order to prevent riot and bloodshed. In the Flour City strike two innocent bystanders were killed when the police broke up a group picketing the factory.

Not only did the Governor close the factory—

Commented the Pope County Tribune editorially—

but he had the real leaders in labor get together with the industrial leaders and iron out their differences. The result is that the factory is now operating and the differences have been adjusted.

Other newspapers in the State were not so fair to the Governor.

LABOR'S RIGHT TO ORGANIZE

Replying to the strictures of the Federal court for his closing of the Strutwear Knitting Co. plant, Governor Olson said it was "an impressive enunciation of the constitutional sacredness of property rights." But significantly added that the court might have included "a hint to the plaintiffs—the Strutwear Co.—respecting arbitration."

Olson believed not only in the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively but in the need of labor organization as an instrument for developing a higher standard of living for the people.

The unorganized worker—

Said he in his 1932 campaign keynote address—

owes a debt of gratitude to his organized brother. If his living standard has not been beaten down to the level of the Russian peasant of the Czarist days, it is due to the demands the organized worker has been able to enforce. The former has benefited from the struggles and sacrifices of the latter.

In another address he declared:

The rights which labor has won labor must fight to protect. The rights which humanity hopes to acquire, that of social security, has not as yet been won, and labor must fight to win it. The only means through which labor can win its own battle and its fight for the entire human race is through organization.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Governor Olson waged one of the first fights in this country for compulsory unemployment insurance.

In 1931, several years before the idea was advanced and enacted into law by the New Deal, he pleaded with a reactionary legislature to pass an unemployment insurance law. "Charity and doles," he told the legislature, "should not have to be depended on to protect the working people and to preserve buying power." The Governor's recommendations were not carried out.

Again, in a special message to the Minnesota Legislature on February 25, 1933, Olson, renewing the fight, recommended a program for compulsory unemployment insurance, and said:

If industry had taken care of this in the so-called prosperity years, we would not have this situation. The numbers of unemployed are increasing. It ill behooves industry to come forward and say that we should not do this. It now remains for the State to do what industry failed to do. This program is for the purpose of protecting the welfare of the people, not for the purpose of protecting profits.

Reaction also won the second round of this fight, and the program was turned down. Victory, however, finally rested on the banner of this mighty social pioneer. During his last term of office, already stricken by a dread disease, word came to him that Congress had passed the Social Security Act, with its provision for unemployment insurance under "Grants to States for unemployment compensation administration." Great credit should be given to Governor Olson and to the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota for helping to lay the groundwork for this law.

ADDITIONAL BENEFITS TO LABOR

Clearly foreseeing the need for a public works program to provide employment and to stimulate industry, Floyd Olson in 1931 succeeded in putting such a program through the legislature. This program consisted of construction of a new State office building, extensive work on State institutions which had been permitted to lapse into a state of disrepair as the result of a false policy of economy under a previous administration, and similar public works projects, thus giving employment to thousands of needy persons. This also was long before the Federal Government embarked upon a public works program to relieve unemployment.

When it was found necessary to reduce State expenditures Governor Olson vigorously opposed the conservative program to slash wages and salaries of State employees. He stated that he was not opposed to reduction of salaries of State officers and employees in the high-salaried brackets, but would not agree to salary reduction of those in the low-salaried brackets. He pointed out that, "when salaries are cut it is a long, tedious, and sometimes bitter process before they are restored to their proper level, even though economic conditions have righted themselves." Prevailing standards of pay for the rank-and-file employees were always maintained.

ANTI-INJUNCTION LAW

Although the State legislature declined to enact legislation recommended by the Governor—that wages paid on public works carried on either directly or indirectly by the State or by contract with the State "must be equal to the highest prevailing scale of wages paid for the particular kind of work performed"—Olson, nevertheless, directed the commisisoner of highways to formulate a contract code carrying out that principle.

Of great benefit to labor was an anti-injunction law passed by the legislature at the insistence of Governor Olson, patterned after the Norris-LaGuardia Federal injunction law. The workmen's compensation law was strengthened during Olson's administration and great advances made in plant inspection and installation of safety devices to protect workers.

Only a small percentage of the labor and social laws recommended by Governor Olson were adopted by the Minnesota Legislatures; but even in the legislation which failed passage the battle was not lost. In the social and economic struggle a good battle waged which does not reach its goal is not a battle lost; the ground is merely prepared for future successes.

BENEFITS TO FARMERS

Governor Olson, in 1933, did something for the farmers and the home owners not only of Minnesota but of the entire United States, which stands out as one of the most significant progressive achievements of recent years.

On February 4 of that year he issued a proclamation which marked a milestone in the great struggle for economic justice. If you will recall, that was a time when hundreds of thousands of people—in the cities and on the farms—were losing their homes acquired through a lifetime of savings through mortgage foreclosures because of inability to meet interest and principal payments. The economic factors which contrived to bring about that sad state of affairs were beyond the control of their victims; the depression was none of their making.

Go back with me to the dark days of 1931–32 and the early part of 1933. We see thousands of banks collapsing, millions of unemployed and hungry, thousands of families being driven from their homes, while the sound of the sheriff's hammer and the auctioneer's voice rose loud in the land—Bid! Bid! What will you bid for this old homestead?

People have suffered and died for this home. They fought the Indians, the plagues of nature, and the inhumanity of man for this little plot of land. They loved, they suffered, they bled, they died for this little home. But bid. Bid! Bid! Bid for a mother's heartache and a child's tear. Bid for a father's sullen anger and a youth's wild despair. Hoover says we must pay our debts in gold or grass will grow on the streets. The banks of Wall Street want a stable currency even if it unstabilizes the whole Nation. Bid, bid, bid for a vanished dream and a home that should have been a haven and a refuge.

While other Governors of equally sovereign States did nothing to ameliorate the sufferings beyond expressing sympathy with the plight of the poor wretches, Minnesota's Floyd Olson ordered—

That each and every sheriff and each and every constable and police officer of the State of Minnesota refrain and desist until May 1, 1933, or until further notice, from foreclosing or attempting to foreclose any mortgage upon real estate upon which the mortgagor has his residence, furniture, and household goods used by the householder mortgagor; farm machinery and livestock in use and possessed by a mortgagor actively engaged in farming and agriculture in the hands of the producer thereof.

MORTGAGE MORATORIUM LAW

In the eyes of the great financial interests of the State and of the Nation, Governor Olson's mortgage moratorium proclamation meant nothing short of revolution—an interference with the sacred rights of property. To Floyd Olson and to the people, however, it meant the savings of hundreds of thousands of city homes and farms for their rightful owners.

The proclamation, the legality of which was immediately challenged in the courts, gave to a harrassed people the necessary breathing spell. It brought the flood of mortgage foreclosures in the State to an abrupt stop.

But this was only the first step, a very bold and necessary step that accomplished its purpose. Before his opponents could bring him into court, Olson, marshaling public opinion to his side, presented to the State legislature his now famous mortgage moratorium law. A sullen body of lawmakers, sensing the temper of the people, passed the act, the first of its kind enacted in America.

A long fight in the courts followed, the law finally being held constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. This ushered in an altogether new concept of property rights—the right of the State to protect the property of its citizens during a period of great economic upheaval over which the people have no control. Minnesota, under a Farmer-Labor Governor, showed the country the way. Other States and the nation followed.

PROBLEMS OF FARMER

The Farmer-Labor Party program for the farmer, for which Floyd Olson fought, included Government guarantee to the farmer of cost of production plus a fair profit; scaling down of farm debts incurred during a period of heartless farm deflation; reduction of farm-mortgage interest rates; and reduction of farm taxes.

Government guarantee to the farmer of cost of production plus a fair profit is the keystone of this program, which must be enacted if agriculture is to be taken out of its state of chaos. The Government has protected railroads and other public utilities by fixing rates and charges which guarantee a fair return not only upon invested capital but upon watered stock as well.

They—

Meaning the utilities, said Olson—have secured special legislation because they have a greater voice in government than have the farmers. If I had the power, I would not hesitate to fix prices of farm products commensurate with the cost of production and sound-business practice. No business can exist when it sells its products for less than it costs to produce them. When the farmer receives an inadequate price for his products he cannot purchase the products manufactured by capital through the agency of labor; labor is consequently unemployed, and capital becomes insolvent.

MORTGAGE RELIEF

In 1933 he asked the State legislature to set an example for the rest of the country in its approach to the farm problem by passing legislation enabling the State Rural Credit Bureau, which held millions of dollars in farm-mortgage loans, to adjust farm-mortgage indebtedness—

To enable the mortgagor not only to pay the State the reduced amount of principal, but also to retain his farm.

In effect, this is what Governor Olson told the legislature: The State made loans of $61,000,000 to the farmer. When these loans were made the purchasing power of the dollar was much less than it is today. To ask the farmer to pay back dollar for dollar is in reality asking him to pay back more than he received. Conditions now make it impossible for him to do this. We might as well approach the situation realistically and take our—the State's—losses now, if losses there be. So should every mortgage holder. It is an injustice to force payment of a dollar now for a dollar loaned in 1925. Besides, if we enforce collection we shall merely be taking the farms away from their rightful owners. The entire country will suffer.

The legislature did not pass such an act, but on the Governor's instructions the rural credit bureau did adopt a policy of leniency with respect to mortgage payments and foreclosures, and no farmer who wanted to stay on his land and operate his farm was driven off by the State.

I shall subsequently discuss aid to the farmer under Governor Olson's administration by way of tax relief, under the subject matter of tax reform.

When the Federal Government embarked upon a program of rural electrification, Governor Olson asked the Minnesota Legislature to pass enabling legislation to aid in carrying out this program in Minnesota because, as he said:

It offers the greatest opportunity the State of Minnesota ever had to assist its farm population.

All of Olson's recommendations were not carried out, but sufficient legislation was passed so that Minnesota farmers were able to avail themselves of much of the benefit of the Federal rural electrification program.

More than any other person, Floyd Olson is responsible for the Federal Government's seed and feed loan policy to the farmers, having personally intervened to bring about that program.

On the whole, however, the farmer's problems, being national in scope, must be solved by national rather than by State action. Floyd Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party carried this fight for the farmer to the Halls of Congress, a fight which is still being carried on.

PIONEERED FOR YOUTH

Minnesota's illustrious Floyd pioneered in all phases of social legislation, but in none was his trail more blazing or more worthy than in the field of youth aid. He was the first Governor in America to consider the effects of the depression upon youth and really do something about it.

If I were asked—

Said Governor Olson—

to name the greatest tragedy that has followed in the wake of the depression, I would say that it has been the destructive effect upon the morale of our youth. If I were asked to name the chief victim of the present heartless order I would not hesitate to say "youth."

Let us return for a moment to the early depression days, when families losing their homes could not afford to keep their children in school. Those were the days when thousands of our young men and women, boys and girls, were forced to take to the roads. Many persons undoubtedly have been startled by the conditions described in John Steinbeck's novel, Grapes of Wrath. Many think these conditions are new. They are not. They existed in a much more aggravated form in the early days of the depression. They were described in a book by Thomas Minehan, Boy and Girl Tramps of America. Mr. Minehan at that time was professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota; and in gathering material for his book he left the classroom and went out on the road himself, living with the so-called tramps. The conditions described in this book do not make pleasant reading, but I recommend a perusal of it to those who are not afraid to become acquainted with some naked truths.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

For the purpose of devising a practical program for youth, Governor Olson called a State-wide conference of educators in Minnesota in the spring of 1933. As a result of that conference the so-called Minnesota plan was formulated, "whereby worthy youths could receive aid from State and Federal relief funds for the furtherance of their education."

The plan called for contributions by the State and Federal Governments to provide for the employment of youths attending school. It was immediately placed in operation in Minnesota, and attracted so much favorable attention that in the early part of 1934 Harry Hopkins, then F. E. R. A. Administrator, adopted this form of student work relief.

Governor Olson in person presented the Minnesota plan at a White House conference; and in June 1935, when the President by Executive order established the National Youth Administration, the heart of it was student aid in the form of work relief as proposed by Governor Olson and put into operation in the State of Minnesota.

Floyd looked upon youth as the future hope of the Nation. Said he:

The Nation is crying for young men and women to lead it. Our opponents defend the system which crushes youth; we attack it. We need youth to help make over this sick and palsied structure in which we try to live into a better and finer social order.

EDUCATIONAL STANDARDS

As part of his program for youth, Governor Olson fought not only for preserving educational standards at a time when educational standards throughout the country were being lowered in the interest of economy, but for raising them. His reply to the campaign of the so-called taxpayers' leagues to cut down school expenditures was, "We need more education, not less." He observed that many of the schools in the poorer sections of the State were inferior to schools in the more well-to-do sections; that on the whole, rural schools were inferior to city schools; that rural districts could not afford to pay higher taxes to improve their schools; that higher taxes would drive the families off the land; and that many rural children, particularly those in the high-school grades, could not attend school because of transportation costs.

As a result of his efforts, the amount of State aid to schools was virtually doubled during Governor Olson's administration; a State income tax was passed, and mining company taxes raised, the major share of which went to equalizing education; a series of "school aids for transportation" were put through, providing for free transportation of rural high-school students and transportation of crippled children to school; and a bill was passed providing aid for special schools for crippled children.

Olson also aided education by successfully opposing the cutting of teachers' salaries, by strengthening laws relating to teachers' tenure, and by conducting one of the leading fights in the country for academic freedom in our schools and colleges.

TRUE FUNCTIONS OF EDUCATION

The true function of education—

Wrote the Governor in an article for a local parent-teacher publication—is to show the way to life—to teach us to live. To accomplish this purpose, there must be complete academic freedom, not only for university professors and instructors, but, even more so, for the teachers in our elementary schools. We cannot hide the truth from our children and expect them to grow into manhood and womanhood with clear eyes and with clear brains.

The real teacher must possess a state of mind akin to the scientist—and that state of mind must be imparted to the pupil. That is the laboratory state of mind. It is a state of mind that is open to the truth, no matter where the truth may lead, and ever ready to embrace the truth, once it is definitely identified. All study must be motivated by the quest for truth.

I am not attempting moral generalizations. I am thinking in positive and concrete terms. I mean that when teachers indulge in distortions of the truth because of economic self-interest they defile their classrooms. The products of such classrooms, then, are young folks who enter into life with perverted ideas—young people incapable both of analyzing the weighty problems of today and of finding the remedy for these problems.

Give this country one generation taught to seek the truth, a generation unafraid to follow the truth after it is found, and I am satisfied that economic and social problems which seem so knotty today will become quite simple of solution. Such a generation will teach us to live and obtain for us the full measure of the richness of life.

PENSIONS—NOT CHARITY TO AGED

As Olson sought to give youth greater opportunity, a better chance to find itself, so also did he seek to bring security to the aged. Here, also, he was carrying out the philosophy of the Farmer-Labor Party.

From the very beginning, the Farmer-Labor Party campaigned for adequate old-age pensions. It took the position that the aged were entitled to such pensions not as a matter of charity but as a matter of right—something which society owes to those who devote their lives to contributing to our social wealth, and who, in the sunset of their lives, find themselves in want. A life entirely free from want, a life of ease and comfort, is the least we must assure to the aged. It is to the everlasting disgrace of this rich country that it has not as yet done this.

During his first term of office, the Governor pleaded with the legislature to adopt a State-wide compulsory old-age pension plan, but it was rejected. However, he kept up his fight, and in 1933 a State-wide compulsory old-age pension law was placed upon the statute books.

In the face of conservative pressure to weaken the act, Governor Olson succeeded, in the 1935 legislative session, in putting through features to liberalize it, although not all of his recommendations as to amounts paid, age limits, and length of residence were adopted.

FIGHT FOR ADEQUATE RELIEF

Floyd Olson's humanitarian principles and ideals came to the fore most strikingly when he made his outstanding fight for adequate appropriations for the State's needy during the desperate winter of 1933. That fight focused national attention upon Minnesota.

It was a situation which required drastic measures to meet a drastic situation, and Olson took such drastic measures. A preponderantly conservative State senate, with extreme bitterness and tenacity, opposed Governor Olson's relief program. Addressing a group of relief marchers on the State capitol, the Governor served this warning upon those who were more concerned with saving a few dollars in taxes for the mining companies and the utilities than they were with the fact that people were faced with the problem of not having anything to eat:

I am making a last appeal to the legislature. I want to say to the people of the State of Minnesota that if the legislature—the senate in particular—does not make ample provision for the sufferers in the State who through no fault of their own are in that condition, and if the Federal Government refuses to aid, as it properly may, because of refusal of the State legislature to handle the situation, and the communities become unable to take care of the people, I shall invoke the powers that I hold, and I shall declare martial law.

A lot of people who are now fighting the measure because they happen to possess considerable wealth will be brought in by provost guard and be obliged to give up more money than they would now. As long as I sit in the governor's chair there is not going to be any misery in the State if I can humanly prevent it.

STARTLED THE NATION

Never before had a Governor in the United States proposed martial law during an economic depression in order to see that the hungry were fed. The Tory press in Minnesota and throughout the entire country vigorously denounced Olson. Olson replied in a radio address:

Only a few years ago we engaged in a great World War. The total cost of the war to the United States is estimated to be approximately $44,000,000,000. If this were allotted among the States it would amount to almost a billion dollars for each State. During the war we made no objection to the appropriation of money to insure victory.

We are now engaged in a great war against poverty and distress, in which the fundamentals involved are a hundredfold greater than the issues involved in the World War. For fighting, killing, and destroying life and property there is plenty of money, but for relieving the misery and starvation of our citizens the appropriations are negligible. Are we so miserly and so lacking in an understanding of our obligations to our fellow citizens who are in need that we must refuse the performance of our plain duty?

Olson refused to compromise, and he won a complete victory. The relief bill—which included also relief for drought-stricken farmers—was passed in its entirety. There were no bread lines or soup kitchens in Minnesota that winter. Neither was it necessary for Governor Olson to call out the troops.

In Minnesota the State executive council had power to extend relief to persons suffering only by reason of action of the elements. Floyd Olson secured a change in the law to empower the council to extend relief to persons suffering by reason of economic causes beyond their control. This was an advance step, since in effect it was recognition on the part of the State of an obligation to relieve suffering caused by economic depressions.

DECREASED HOMESTEAD TAXES

Minnesota under Governor Olson assumed national leadership in the campaign for a tax system based upon ability to pay.

In an effort to shift the cost of government from those least able to pay to those best able to pay, Olson obtained passage of an income-tax law, which was a cardinal plank in the Farmer-Labor Party program, for which progressives and liberals of the State had unsuccessfully campaigned for 35 years.

Olson regarded a tax system under which most of the money is raised through a tax upon real property, commonly known as the general property tax, as obsolete, economically unsound, and morally unjust. He said:

With practically every civilized nation on the globe having discarded the system, predatory wealth in America, which sees in the income tax an obstacle to continued concentration of wealth, has been able to retain the general property tax as the basic principle and cornerstone of our tax structure. A government that blindly continues to make those who can least afford to pay bear the brunt of the burden is building a house of glass and laying a foundation in quicksand. Of course, there is no reason why successful incomes should not support the government that makes these incomes possible.

The first homestead tax law in the United States lowering the tax rate on small homes and moderate farms was enacted under Governor Olson. The Farmer-Labor Party had always contended for preferential tax treatment.

In the growth of chains and monopolies Olson saw the greatest threat to the average citizen seeking a career in business. To protect the independent merchant against unfair chain-store competition, he forced the passage—I use the word "forced" advisedly—of a graduated chain-store tax. The Farmer-Labor Party was the only political party in Minnesota which, by deeds rather than by words, did something to protect the independent businessman.

VETOES SALES TAX

Thanks to Floyd Olson, the sales tax—the tax on poverty—never came to Minnesota. Not that there was not a determined effort to bring it there. There was, but it did not succeed.

In 1935 a reactionary legislature passed what was known as an omnibus tax bill, the principal feature of which was a general sales tax. By the device of incorporating the sales-tax feature in the omnibus bill, sales-tax proponents went on the theory that the Governor would be compelled to accept it, since the entire bill had to be either accepted or rejected. But they did not correctly estimate the courage of Floyd Olson. His warnings that he would veto the bill if the sales-tax provision were included went unheeded. But Governor Olson did veto it and the opposition did not even attempt to pass the bill over his veto. They were stunned. Opposition in Minnesota to a sales tax has since frustrated every conservative effort to force such a tax on the people.

The Olson administration also conducted a very vigorous campaign against the wealthy tax dodger, and millions of dollars' worth of carefully concealed wealth which had theretofore escaped taxation was uncovered.

CONSERVATION OF STATE RESOURCES

The story of the dissipation of Minnesota's natural resources constitutes one of the darkest chapters in the history of our State. The magnificent forests of white and Norway pine were turned over to the timber barons for looting; private capitalists, mostly from the East, were given almost carte blanche authority to exploit the State's iron-ore resources, the richest deposit of this valuable mineral in the world; the State's principal power sites were surrendered to the Power Trust.

With Governor Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party in power, there came an end to this era of squander of the natural resources of the State. All conservation activities were coordinated and placed under one head, and a far-reaching, comprehensive policy for conserving and restoring, so far as possible, these natural resources and utilizing them in the interest of all the people was put into effect.

Governor Olson believed, as he stated in his second inaugural message to the legislature, that conservation, "above all, should be concerned with human values," and that "if it fails to do that, then conservation is mere sentiment—a beautiful sentiment but of no social significance."

Achievements in conservation under Governor Olson are too great to be recounted here. I shall cite but a few.

When he took office in 1931 the State did not have even a semblance of a forest policy. Under his administration, a forest policy looking far into the future was put into effect. An aimless policy of forest annihilation was replaced by a policy of selective cutting of timber on State-owned lands, assuring against timber cutting greater than its replacement by Nature; the area of legally established State forests was increased from 35,000 acres to more than 4,000,000 acres, and a reforestation program put into effect. Not a single foot of virgin timber belonging to the State was cut down during the entire 6 years of his administration.

Governor Olson gave the State its first scientific program for park development through creation of a special division of parks within the department of conservation; he gave the State one of the most ambitious programs for water conservation in the country; and he converted the division of game and fish from a political dumping ground to a meritorious service.

LAND-UTILIZATION POLICY

A conservation achievement of Governor Olson which will become more important with the passing of time was his appointment of a land-utilization committee, headed by the late Dr. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota. This committee also included the director of the Lake States Forest Experiment Station, one of the most noted authorities in the country on matters of conservation. The purpose of the committee was to make a study of land use to lay the foundations for a future scientific land-use policy for the State.

The committee undertook a study of this most important subject and submitted a report that undoubtedly will become a blueprint for the ultimate formulation of a land-use policy. When this is done it will prevent recurrence of many of the tragic episodes of the past brought about through haphazard land use and settlement—use of land for purposes not intended by nature. Minnesota knows the meaning of such tragedies, particularly its experience with a land-shark boom, when water was drained away from swamp peat land in the northern part of the State and sold as good farming land—leaving a trail of blasted hopes, broken homes, and bankrupt communities in its wake.

I have cited some of the accomplishments of the Olson administration. I could easily cite many more. I could cite the abolition of the silence system at the State penitentiary and the practice of handcuffing prisoners to their cell doors; general improvement of all State institutions in methods of management as well as physical improvement; humane treatment of the unfortunate wards of the State; passage of legislation granting pensions to the blind and pensions to dependent children; legal regulation of the sale of State timber that broke up the monopoly held by the powerful timber interests.

FARMER-LABOR PROGRAM

The complete Farmer-Labor program was not realized. This could only have been realized with the aid of a State legislature sympathetic to that program. The last legislature under Governor Olson defeated his proposals for maternity, health, and accident insurance; for additional rural electrification enabling legislation to give the farmers the full benefits of the Federal program; for State aid to schools in full; tenure for rural school teachers; further increases in the chain-store tax; amendments to strengthen the mortgage-moratorium law; safety regulation for railway employees; outlawing of loan-shark corporations; the 48-hour week for women; reduction of legal interest rates; making workmen's compensation insurance compulsory; tax delinquency collection on large business properties; prohibition of deficiency judgments on farm and home debt, and other advanced social legislation.

The single great achievement of Floyd B. Olson and the Farmer-Labor Party, however, was that it proved that liberal, democratic government can be made to serve "in the interests of the common happiness of the people."

NATIONAL LEADERSHIP

By the close of 1935 the liberal movement, developing political consciousness in America, began to look to this dynamic figure in the Northwest for national leadership. It also looked to the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party as the springboard for the launching of a political movement of its own.

Governor Olson visioned the formation of a national Farmer-Labor Party. He knew that a political movement confined to State lines could never be an end in itself but only a means to an end, that, in fact, relatively little can be accomplished by a State party to bring about solution of fundamental social and economic problems.

This great Farmer-Labor leader knew also that neither of the old parties could be entrusted with the job of carrying out the liberal program. He knew that, while the liberals in one of the old parties may gain the ascendency, it would be but temporary and that powerful reactionary forces still remaining within the party were certain to hold back and hamper the carrying out of the program. Such has always been the case in the past. Neither of the old parties can be depended upon to support genuine liberal leadership over any sustained period.

THIRD PARTY MUST ARISE

Writing in Common Sense magazine in April 1935, on My Political Creed, Olson said:

A third party must arise. * * * The platform of the third party must be based upon this vital economic issue. It must demand the taking of any and all steps necessary to guarantee human liberties and a decent standard of living. It must have a humane concept based upon the rights of the people to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." It must educate people to a realization that government is but an instrument for the attainment of their inalienable rights.

Liberals in the East, weighing the chances of formation of a national political party, invited Floyd Olson to address them in New York. They wanted to look over the man whom liberals throughout the country were talking so much about. Olson appeared, and in a plea for the need of a national third party over a Nation-wide radio network on November 15, 1935, told the liberals of America:

For the third time in American history, America stands at the crossroads, facing a crisis.

The first time was when we had to decide whether this country was to remain a vassal colony of the Old World or to become a free nation. We had then, and have now, those who warned against the change—some because they were just timid souls and others because the status quo served their own selfish interests.

The second crisis was when we had to make a decision whether this Nation was to remain half slave and half free, or whether we would, theoretically at least, liberate all those in bondage.

So today we are again standing at the crossroads, forced to make a decision even more momentous—one which will test severely our courage and our wisdom.

In a sense, the crisis which we face is a world rather than an American crisis, but we will have to deal with it in an American way. Want in the midst of plenty has no scientific basis for justification. Production and distribution of wealth are social functions.

In the cities and on the farms millions of individuals have been compelled to eke out a mere existence in the obscurity of dark slums and unsanitary farm shacks. From the standpoint of the industrialist these slums were highly desirable; they served to provide large quantities of cheap labor. And when crime and degeneracy worked their way into society, instead of seeking to relieve causes we dealt harshly with the malefactors assuring ourselves, smugly and righteously, that society was being protected. We mistook the symptoms for the disease and bungled the cure.

The Government has poured billions of dollars into the economic stream, but even this vast sum has failed to improve the lot of the common man, although big business has been enjoying handsome profits. In a period of rising commodity prices, money wages have remained either stationary or have decreased. This means that real wages—the standard of living—have been going steadily down even though a considerably larger part of the population is living on a bare subsistence level. This is an inevitable result of an economy of false scarcity. When an economy, presumably of plenty, is so artificially stimulated as to bring about a price rise without creating distribution facilities which will permit satisfying the true demand, the forces of progress and of production are withheld from the masses.

A new system based upon a production to meet need must be set up. Its creation will be ruthlessly opposed. Only Government can set up a new economic system.

We can expect only reaction from one of the old political parties and sincere but ineffectual reform from the other. The only way lies in a third party preaching an economy of abundance and production for use instead of for profit, with an opportunity for work and a decent standard of living.

The road is clear if we but have the courage to venture forth. Why fear to leave the darkness—to go forth into the sun? We are building for the future. Our ranks are thin and we need recruits, but we need no mercenaries. We need men and women of vision, of courage, of idealism, who will join us in the most inspiring crusade that anybody can partake in—the task of making this a country where life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is a reality and not an empty phrase.

ACCLAIMED BY LIBERALS

While the conservatives of the Nation bitterly criticized Governor Olson for this address the liberals acclaimed him. It was obvious to them why Minnesota, under his leadership, had become the spearhead of the entire progressive movement of the country. And as the liberals of Minnesota had placed this champion of human rights and of the underprivileged at the helm of their State movement so were the liberals of America preparing to place him at the helm of a new national political movement.

But, stirring as was Floyd Olson's appeal, the liberals of the East on that occasion did not see the real Olson—the man who fired his audiences with his eloquence, the man who was able to instill, by the force of his magnetic personality, in others the same crusading spirit that he himself possessed. They saw an Olson whose body had already been ravished by a disease for which science has not as yet found an effective cure. His cheeks were hollow, his eyes sunken. There were telltale lines on his features. Little did that group realize that they had gathered to listen to what was in reality a departing message from this great man—a message to carry on without him. But it was a message of hope that he gave them; he painted not the sunset but the sunrise of a new and better day.

PRESERVING SPIRIT

Seldon Rodman, an eastern journalist who had known Olson and had seen him just 2 months previously, did notice that a change had come over him. Wrote Rodman after Olson's death:

He was entering the national political picture for the first time, pleading eloquently for a national Farmer-Labor Party. There were little lines around his eyes that afternoon and he looked older somehow. He spoke effectively in the evening, but without the thunder and lightning that used to bring the most bitten audiences of independent farmers to their feet as a single man.

After the meeting a few of us took him to a late show, trying to cheer him up, he looked so tired. At the table there, or dancing, he was conspicuous. People didn't know who he was but they sensed that he was "somebody." For even then with fatal sickness creeping over him, he radiated a graceful power, a magnetic fellowship that was irresistible. There were no tables when we came in—but the waiter took a look at Floyd and found one. He looked about him slowly, obviously a stranger here, yet at home. And people who saw him that night must have wished, as we were wishing, that they could see him again soon. Unlike us, though they could not have been aware that this was but a breath-taking before an important engagement, a rest after a very minor skirmish, another pause before a battle in which he was bound to play a leading, if not a decisive, role.

And today that battle is nearer than before. The forces are gathering, now deflected by false prophets, now rallied, now reassembling where the rank and file sense the worthiness of the issue and a glorious outcome; still unprepared, now confident, now hesitating, ready.

But Floyd Olson is dead.

FARMER-LABOR CONVENTION SPEECH

It was but a matter of weeks after Olson returned to his home State that he was taken to the Mayo clinic at Rochester for an exploratory operation. It was the beginning of a gallant battle for life which his physicians said they never before had witnessed for its display of courage and consideration for those who attended him.

He was, however, to make two more important addresses before he passed on.

One of Olson's greatest speeches was his last before a Farmer-Labor convention, which met in the St. Paul Auditorium on March 27, 1936. This was on the eve of his intended campaign for the United States Senate.

Only his doctors and a few of his most intimate friends knew of his true condition. He spoke for nearly 2 hours, keeping the audience spellbound all the time, carrying on only by an indomitable will which did not know the meaning of the word "surrender."

CREDITED PARTY FOR ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Olson in that speech spoke of the accomplishments of his 6 years of office as accomplishments of the Farmer-Labor movement, rather than as accomplishments of his administration. He claimed the credit for his party—not for himself. The following paragraph is typical:

I cite you the fact that this movement (the Farmer-Labor movement) sponsored and brought about the passage of the first compulsory old-age pension law; that this movement has always stood upon the principle of taxations based upon ability to pay. I cite you the fact that despite years of struggle in this State to bring about the passage of an income-tax law—it was not until the Farmer-Labor movement gained control of the executive branch of the government and the Farmer-Labor movement enlisted the aid of popular opinion and public sentiment—not until then, despite all those years of struggle—was there an income-tax law in the State of Minnesota.

Floyd Olson opposed giving to the United States Supreme Court power to veto acts passed by the Congress for the social and economic welfare of the people. He had campaigned on that issue with "Fighting" Bob La Follette in 1924.

There is no living being who can place a law affecting social and economic change alongside the Constitution and find any definite statement in the Constitution authorizing or forbidding that law—, he told the convention.

INTERPRETATION OF LAW

The phrase "necessary and proper" means to the reading judge what he thinks it ought to mean in the light of his own viewpoint of life and of social and economic conditions. So with "due process of law." What is "property"? What emphasis should be laid upon the "property" in the Constitution when property rights come into conflict with the rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"? Which is the end to be attained in our Government—life and liberty, or property? Is "property" a means to the end that we may have "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," or is it an end in itself in which "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" must yield? What is a "person"? The Court says it includes corporations, but the Constitution does not so state.

When a judge undertakes to interpret words of general import in the Constitution, can he do other than interpret them in the light of his own convictions and his own experiences? If he be conservative in thought, he will interpret the Constitution from a conservative social and economic viewpoint. If we examine the decisions of the Supreme Court, we find conclusively that it has interpreted legislation, State and National, not only with a conservative viewpoint but with a conservative bias.

These interpretations of law, Olson insisted, in effect constituted lawmaking, a power which he said the courts were usurping. "They read in the Sherman Act," he said by way of illustration, "an interpretation that labor unions engaged collectively in a strike were operating in restraint of trade and in violation of the Sherman antitrust law." Of course, we here in Congress—at least most of us—know that the Sherman Act was never intended to be used against labor unions.

As a remedy Olson advocated not an enlarged Court but rather an amendment to the Constitution to—

Provided that members of the Supreme Court of the United States and its inferior courts shall hold office for a period not to exceed 10 years, and that they shall continue to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

In other words, he wanted to limit their tenure of office to prevent the judiciary from becoming a permanent obstacle in the road of progress.

LAST PUBLIC ADDRESS

Olson's last speech and his last public appearance were on June 28, 1936, at the Swedish Day fete at Minnehaha Falls, "Laughing Waters," immortalized in verse by the famous American poet, Longfellow.

It was on a hot summer's day, and more than a hundred thousand persons turned out at the celebration to do honor to their Viking ancestors and reflect on the many and substantial contributions that they made to the onward march of civilization. With the spectacle of what is transpiring in Europe today, one feels chary about the use of the word "civilization"; but I am confident that this is but a dark chapter in the history of the human race, and that many bright chapters are to follow. Virtually all conflicts, whether they be of nations, of races, or of classes, have their origins in social and economic injustices. When these injustices disappear these struggles also are certain to disappear and we will then have found the solution to the problem of war. That was Floyd Olson's philosophy; and it is today and always has been the philosophy of the Farmer-Labor Party.

Olson came to that meeting of Scandinavian Americans against the advice of his physicians. He was thin, wan, pale, but his eyes still flashed, concealing to some extent his real physical condition.

He spoke for more than 30 minutes. His voice was somewhat weaker than usual, but it still contained much of its fire and its charm. Holding onto the rostrum of an improvised platform because of physical weakness, he yet maintained his superb platform poise. He spoke to an audience representing persons of all shades of social and political opinion, and he kept them spellbound. It was one of his extemporaneous addresses, in which he was always at his best, but the context of which is preserved only in the minds of the men and women who heard him, and in the incomplete excerpts of his speech contained in the newspaper accounts of the celebration.

STATESMAN ELOQUENT

Recalling proudly his own Scandinavian ancestry, he told of the material and spiritual contributions of these sturdy pioneers to the well-being of democratic America, particularly the part they played in shaping and developing the great Northwest, the very cradle of modern-day American democracy.

Then, in a manner characteristic of Floyd B. Olson, his right hand held out and his forefinger pointing, he hurled a challenge at all smug, self-satisfied Americans, a challenge to the American rugged individualists, to look beyond the seas to tiny Scandinavia to learn how a peace-loving, industrious people, possessed of lofty social ideals and an abiding faith in the democratic way of life, have been able to achieve a high standard of living with almost infinitesimal resources when contrasted to the bounties which Nature bestowed upon this country. His plea was for a social order in which man's inhumanity to man would be replaced by man's consideration for man, and in which the supreme goal of society would be the attainment of happiness for all the people, the goal of the founding fathers.

That speech sapped every ounce of strength from his once-powerful frame. He faltered as he left the platform, and started to make his way toward his waiting automobile, in which sat Harry Hopkins, who had come to Minnesota to discuss matters of mutual W. P. A. interest with Olson. But things grew dark before his eyes, and the automobile seemed very, very far off. He would have collapsed had he not motioned to a friend and received assistance. Nobody in the vast audience knew, or even suspected, what had happened, and the fete program went on uninterrupted, as Olson wished. He would not permit his near collapse to mar the celebration.

A GREAT MAN PASSES

Shortly thereafter Floyd Olson was taken to Rochester, where he died on August 22, 1936, at the age of 44 years 9 months and 9 days—an age when most men are just starting out on their careers. He left a widow, Mrs. Ada Olson; a daughter, Patricia; his aged parents, now dead; and the common people of Minnesota and of America to mourn their loss.

Until the very last day Olson, who must have known of the serious nature of his illness, did not give up hope of getting into the coming political fight. The idea of quitting just was not in him. All his life, obstacles were merely things in the way to be overcome. That was part of life. But when all physical resistance had vanished, when he finally saw the image of the Grim Reaper, when he realized that there was one obstacle that could not be overcome, he called to his nurse and said:

This has got me. Don't worry; it must be all for the best.

And so he passed on, a thoroughbred.

TRIBUTE TO A FALLEN LEADER

At his funeral, tens of thousands gathered for the services in the Minneapolis Auditorium—the largest and most impressive funeral which Minnesota had ever given a man in either public or private life. Two hundred thousand people lined the streets and followed the hearse to the grave.

The rich and poor alike gathered—the poor to pay their last tribute to their friend and champion; the rich to pay their respects to a man who played the game hard but fair. A great American had passed on.

Thus fate snatched this leader of the common people as he was about to ascend the threshold to carry on the battle for them on the national scene.

GREATNESS RECOGNIZED

Said the St. Paul Daily News, at no time a supporter of the Olson administration:

Floyd Olson died on the threshold to greater things. A seat in the United States Senate was just a step away. The Presidency of the United States was a possibility.

In the event that he had achieved either, history would have recorded him, we believe, as among the great Americans. The idealistic policies he advanced will be accepted as commonplace in the next 10 years.

The cause of progress and liberalism has received a heavy blow in his death. There are other leaders, perhaps, who saw as he saw. There are advanced thinkers, no doubt, who can carry on from the point where Floyd Olson, because of his tragic death, left off. We know of none, however, who has the Olson combination of brains, humanity, personality, and energy—a combination necessary to the accomplishment of radical and essential changes in a society shown, during the past generation, to be sadly out of gear.

And the Minneapolis Star commented editorially:

Floyd B. Olson, a friend of man, is dead. Minnesotans, without respect to political persuasion, race, or creed, sorrow at the taking away of their brilliant Governor in the midst of a career that held so much promise.

Minnesotans all sorrow at the death of Floyd Olson. But to the man who struggles for a livelihood, the man who works and earns by the sweat of his brow, in shop or on farm, his passing is particularly and deeply poignant.

Possessing those rare qualities that go into the making of a champion of men, Floyd Olson, on a thousand platforms, in countless forums, fought tirelessly for the people as he understood their cause.

The future alone must determine whether the philosophy this man advocated in his pleadings is wise. He did venture far into untried fields of economics in his theories. And in administration he utilized methods that called upon him severest criticism. How much of it was just, it is not the place here to say.

But that the man was ardent in his efforts for equality, there can be no doubt. Appraisal of his theories and methods must await the perspective of years. The man was magnificent even to those who thought him wrong.

EULOGIES OF THE LIBERAL PRESS

Said Common Sense magazine:

If he had been only a prolabor Governor, Floyd Olson would have had neither the support he consistently won nor the place in American history which future progressives will give him. He was far more than that. For Floyd Olson was the first major political figure in our history to recognize the economic problem in its essence and espouse its solution.

The Journal of Electrical Workers and Operators credited Olson with elucidating "a labor philosophy more convincingly than any other man on the platform."

The Minneapolis Labor Review gave expression to the grief that had fallen upon the hundreds of thousands of Floyd Olson's followers in Minnesota when word of his death was received. Said the Labor Review:

The great heart that beat for the oppressed is stopped forever; his smile that shone through all the baseness of slander and abuse radiates no more.

Minnesota bows in sorrow at the grave of its noblest son. Floyd is gone, and among the farmers and city workers there is a lonesomeness and a sadness.

And yet that big hand that seemed always on our shoulders giving us confidence and courage, the kind hand of the courageous Viking, though he is dead we still can feel it. But, too, there is a void so great that all the millions of tears that are being shed will never fill it.

He will not lead us into the cooperative commonwealth, and yet no man ever did more to make the road clear, and to give us the courage to make the march and overcome whatever obstacles may beset.

It was for that Floyd Olson lived. It was for that he died. Shall we contend for less?

A MAN OF THE PEOPLE

How far would Floyd Olson have gone up the national ladder of fame had fate decreed for him a longer span of life? There is no telling. Possessing in abundance those sterling qualities of leadership that put men on top, it is almost certain that the liberals of America would have selected him as the standard bearer of a new liberal political movement.

Olson thought in terms of service to his fellow man. Gold had no lure for him. The powers that be could never purchase his soul; it belonged to the people.

An intimate of Olson's provides the following glimpse of this side of his character:

We were coming home from a political meeting at Duluth a few yeart ago. It had been a great meeting, and the Skipper—

He was known among his close friends and associates as the Skipper—made a particularly inspiring talk. We fell to musing, talking about why so many men, when they reach the position where they can really give the masses more than lip service, sell out. They say that every man has his price, and those who seek to bribe our public officials certainly have whatever is necessary to pay.

"I am not afraid of that"—

Olson commented.

"They can take me to the top of the mountain and show me the Promised Land; they can show me the valleys below with their fabulous stores of hidden riches; but I am certain they will never get me. I haven't sufficient love of money—I do not crave gold."

Anybody who is at all familiar with the recent history of Minnesota and the history of the Farmer-Labor Party knows of the determined efforts that were made to buy Floyd Olson; and they know that when these efforts failed—when those making them discovered that here was a man who had no price—they sought to destroy him by every means at their command, fair or foul. There was no weapon too mean, no tactic too vile for them to employ. But they did not succeed. He was more than a match for them.

PLACE IN HISTORY

Floyd Olson earned for himself an important place in American history. With the passing of years his receding figure will loom larger on the horizon of time, and some day his name will become a symbol in this country of the struggle of the masses for social and economic justice.

Said Wisconsin's Phil La Follette, in his oration at Olson's funeral:

He recognized that for unnumbered centuries the human race lived in a world which could not produce enough food and shelter to provide for the human family. It was an age when progress was advanced by individual explorers constantly in search of new lands, new inventions, and new methods for increasing our material resources. It was a period when the common welfare was promoted by individualistic activity.

Within Governor Olson's generation all of this untold individual effort produced the machine age and mass production.

The human family for the first time in its history lived in a world that could produce more than enough for all. Floyd Olson understood this basic change from an age of scarcity to an age of plenty. He understood that the social usefulness of selfish individualism was ended. He saw that there must be a new spirit of cooperation if this great power of production were to serve the common welfare. Floyd Olson and the movement of which he was the leader alined themselves with this great current of change—a change going on throughout the world. He supplied the function of leadership by giving constructive direction to the force of change in the period in which he lived.

A COURSE FOR A NATION TO FOLLOW

Olson exemplified a life of love, not hatred, of human beings. He fought what he regarded as the evils of a system, and all those who stood in the way of bringing about a better social order. But he was not interested—nor is the party he represented—in taking away any of the good things in life from anybody. He was interested—and so is his party—in bringing the good things of life to everybody who, by hand or brain, contribute to our social wealth.

He realized that a State government of itself could do very little toward raising the living standard of the people. What it could do was to be a pioneer in the field of social legislation and fix a course for the Nation to follow.

To my mind the greatest service Floyd Olson and his party rendered America was a demonstration that democracy in this country can be made to serve the interests of all our citizens rather than the interests of a privileged few. And if democracy is to survive, that is what it must do. When our democracy is able to supply our people with security and a decent standard of living it will have become something worth fighting for—and no outside force, no matter how powerful, will be able to threaten it. To that end we must mold our Government.

Floyd Olson thus had a profound effect on his time. He had a profound effect upon America. And, as the things he stood for—the things that the Farmer-Labor Party stands for today—become better understood, they are certain to play an even more important part in shaping the future course of our people for a fuller and better life.

VICTORY AHEAD

Floyd Olson kept faith with the common people of Minnesota and the liberals of America. The common people of Minnesota and the liberals of America will keep faith with him by carrying on the battle until victory is won. To that end this great American gave his life—and I am sure not in vain.

There may be dark days ahead. The storm clouds may gather. They always do. The thunder and lightning may drive some to cover. But ultimately the people's cause, sometimes retarded, will ride through the storm. In the end, the sun comes out. Victory comes to those who persevere.

Said Olson:

Human progress is sometimes arrested; the shackles are tightened on the common man. In these periods we despair; we lose faith in the human race having the stuff to create a better system, an ordered society founded on social and economic justice. But history shows that after periods of set-backs, we drive on again, recapture the ground we lost, and advance to new positions.

So I say to the progressives of America: Listen to the voice of Floyd B. Olson speaking to the progressives of his State in the campaign of 1932:

The Farmer-Labor Party presents a cause, yes, a crusade—a crusade for better government in the interests of the many, and to promote the happiness of the many. And, to use the inspiration of that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence: We of the Farmer-Labor Party invite all good citizens to help us; and to the support of the cause of human rights and equal justice we mutually pledge to each other and to you our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor. We, the people, have seen Floyd Olson rise to great heights championing the cause of labor, the poor, and the jobless. His unfailing courage remains with the party. We cherish his principles and carry on remembering that . . . "When he fell. . . . . .

He went down as when a lordly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky. . . ."

Upward and onward we progress to eventual victory—victory that comes to all true and honest causes.

Mr. President, I recount the life and struggles of Minnesota's first Farmer-Labor Governor. Here we have the creed, here we have the program, of a great and a mighty leader. Here we have the party and its platform which helped lift Minnesota to a higher and better plane of living. We have the program and plan and creed and solution which must come eventually to the United States someday; this program must be adopted before we can solve the great problems which now trouble our times.

THE BASIC ELEMENT OF AMERICAN LIFE

These problems will be solved when the great farm element of the United States, which, after all, is the basic element of all American life, the producers of agricultural products, and those who labor and toil in our factories join hands with the small independent businessmen and stand behind this creed. This program—the planks here outlined, which I have quoted—I wish to place in the RECORD so that those who may be interested in research may find inspiration for an advance into the struggle and the battle which is before us.

We cannot permit a situation in the United States to continue indefinitely in which more than 10,000,000 are out of work, a situation which led the President of the United States to state on the front steps of this great Capitol not so long ago that one-third of our people were ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed. Our problems must be solved. In God's good time they will be solved.

YOUTH AND THE FUTURE OF AMERICA

Mr. President, I am not a pessimist, I am an optimist; I believe in the future of this great country, no matter how many errors and mistakes we make or how we stumble along the dark road. If we cannot solve them, youth will come up the great, mighty road of American progress with the creed of Olson, with the creed of our party, and contribute to the greatness and glory of the United States.

Mr. President, I ask that there be inserted at the close of these remarks a bibliography of the writings and speeches of this great man and a chronology of his life. I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Lodge	Sheppard
Andrews	Downey	Lucas	Shipstead

Davis	Lee	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. The yeas and nays have been requested.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been requested, but not ordered. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I simply wish to add a word or two to what was said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. The problem is rather plain and simple. In the effort to economize in the administration of the W. P. A. the appropriation, as recommended by the House committee, as recommended by the House, as recommended by the Senate committee, represents a very substantial reduction below the appropriation for similar purposes last year.

The joint resolution itself does not specify anything in reference to change in the location of offices. It is probably true, and I think the officials recognize, that if they are to administer the work within the limits of the funds which are provided in the measure, some means of economy, involving probably regionalization of some of the functions of the Treasury Department, will have to be agreed upon. If the present set-up of State offices is continued it will involve either consuming the appropriation considerably before the end of the year, or adding $1,200,000 to the appropriation.

The Senator from Alabama very carefully pointed out from tables contained in the House hearings that some employees will necessarily be moved from certain States, to the regional offices, and that there will have to be some dismissals. I gathered from the Senator's remarks that he feels it would be improper economy to dismiss an employee, since such action might force the employee upon relief.

Personally it seems to me that the W. P. A. organization should be operated as economically as possible, and particularly in these days when such tremendous obligations are being imposed upon the Government for defense purposes.

We are simply confronted with this question: If we want to maintain State offices, if we want to maintain 700 employees who can be dispensed with, we should vote for the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. If we are willing to dispense with practically 750 employees in order to save the Government $1,200,000, the answer is clear. That is the issue; on one side economy, as against placement and location on the other.

I think efficiency will not be substantially affected one way or the other. There will be a diminution in the number of employees in every State if the provisions which are now in the bill are adopted. It is a question whether or not we are willing to accede to a certain reduction in the personnel administering the functions which the Treasury Department performs for the W. P. A., and thus make a saving.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I dislike to disagree with the position taken on this question by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the chairman of the subcommittee, and I dislike to disagree with the majority of my colleagues on the committee about this or any other matter. I also certainly want the Government to be economical, and if I were at all assured that the proposed amendment would result in one-fifth of the saving which is claimed, I might be in favor of the committee provision, but I do not believe it will make any saving. I believe in the end it will cost more.

I have been a Member of the Senate for quite a long time, and have served on the Appropriations Committee for a number of years. I and other Senators have seen many representatives from various bureaus and departments come forward and say, "We would save a great amount of money by a consolidation here and a consolidation there and by removal of employees here and removal of employees there," but when the time comes for appropriations to be made for the next year, the appropriations are usually increased instead of decreased.

What does the proposed appropriation do? At the present time there are procurement offices in the States. The States are reasonable subdivisions. They are natural subdivisions. They are the subdivisions of the Constitution. No one wants to abolish State lines. It would not be right or constitutional to do so. But what we do in effect by the provision in the bill, so far as this particular activity is concerned, is to abolish all State lines and establish 13 regions. What do we do? We transfer the purchasing of Government supplies for the W. P. A. from our own States to a State selected by the Department.

Mr. President, I cannot better express the situation than was expressed to me in a letter which I received from an honored constituent from Nashville, Tenn., and I shall read one paragraph of it:

> It is apparent to us that the service should be kept open for the States and not regionalized. As you, of course, know, there are millions of dollars being spent annually for various kinds of materials, supplies, and merchandise through this office for the many activities of the Government in this State. Our merchants and contractors in Tennessee do not deserve and do not wish to have any advantages over the merchants and contractors of any other State, but they do want, and they emphasize that they be given an equal opportunity with other merchants and contractors, and it is our opinion that the way to insure an even distribution of these funds, which is certainly to be desired from the standpoint of the national good, is to insist that these offices remain on a State basis.

What could be a more natural position to take than that we should continue this work on a State basis?

This work has been in operation for 7 years. Seven years is a good long time. The organization has operated on a State basis for 7 years. Now, after 7 years the Bureau of the Budget comes forward with the regional plan of action.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the testimony of the Treasury Department before the subcommittee clearly shows that this change is not instituted by the Treasury Department. They have been satisfied, and are still satisfied. The change was proposed at the suggestion of the Bureau of the Budget. Those who have been operating under the present system are satisfied with it, and are perfectly willing to keep it in operation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Alabama. What he says is true. The Procurement Office, so far as I know, has not made a request that this change be made. The W. P. A. did not originate the proposal. It has been made by the Bureau of the Budget. I do not know what experience the change is based on. For 7 years we have been told that the way to purchase these supplies is through the various State offices. I think our experience is worth something. The W. P. A. has done a good job. The Procurement Office of the Treasury has done a good job. I think we ought not to go into an untried field. In other words, suppose there are $2,000,000 of contracts to be let in the State of Colorado, and the Colorado State office is moved to Los Angeles, Calif. I do not remember whether or not it is proposed to be moved at all, but I am considering that it may be moved to Los Angeles, or to a nearer State.

It practically eliminates the contractors from bidding on those supplies. They must go to Los Angeles to bid. The contractors must take up the matter at Los Angeles. In other words, the purchase of those supplies would virtually be moved to California and would no longer exist in the State of Colorado.

A similar situation exists in Tennessee. Our contractors would have to go to Atlanta. I know nothing about the matter, and have never had anything to do with it. I do not know the man who purchases the supplies; but, as I understand, we have been purchasing supplies under the present system for 7 years. I have never heard of any friction over it or any claim that the system had not been honestly, fairly, and justly administered. I have never heard of the Procurement Office of the Treasury being criticized for what it has done during the past 7 years.

It is now proposed to change the system and consolidate it into 13 districts. The purchase of all the supplies for the W. P. A. is to be consolidated into 13 districts. I do not think such a plan is fair to the States. I do not think it is a good policy. We have regional offices in some other departments, but only here and there.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to call two things to the attention of the Senator from Tennessee. Of course, no department ever originated any reduction in its own personnel. That is too obvious to deserve comment.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true. That is just what I am complaining about. The purpose is not to lessen the number of personnel. The purpose is not economy. The number of employees will be as great as before. The only difference is that they will be consolidated in 13 States instead of 48.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator stated that he did not believe there would be any economy. The economy is written into the joint resolution. Last year the Procurement Division had $5,200,000. This year, under the joint resolution, it receives $3,225,000. Last year the Division of Disbursements had $2,500,000. The joint resolution provides $1,724,000 for it. Last year the Office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits in the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants had $5,973,000, and the joint resolution provides $3,827,000 for that office. In other words, under the terms of the joint resolution there is a positive reduction, a positive economy.

Mr. McKELLAR. The appropriation this year is about two-thirds of what it was last year. It is a little more than a fourth of what it was 3 or 4 years ago. The Senator does not give the relation of the figures. The appropriations this year are less than they were last year.

As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma does not increase the appropriation. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take the appropriation as it is in the joint resolution. I do not want to increase the appropriation; but the procurement of supplies ought not to be taken out of 48 States and put in the hands of the merchants of 13 States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the procurement of supplies will not be taken from the States. That is not the provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. ADAMS. May I read from the testimony?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Schoeneman, who is in charge of that matter, said:

> Now, the regionalization in the case of procurement offices is not exactly comparable to the regionalization of offices of accounts and disbursements, because the Procurement Division has no intention of regionalizing all of its functions—merely its vouchering and administrative functions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. ADAMS. There is a saving in that connection of about $175,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. ADAMS. I am reading from the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not care what the Senator is reading from. Some of the State offices would be kept in each State, and that is why there would be no saving or economy. There would be these employees in addition to the big number in the regional office. Some sort of an office would be kept in each State, and that office would be permitted to purchase small amounts of supplies, probably not to exceed $500. The State offices might be permitted to buy a few spools of cotton, a few picks and shovels, and perhaps a hoe occasionally. They might buy a few plows, but that is about all. Some sort of a State office will have to be retained to keep certain persons in office in the various States; but the large contracts will all be moved to the 13 great cities provided for in the joint resolution.

I am opposed to it. I do not think it ought to be done, and I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

I do not think we ought to obliterate State lines in this way. Why should we undertake, in a roundabout manner, to obliterate State lines? Why should we vote against our own States in favor of the 13 States favored by the Budget Director?

I like the Budget Director. He is a very fine man. I do not criticize him; but I do not think the Budget Director has authority to abolish State lines. So far as my vote is concerned, I will not vote to give him the authority to abolish State lines.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Who has a greater duty than Members of the Senate to protect the States? Senators represent their respective States. They ought to protect their States.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. I do not know about the relative duty; but so long as I am able to hold up my hand and have a place in this body I will stand by my State, and I will stand by the rights of all other States as well.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I trust the Senator may be spared many, many years, so that he may grace this body and hold up his hand and fight for his State.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator, and I join in that hope.

Mr. ADAMS. I am sure the people of Tennessee, in the coming November, will echo our hopes.

However, in this particular matter State lines are not necessarily involved. The Senator and I have repeatedly voted against proposals which have come from the other side of the aisle to reduce W. P. A. appropriation and management to State lines. We have taken the position that the obligation is national. We have declined to turn the control back to the States, and have repudiated the argument that we must not disregard State lines.

The purpose of this provision is to bring about economy. One result will be that some persons will lose their jobs if the economy is effected. Another result will be that some persons will be moved from where they now are. A third result will be that some persons will not be able to sell who now are able to sell. If the Senate wants to oppose the saving of $1,200,000, of course, that is for the Senate to decide. The committee, with the exception of two of its most distinguished members, voted to make the saving, even though some employees in various States will lose their places.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I agree that the obligation to administer W. P. A. is national, and that we must treat it as national. However, the National Government has no right to destroy State lines. The Constitution under which we operate provides for States. It nowhere provides for regions. The word "region" does not appear in the Constitution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, did the Senator vote for the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. McKELLAR. I did. That system is not in the Constitution, but it is an entirely different matter from the one here discussed. The purpose of the Federal Reserve System was to look after the currency and the money of the entire country, a constitutional requirement. It was not the purpose of the Federal Reserve System to affect the purchase of supplies in various States.

Mr. President, I want Senators to know what they are voting for when they vote against the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. I take up the several regions.

Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont will turn over to Boston, Mass., the purchase of such goods, wares, and merchandise as may be sold to the United States Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, in addition, all employees now in the Office of Accounts and Deposits, as well as the Disbursement Division, will be moved out of the State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, ostensibly or technically they may be moved out; but we know that persons who have lived in a State all their lives will not be moved out. The places will go to others, in the States in which the offices are established.

The second region, New York State, does not make any difference, because that is a district within itself.

What about the third district? Where is Delaware? Delaware and New Jersey will turn over to Philadelphia all the purchases which now take place in those States. I do not object at all to the home city of my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] receiving the benefit of the sale of goods for three States, but I think it is very hard on Delaware and New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to transferring the offices to Philadelphia. We have had an office in our State for 7 years. It has worked satisfactorily. However, I have heard that it is proposed to move it to Philadelphia. I am rather averse to this regional shifting around, and I think the office ought to remain where it now is.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. I quite agree with the Senator from Delaware. I hope neither the Delaware office nor the New Jersey office will be moved to Philadelphia. In my opinion, they should remain where they now are.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank my friend, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, for the manly, courageous, and fair position he takes on this question.

I have my hand on the shoulder of the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and I want to call his attention to what has been done to Kentucky. They did not even pay any attention to the majority leader when they established these new regions, for hereafter the purchase of several million dollars of supplies for the State of Kentucky will be made in Ohio. They will be bought at Cleveland, Ohio. They did not even select a place close to my friend from Kentucky; they could have put it at Cincinnati, which is a great city, but the Budget Director—a fine man, I have no doubt—put Kentucky in Ohio, and in Cleveland, Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will not fail to emphasize to the majority leader and to other Senators that, in addition to the removal of purchases, either all the employees in these divisions will be discharged or they will be moved out of the State—one or the other. To me that is more important than is the matter of purchasing supplies.

Mr. McKELLAR. It means something, of course, but the purchasing of supplies ought to be made in the State in which they are used.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not the first thing they have done to me, for Kentucky has to go to Cleveland to borrow money, when it could borrow it at Louisville. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Now I come to the next one, region 5. Oh, we are going to lose the word "State" from our vocabulary. It will not be long, if the plan works well in this instance, until we will move other activities to these great regions.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator did not confine the T. V. A. to State lines, did he?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. A national project is to be treated nationally. We have no reason for a region in connection with the T. V. A. [Laughter.]

The T. V. A. is truly national in its scope and character. It is in five or six States, but, thank Heaven, it has not been placed in a region.

Mr. BARKLEY. God made the Tennessee River, but he did not make these regional offices. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. It will not be long before the Budget Director will be rearranging the Tennessee River just as he is rearranging the Ohio River. [Laughter.]

I next come to Washington. Where are the Senators from Maryland, North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia? [Laughter.] I do not know whether they are here or not, but in their several States the purchases made for W. P. A. are going to be taken out of those several States and turned over to Washington. Great Washington City! Long may she wave and prosper. She is doing pretty well; I have nothing but the kindest feelings and interest toward Washington; I like to live here a part of the year; but I do not think that Washington should be preferred over Baltimore in this matter.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to tell me where he derives the statement that purchasing will be taken away from the States where they are now made?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read from a statement:

Our merchants and contractors in Tennessee——

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask from what the Senator is reading?

Mr. McKELLAR. From Mr. R. B. Beal, a gentleman from Nashville, Tenn., who wrote me about it.

Mr. ADAMS. He is not connected with W. P. A., is he?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not in any way, so far as I know.

Mr. ADAMS. There is not in the bill now under consideration any provision which would in any way remove purchasing authority and power from where it now is. I will say to the Senator that the record shows that it would only take $175,000 to keep the procurement offices where they are now, and that is not a major issue in this particular matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. We all know that merchants in Memphis, for instance, will not care to go to Atlanta, which is 350 or 400 miles away. Yet our merchants will have to go there to bid; they cannot bid unless they do go there, and when they go there they are outside looking in; they no longer have any local position; the Atlanta officials may not be particularly interested in Memphis sellers. Probably the Mississippi merchants—I will find out from the Mississippi people, as I see the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] looking at me. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator not to mention that, because that is a sad story with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it is a sad story. I wish the Maryland Senators and the North Carolina Senators were present. They are detained on official business.

Mr. HILL. I will say that the Senator from North Carolina has been here during most of this debate, diligently looking after the interests of North Carolina, and he is wholeheartedly in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am happy to hear that. I know both Senators to be able and splendid Senators.

I come to region No. 6. No longer is it the proud State of Georgia, no longer is it the proud State of Tennessee or the the proud State of Florida or the proud State of South Carolina; no, they have been merged into the region of Atlanta, Ga.

Alabama; I think Alabama is all right. Both the Senators from Alabama are here. Florida. I do not know how Florida is, but the Senators from Florida are all right. I am sorry they are not here. The rights of their citizens are being invaded by a disregard of their State's rights provided for by the Constitution of the United States.

I next come to region No. 7. Wisconsin is blotted out; Michigan is blotted out; Iowa is blotted out; Indiana is blotted out. Where is——

Mr. MINTON. Here I am. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. You are no longer from Indiana; you are from a region of Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to thank the Senator from Tennessee for the solicitude he evidences for my State and to tell him that I share very heartily in his expression of views and am going to vote that way when I get an opportunity.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. He is going to have the opportunity in a few minutes to vote for his State so far as I am concerned.

I return, by request, to the region in Washington. I see the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has come in. I am looking for the other Senator from West Virginia. I am sure he feels the same way about his State. The people of West Virginia will have to come to Washington under this bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Let me assure my distinguished and beloved friend from Tennessee that, so far as my vote is concerned, the Treasury's employees who are now stationed in West Virginia will not be transferred to Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish that this fervent objection to people leaving their States and coming to Washington might have prevailed during the earlier days of the present administration, when there was a great army besieging Washington. They left Tennessee and West Virginia to come to Washington, and they are now here by the tens of thousands. They had no reluctance about coming to Washington then, and I know, so far as my State is concerned, they are still willing to come here.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was a little too fast for me. If any Tennesseeans came to Washington, it was so long ago that I have forgotten what a new Tennesseean in Washington looks like. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. They are willing to come.

Mr. McKELLAR. They may be willing, but they do not get the opportunity.

I next come to region No. 8; no longer Missouri and Arkansas, but region No. 8. Here is one of the Senators from region No. 8, the distinguished senior Senator [Mrs. CARAWAY], one of the best-known women in the world, an able and distinguished woman. I wonder if she wants to abolish the Arkansas State lines and become a part of the "region of Missouri"?

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I beg leave to state that I am for the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and shall vote for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Fine. I thank the Senator. Where is the colleague of the senior Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MILLER. Here I am.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is right on the job; and I now see him. The Senator does not want to abolish his State, does he, so far as the purchase of these supplies is concerned?

Mr. MILLER. I shall not consent to the abolishment of the State offices, and shall vote for the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely wish to announce that I have been called to the telephone so that if I am absent the Senator will realize why I am absent. I am listening with great approval to what he is saying. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. He is an able Senator, and represents a great State.

I next come to Minnesota, region No. 9; North Dakota and South Dakota have been abolished. Let me say to my handsome young friend sitting in front of me that, so far as his State is concerned, all purchases are going to be given to Minnesota. But that is not all. There is another region—Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma.

Here is my distinguished friend, GEORGE NORRIS, who served in the House—I started to say "one of the elder statesmen," but I would not have been correct about that—when I went there 30 years ago, and has been serving in Congress all this time with fidelity and honor. He thought he was coming from Nebraska. He has always said he came from Nebraska; but under this joint resolution he comes from region No. 10. [Laughter.]

I now come to California and Nevada. California is the region, and Nevada becomes a part of California in that region.

The next is Arizona; and California gets that State too. California gets two of them. Nevada was one. Arizona was the other.

Here is region No. 13. When I first came to the House, 30 years ago, one of the handsomest, one of the most dashing, one of the most eloquent men in the House at that time—I think I heard him 2 or 3 days after I got there, and I had no idea there were any such orators in the country as he was—was my friend PAT HARRISON. I was told he was from Mississippi, but that was wrong. He is not from Mississippi. He is from region No. 14, at New Orleans. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with what the Senator is saying.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

The next States are Idaho and Utah. Idaho is swallowed up by Utah, and Oregon is swallowed up by Washington.

The remarkable thing about the Budget Director is that he has disposed of the States of both the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] and the minority leader [Mr. MCNARY]. He puts the majority leader in Ohio and he puts the minority leader in Washington. I do not think he is right in either case.

I think I need not pursue this matter further. We have pursued it somewhat in a good-humored way this afternoon, but I have brought it to the attention of the Senate in this way just to show the true situation.

Mr. GREEN and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island. Then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I have listened with great admiration to this catalog of States, and the tributes paid to each; but I exceedingly regret that the Senator from Tennessee has been guilty of a sin of omission. I know he is often guilty of sins of commission, but not of sins of omission. Of the 48 States he has enumerated 47, and has omitted the greatest in every respect except geographical size, and that is the State of Rhode Island.

I hope he will not omit that State, because I know that all the residents of Rhode Island, when they read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow, will be very much disappointed, and I probably shall receive a thousand telegrams asking me why Rhode Island was overlooked.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator let me lend him a pair of microscopic glasses so that he can see the State of Rhode Island? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, but I have been in the State of Rhode Island. It is not a large State, but it is a wonderful State. It has many factories. It has many industries. There are many businesses there. It is a great State. The people of Rhode Island are a great people.

When the Government buys wares and merchandise through the W. P. A. for use in the State of Rhode Island, it ought to buy them from the merchants and businessmen of Rhode Island. In some way it seems that the Senator's State is not included in these lists as I hastily looked at them. That is the only reason why I happened to omit it. I want to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that there was nothing personal about my action, either to him or to his State, because the Senator is a splendid representative of his State, whom I honor very, very greatly. He serves on the Appropriations Committee with me, and I know there is no more diligent or faithful or able Senator in this body than the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for his tribute; and I am only sorry that I am not running for reelection this year. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will be reelected often.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I simply want to say that I heard the Senator refer to his own remarks as humorous. I should not want his patriotic appeal to be referred to lightly, or as humorous, because I know that some of us who have endeavored to stand up against the "blitzkrieg" feel as little Holland felt when assailed by Hitler. This is certainly a most patriotic, serious matter, and I appreciate what is happening.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that when the Government purchases supplies for use in a State, if there are in the State mercantile establishments and business houses and factories from which the supplies can be purchased, probably more reasonably than elsewhere, and without the payment of freight charges and commissions, it seems to me the Government will save money by purchasing the supplies there. I believe the plan which has been so admirably, so honestly, so fairly, and justly carried on during these 7 years of W. P. A. should be continued. Nobody has ever heard a complaint about the system from the Purchasing Department of the Treasury during that time, and I do not think it ought to be changed now. I do not think it ought to be consolidated in the way that is proposed.

Take the State of Missouri as an example: Missouri has two offices. One was not enough. Somebody felt extremely kindly toward Missouri. The present Presiding Officer of the Senate, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], was put in Ohio; but some people in States around Missouri were put in the eastern part of Missouri at St. Louis, and others were put in the western part of Missouri at Kansas City. I have nothing in the world against Missouri or St. Louis or Kansas City, but I think these activities ought to be carried on in each of the States where they can be better managed and more economically managed, as shown by actual experience. I think the business ought to be transacted in the various States.

I certainly hope the Senate will adopt the amendment offered by my distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] which I transfer to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] if present would vote "yea." He is unavoidably detained on official duties.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

My colleague, the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], would vote "yea," if present. He is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 7, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the joint resolution to read as follows:

SEC. 40. The President is hereby authorized through such agency or agencies as he may designate to purchase exclusively in the United States and to transport and distribute as hereinafter provided, agricultural, medical, and other supplies for the relief of refugee men, women, and children, who have been driven from their homes or otherwise rendered destitute by hostilities or invasion. When so purchased, such materials and supplies are hereby authorized to be distributed by the President through the American Red Cross or such governmental or other agencies as he may designate. The cost of such distribution shall be paid out of the appropriation herein provided for.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section.

On or before December 31, 1940, the President shall submit to the Congress an itemized and detailed report of the expenditures and activities made and conducted under the authority herein conferred.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this amendment is suggested to carry out the recommendation which the President of the United States made by letter a few days ago, to provide a fund of $50,000,000 for the relief of refugees in Europe made destitute by invasion and by hostilities. It is not only to carry out the recommendation of the President, but it follows very closely the lines of a resolution which has been pending here, offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. It is something which has been very close to his heart; and to a certain extent we have taken it out of his hands, but the amendment carries out his idea. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the majority leader, has also been instrumental in formulating the amendment. As I have said, it carries out the idea and purpose of extending help to those in Europe who have been reduced to a most unfortunate condition of destitution as a result of the outrages which have been perpetrated in their countries by invasion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has just occurred to me that, inasmuch as Congress may not be in session on the 31st of December, 1940, but will meet on January 3, 1941, that date be substituted as the date on which the President should make his report.

Mr. ADAMS. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is modified as suggested.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana permit me to add one word to what I have heretofore stated regarding the amendment just adopted?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Red Cross is named as one of the agencies through which the President may act. The amendment was not offered at the instance of the Red Cross; that is, they are not requesting the appropriation. They are willing to act as an agent, but they have heretofore, so far as their own solicitation is concerned, solicited funds only from private individuals. The purchases of property under the amendment will be handled by the Federal Government, and the Red Cross will merely act as a distributing agency.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield for a moment, the amendment adopted a few moments ago provides that the State offices shall be retained in the identical places where they are now. The Senator from Colorado, in charge of the joint resolution, made the statement that it would take more money to maintain them where they are. If that is true, it would be a persuasive argument in conference to disagree to the amendment just agreed to, unless the money is provided. I submit an amendment providing that $1,200,000 be properly distributed. The amendment will apply in four places, but I ask that it may be considered as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "$5,600,000" and to insert "$6,300,000"; on line 11, to strike out "$3,225,000" and to insert "$3,625,000"; on line 12, to strike out "$1,724,516" and to insert "$1,924,516"; on line 17, to strike out "$9,429,916" and to insert $10,729,916."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I did not catch where the amendments would appear in the joint resolution. Is there to be an addition to the appropriation for the General Accounting Office?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In four items on page 17. The first item is increased by the sum of $700,000.

Mr. ADAMS. The General Accounting Office is not involved in this discussion at all. The General Accounting Office appropriation is increased $1,000,000 over last year's appropriation already in the joint resolution. The General Accounting Office is now doing $3,000,000 worth of work for activities other than relief. There should under no conditions be an increase in this appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This will go to conference, and if the conferees find that these sums are too large, or are not needed, I am sure that under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Colorado they will be eliminated.

The second item is on page 17, line 11, the third on line 12, and the fourth on line 17.

Mr. ADAMS. We cannot even take it to conference.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have the figures which were testified to by the Treasury Department in the hearings. The exact figures necessary to retain the situation as it is now were given.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I withdraw the amendment temporarily.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move to change the figures——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I withdraw the amendment, if I may have permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have two amendments on the desk which I desire to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$975,650,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,488,000,000", and on page 7, to strike out beginning with line 18 through line 13 on page 8, and to insert the following:

The amount which may be obligated for administrative expenses of the Work Projects Administration in the District of Columbia and in the field for the fiscal year 1941 shall not exceed 5 percent of the sum appropriated in subsection (a) of this section.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, my first amendment provides for an increase of the amount appropriated for W. P. A. by about 50 percent, for the purpose of utilizing a greater number of the unemployed workers of the country in connection with our national-defense program. The second amendment is to set a maximum of 5 percent of the total W. P. A. appropriation for administrative expenses.

In this period of great national emergency, I submit that an adequate W. P. A. program can and should be provided to effectively fit into our national-defense plans. I think it can be clearly demonstrated that this can be done.

Mr. President, aside from the threat of war now hovering over us, unemployment is the most serious danger to our national security.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting his remarks, but I wish to express the hope that Senators will remain here in the effort to dispose of the pending bill tonight. There are two or three important measures awaiting consideration that are a part of the national-defense program. It is very desirable and necessary that they be disposed of this week, because the Finance Committee will report the tariff bill either tomorrow or Saturday, and it is contemplated that we will begin consideration of that bill Monday. Therefore, I hope Senators will remain here and cooperate as much as possible to try to conclude consideration of the pending bill today, so that we may be able to dispose of these other measures before we adjourn for the week.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, as I was saying, aside from the threat of war that hangs over our country, the greatest threat to our national security is the serious unemployment condition that continues in this country. It constitutes a continuing threat to our internal peace and safety. I, therefore, contend that if these millions of unemployed workers can be utilized in carrying out any part of our national-defense program, there can be no reasonable excuse for our failure to do so.

Under my first amendment, I propose to expand the W. P. A. from an average of 1,900,000 jobs to an average of 3,000,000, and put these men to work on the most essential national-defense projects that can be conceived; projects absolutely indispensable in connection with our program of national defense.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Am I to understand that the Senator's amendment not only increases the amount, but permits the President to use the increased amount in 8 months?

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TAFT. So that, as a matter of fact, the proposed appropriation would represent approximately two and one-quarter million dollars for the year, if the President were to exercise that power?

Mr. MURRAY. No; my amendment expresses exactly what is intended. The amount is appropriated for the 8 months as specified in the measure.

If we expend our naval and military air forces as proposed in the measures already passed, we must certainly be required to expand our air bases, landing fields, runways, airway beacons, airway markers, underground hangars, and buildings and plants of various kinds necessary to accommodate the enormously expanded air forces contemplated. Likewise, the mechanization and expansion of our military forces will require a tremendous program of construction of a character W. P. A. may undertake, such as armories, barracks, warehouses, cantonments, military roads, training fields, machine shops, and various plants and buildings necessary to house a greatly expanded and mechanized Army. My amendment undertakes to provide such a program. If we follow such a course we will contribute in a large measure to the removal of the greatest threat in this country to our national prosperity and unity.

Because I am convinced that this work-relief measure, if made effective through these proposed amendments, is vital to our program of national defense; and because I firmly believe that in this period of national emergency a W. P. A. program can be made to tie in closely with our plans for national defense I would like to take the time to discuss the problem in some detail.

I need not now dwell on the history of unemployment during the past 10 years or the tragic suffering and destitution caused by the break-down of our economic system which made necessary the adoption of our present policy of national relief for the unemployed. Every humane-minded citizen in the country has recognized the necessity for the assumption by the Federal Government of this obligation to relieve the distress of our workers who, through no fault of their own, were rendered jobless and destitute during the period of the depression. That policy had the practically unanimous approval of the American people. It was recognized as the only humane thing that the Government could do under the circumstances.

It is to be regretted, however, that soon after the adoption of this Federal policy, political propaganda designed to discredit it began to have its effect; and at no time during the depression has the policy of national relief been permitted to operate fully and effectively. We have experienced a series of ups and downs in the administration of national relief, but the net result of the entire program was to furnish only partial assistance to a very limited number of the Nation's unemployed. Notwithstanding all this, our national policy of work relief will stand out in the future history of this period as a great accomplishment of the present Democratic administration.

W. P. A., intended for the relief of millions of unemployed and destitute citizens, early became a national political football and has been kicked around the halls of Congress and the country at large ever since its inception. Efforts to destroy it and force the unemployed back on charity and local relief have been constantly and vigorously pressed throughout the depression. On one occasion its enemies succeeded in so seriously curtailing W. P. A. appropriations that a serious recession resulted, making it necessary for the Congress to make prompt and greatly increased appropriations to offset the disastrous conditions that had developed. Appropriations for W. P. A. have been constantly opposed, limited, and circumscribed in such a manner and to such a degree that it is really remarkable that W. P. A. was able to accomplish the splendid record it has. Every time a relief measure was considered it was charged that the relief program was destroying the Nation; that we could not afford these large sums for the relief of unemployed and destitute workers. It was charged here that the W. P. A. was an imported, socialistic scheme, foreign to our democracy, and that it was designed principally to perpetuate in office the New Deal administration. It was claimed that the recipients of relief were unworthy, lazy, good-for-nothing, and that they did not want to work. It was charged that its only result would be to bankrupt the Nation.

Speaking on the floor a few days ago the distinguished senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] said, as will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, June 6, 1940, at page 7676:

I have learned to have great respect and admiration for the men in this body. I have heard man after man in this Chamber assert without any challenge that adding more debt to our presently inflated debt structure would be fatal to America. That is correct, is it not? Is there any dissent from that?

A number of gentlemen who are at the present moment candidates for nomination on the Republican ticket are saying to the people of this country from platform after platform that if we add any more to the present national debt damnation lies at our door. Many of my own brethren on this side of the aisle, in the Democratic Party, have assured us time after time that if we continue to add to our debt we are going to hell financially.

So those people who have been opposing a national work-relief program were willing to have the country go to damnation socially, morally, and economically so long as they were able to defeat appropriations and discredit the W. P. A. But today there is no dissent in this body in regard to the enormous appropriations we are making for necessary national defense. We are talking today of spending fifty billions for national defense if necessary. We are enthusiastic about such appropriations because we are impressed that it is essential for the safety and security of the Nation. We are all willing to appropriate billions in a war to defend democracy from without.

Mr. President, true defense of our country is not merely a matter of armaments or airplanes. It is a matter of loyal and patriotic spirit in the hearts of our people. That cannot be brought into existence by a program for expanded armaments. I wonder if it would not be a wise policy to appropriate a few extra millions now to strengthen our democracy within and let the great masses of our unemployed feel that they occupy a place under our democratic system. I think that would be sound statesmanship. It would accomplish more for the real defense of democracy than all the armaments we may be able to provide through the billions of dollars we are appropriating.

Huge appropriations for armaments, billions spent for national defense, will not alone be sufficient to safeguard and defend our country. These things standing alone may only hasten our dissolution. Our first line of defense must always be a loyal, contented, and patriotic people at home.

I will not attempt to discuss the cause of this great scourge of unemployment which has been inflicted on our country. It is not necessary to undertake to place the blame for it in connection with the situation now confronting us. It is sufficient for the purpose now under consideration to point out that at the present time we have over 10,000,000 workers, willing and able to work, who are unable to find employment in private industry. Currently, the W. P. A. is employing only about 1,900,000 out of this great horde of unemployed workers. I understand that before June 30, the end of the present fiscal year, this number will be further reduced to 1,700,000, a reduction of 200,000 in 2 months. During the fiscal year 1940, W. P. A. will have carried an average of 1,900,000 workers on its rolls. The present W. P. A. relief measure, as reported, provides $975,000,000 for the work program, which, if expended during the first 8 months of the next fiscal year, will furnish an average of 1,900,000 jobs for that period. This would represent less than 20 percent of the Nation's unemployed.

What, then, is to be done about the remaining millions of unemployed workers? Can the Government afford, in times like these, to ignore the dangerous consequences to our national morale of such a colossal failure of government and industry to provide work for unemployed citizens? If they are permitted to remain idle, their skills deteriorate and their morale is shattered. Their health, and the health of their families, are affected.

It is people like these, Mr. President—discouraged and disillusioned workers who are made to feel that they are not wanted and not needed in our society—who make suitable raw material for a "fifth column" in this country.

With all the work that needs doing in this country, when we should be straining every effort for our national defense, when we should be doing everything in our power to prove the successful operation of democratic institutions, in my judgment it is almost criminal to permit millions of our able-bodied citizens to rust in idleness. The Federal Government cannot afford to shirk this responsibility.

When the W. P. A. was created in the spring of 1935 it was intended that the Federal Government should take the major responsibility for workers who are in need, and who are able to work, by giving them employment on a works program; and the States, cities, and towns kept the major responsibility for the unemployables—the aged, the blind, the dependent children, and all those who, because of physical or mental defects, are unfitted for work. The States and localities are taking care of their unemployables, and are contributing 25 percent of the cost of W. P. A. projects. But the Federal Government does not employ all our needy employables. Instead, those whom the W. P. A. cannot employ also go to the local direct relief agencies, and increase the already heavy burdens of our communities.

My first amendment, to increase the appropriation by approximately one-half billion dollars, would permit the Federal Government to carry out its share of the responsibility on a more adequate basis. It would put a million more people who are employable and in need to work on the W. P. A. program, and thus relieve the financial pressure on our States and communities. At the same time we should be constructing essential national defenses.

Hard work, Mr. President, has been the cornerstone of American democracy. By depriving millions of our workers of the chance to earn a living for themselves and their families by their own efforts and labor, we are endangering our American democracy. We are setting up a class apart from the main body of our citizens. We are saying to these people, "We don't need you. We don't want you. You are economic outcasts." That is not the American way, Mr. President. Such an attitude is not worthy of us as a democracy.

We need the loyalty and devotion of every American citizen in every State, city, county, and village, however humble he may be. Unemployment and destitution are foundations of sand in building patriotism. To place this Nation on a solid foundation we must give assurances, and put those assurances into action, that this Nation can, and will, provide work for those of its citizens who cannot find employment in private enterprise, but who are able, willing, and anxious to work. We have not been realistic in dealing with the problems inherent in widespread and persistent unemployment. We have hoped that, somehow or other, the problem would vanish, that some miracle would happen to provide jobs for all the unemployed. But that miracle has not happened; and we cannot base legislation on the possibility of a miracle.

Today there are between eight and nine million more Americans who have jobs than were employed in 1933; and still we have some 10,000,000 unemployed. These figures sound contradictory, but they are not. We must remember that in 1933 we had at least 14,000,000 unemployed. Since then the labor market has been augmented by more than 600,000 workers each year, or more than 4,000,000 additional workers in the past 7 years. That is why we still have 10,000,000 unemployed workers today. I should be the last person to deny that we have made great forward strides in meeting our unemployment problem, both in reducing the number of unemployed and in the technique of handling relief. But I feel that our unemployment problem is still our No. 1 problem, more important than any other problem facing us; more important, even, than our problem of defense; because I believe a nation cannot build an adequate defense system without some semblance of economic security and without a high morale of its citizenry.

When the European war broke out last summer, many persons believed that the titanic struggle in Europe would solve our unemployment problem in the United States. Now, they thought, the troublesome problem of unemployment will vanish into thin air. Now there will be more jobs than available workmen. But what happened? Soon after the outbreak of the war there was a decided increase in industrial activity. Large orders were placed with manufacturers on the strength of increased exports. But many firms were placing large orders merely to build up their inventories in anticipation of price increases. The industrial production index rose from 103 in August to 128 in December of last year. The December index figure surpassed even the best achievements of 1929. Our production index was at an all-time high. During this period employment increased by 1,140,000 workers. We were told by some optimists and wishful thinkers that we no longer needed a W. P. A. program. In their enthusiasm they even forgot that a portion of this increase was the normal seasonal increase which occurs every year. But, unfortunately, we soon learned that the increase in employment was to be short lived. Soon our merchants found themselves with large inventories on their hands, and without customers to absorb them. While exports to some countries increased, to other countries they were curtailed, and to still other countries they were completely cut off. The industrial production figure declined from its high of 128 in December of last year to 102 in April of this year, a most disastrous drop. During the same period industrial employment rapidly decreased by about 1,000,000. It is estimated that by August industrial employment may rise to approximately 108. This, even if true, will be but a slight improvement over present conditions.

War orders have speeded up some isolated industries, but on the whole business in this country is not sound. Our agricultural situation has been aggravated. Our export and import trade has been disrupted. Our shipping industry has been hurt. Every time another country is dragged into the war, our trade suffers. Italy's recent entrance, and the extension of the theater of war over the entire Mediterranean Sea, means a tremendous interference with our foreign trade, and a further drop in industrial production. The gains we have made in a few industries which manufacture airplanes, engines, tanks, and machinery have been more than offset by the dislocations in the rest of our economy. But now there are those who believe that our new defense program will absorb all our unemployed; that they will all find jobs in private industry; that unemployment will vanish from the American landscape. Let us not be too optimistic about this. Let us not again be fooled.

The editor of the United States News, discussing this subject, said:

> The matter is by no means so simple. The labor required will be largely in specialized, highly skilled employments, and the plant capacity utilized will not be spread, but will be concentrated, for the most part, in a few heavy industries capable of turning out planes, tanks, guns, ammunition, and ships.

The President has already publicly stated that the national-defense program which he has set forth will not substantially lessen the plight of those who are eligible for W. P. A. employment. We must remember that the amount appropriated will necessarily be spent slowly, and whatever stimulation the defense program will give to industry will not be of great momentum before the end of the calendar year.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Am I to understand that the Senator from Montana thinks the present defense program will not absorb any appreciable number of unemployed before next January?

Mr. MURRAY. That is exactly true, and it is borne out by the studies of statisticians and economists.

Mr. BRIDGES. With the world aflame in June, we shall not get the program under way before the first of the year. Is that the Senator's idea?

Mr. MURRAY. The program will not appreciably increase employment until toward the end of the year. This is due to the dislocation of industry in other respects because of the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. In other words, the Senator believes that the program will not get going until January 1?

Mr. MURRAY. I do not say it will not get going before January 1. It will be started, but it will not and cannot absorb the millions of unemployed in the country or make an appreciable impression on unemployment until the first of next year. This is due in a degree to the new unemployment in other industries by reason of the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. With the world aflame, someone will be very negligent if the program does not get going before next January 1.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I wish to recall the fact that in the early part of his speech the Senator emphasized the fact that our shipping was being dislocated, that our commerce was being curtailed, and that naturally unemployment would follow as the result of these curtailments; and that, while employment would result from war industries, it would not in any measurable degree affect the totals of unemployment for the time being.

Mr. MURRAY. That is exactly correct. Economists who have studied the situation point out that as a result of the destruction of our import and export trade, the loss in shipping, and the manner in which our industry generally is affected as a result of the war, there would be a severe and dangerous panic in the country at the present moment were it not for the fact that a national-defense program is under consideration. As I pointed out in the early part of my remarks, more than a million men were laid off in private industry during this spring.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again at that point?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I have here a clipping from the New York Times dated as late as April 27, after Great Britain had been in the war for approximately 8 months. This clipping states that Great Britain at that time had 1,121,212 persons wholly or temporarily unemployed, and Great Britain at that time had 2,000,000 men under arms. Besides that, she had her war industries working 24 hours a day; and as late as April 27—a very short, brief time ago—she had an unemployment program involving over 1,000,000 persons.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator has stated the situation exactly. The same conditions exist in this country, but in a much exaggerated degree. In this country, instead of only a million or two unemployed, we have between nine and ten million unemployed. Does this country propose to allow to remain in idleness those nine or ten million men who will be candidates for "fifth column" activities if our Government does not do something about the matter? I think it would be the most unwise policy for our Government to pursue. The only safe thing for us to do is to strengthen ourselves at home. While we are preparing for defense from enemies abroad, let us protect ourselves from the danger of trouble from within.

We must remember, too, that the defense funds will be spent in industries which employ relatively little common labor. Even if employment in aircraft, machine-tool, and shipbuilding industries were doubled from their April level, and employment in steel mills returned to the peak it reached last fall—and this is a very optimistic assumption—it would mean the employment of only 290,000 workers. This is but a fraction of the number of unemployed. Armament reemployment will be concentrated in specific skilled trades. There are but very few skilled workers of the type necessary for an armament program on the W. P. A. rolls. Some indirect employment, resulting from factory expansion and from increased transportation, will materialize from the defense program, but not enough measurably to affect the unemployment problem. Even if indirect employment resulting from the defense program is eventually twice the amount of direct employment, the total new employment to be hoped for will not exceed 800,000, or 8 percent of the total number unemployed; and very little of this employment can come about in the next few months.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does not the Senator think that instead of putting more money and still more money into projects along the line of his amendment we ought at this time to be spending the money we have available, outside of taking care of the actual relief needs, for national defense?

Mr. MURRAY. That is exactly what I am trying to accomplish by this amendment. We have established the fact that the W. P. A. is competent to construct naval air bases and military air bases, landing fields, and work of that character. It has already proven its capacity to do work of that kind.

I have here on my desk a report showing the marvelous record of the W. P. A. along those lines. For instance, here is a report from the National Aeronautic Association for use in the National Aeronautics Magazine. This is not W. P. A. propaganda. It comes from the National Aeronautics Association.

It makes a lengthy statement of what has been done by W. P. A. in preparing this country for defense. I shall not take the time to read it. Attached to the article is a list of the W. P. A. airports and airway projects and military fields. They have already been constructed under the W. P. A.; and yet there are in this country persons who want to discredit W. P. A. and make it appear that it contains only a gang of lazy, good-for-nothing persons. It has been making a marvelous record, as shown by this report, in practically every State in the Union.

I ask that this report from the National Aeronautics Association be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

GROUND FACILITIES FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The American Nation, confronted with the task of building quickly a national air defense adequate in view of existing war conditions abroad, has at least an encouraging start in the expansion during the last 5 years of its airport and airways facilities.

Strategically spaced throughout the country are nearly 200 new airports that did not exist in 1935 and nearly 370 airports that have been extended or improved since that time. This work has been the contribution of the Work Projects Administration, which, while aiding civil aviation, at the same time provided facilities important to the country's air forces in time of war.

Approximately $200,000,000 in Federal and sponsors' funds has been expended on the expansion of the Nation's network of airports, landing fields, and aviation facilities. In carrying out this program W. P. A. workers have constructed and improved a total of 51 airports of a strictly military and naval character at Army, Navy, and National Guard sites. In addition to this work, carried out under W. P. A. State programs at a total cost of approximately $17,000,000, the Army and Navy have expended, as of March 31, 1940, nearly $15,000,000 of W. P. A. funds, transferred by W. P. A. to the War and the Navy Departments for the construction by W. P. A. workers of naval and military aviation facilities. Forty-four military and naval air stations and flying fields (exclusive of air facilities at regular military and naval posts) have benefited from work completed or under way with these W. P. A. funds.

Even before W. P. A. airport projects had received attention under the work-relief program, $32,036,241 worth of work was performed by the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, W. P. A.'s predecessors, between 1933 and 1935.

W. P. A. has been the principal contributor to the rapid development of airports and aviation facilities in recent years. The Civil Aeronautics Authority in a report sent to Congress in March 1939 said:

"The Work Projects Administration has been the paramount factor in the airport development of the last 4 years. * * * Federal expenditures made through the agency of the Work Projects Administration represent nearly one-third of the total amount spent on all airport developments from 1911 up to the present time, and more than 55 percent of the expenditures since 1932."

Work performed on strictly military fields and bases has included, in addition to improvements of fields and bases themselves, such as lengthening of runways, grading, leveling, draining, etc., construction and improvement of buildings, not only of hangars but of barracks, mess halls, and other structures necessary to the proper quartering of planes and personnel.

The W. P. A. and the Navy Department cooperated in $1,000,000 worth of improvements at the naval air base at Squantum, Mass., scene of tremendous activity in 1917 and 1918. Work of similar magnitude was carried on at Army's Lowry Field, Denver; Bolling Field, Washington, D. C.; Mitchel Field, Long Island; and Navy's Reeves Field, Los Angeles. Some $2,000,000 was spent on improvements at Miller Field, New York, used by both the Army and the National Guard, while $1,500,000 was spent on the development of the Sand Point Naval Air Station at Seattle, Wash. Some of the work performed by the War and Navy Departments, operating with funds allocated directly to them from relief appropriations, was carried on at airports and bases where projects also were operated under the W. P. A. State programs. The Federal agency program also included work at fields in the strategically important possessions of Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Aside from the work performed directly on military air fields, W. P. A.'s general airports program has been of great military significance, studding the country as it has with airports and landing fields suitable for military use in emergencies. Since 1935 the W. P. A. has built and improved airports and landing fields, constructed better, longer, and safer runways, seaplane ramps, and landing platforms and has provided a variety of other improvements. Some 90 percent of the Nation's regular air-line stops now in actual use have been benefited by the W. P. A. program.

However, in this field of civil-aviation development W. P. A.'s work has gone far beyond service to fields important to trunk-line flying. Landing fields have been made available in all parts of the country in communities where, because of lack of regular air travel, there had been no place where aircraft might land safely in emergency. The construction and modernization of civil airports in the less populous sections of the country may be considered of particular military value.

South Dakota, for example, until recently without any regular aviation facilities, now has airports in Pierre, Huron, Rapid City, and Spearfish, thus linking all sections of the State. In Maine, to mention but another instance, regular air service has been made available to the Canadian border.

The new municipal airport at Denver, Colo., is a commercial airport, but as an example of its military value, even in peacetime, the work there has included the construction of a reinforced concrete hangar for the Colorado National Guard. The hangar provides space for 24 planes, with two 2-story wings in which space is included for photographic, radio, medical, armament, and parachute sections, operations office, locker rooms, enlisted men's and officers' clubrooms, conference, and instruction rooms. The hangar is 121 by 140 feet with a concrete floor, a 2-inch plank roof supported by 7 steel trusses on 14 steel columns on each side of the building, tubular steel hangar doors of the around-the-corner type, and 20,000 square feet of concrete-surfaced apron at the entrance. A 10-car concrete garage also was built for the national guard.

As of April 1, 1940, W. P. A. workers had constructed a bituminous runway, 150 feet wide and 6,740 feet long, a bituminous taxi strip 50 feet wide and 3,045 feet long, and 74,000 square yards of bituminous apron. A sand and clay runway 150 feet wide and 5,280 feet long, and a concrete taxi strip 100 feet wide and 250 feet long also were built, while 10 floodlights and 72 boundary lights have been installed.

For drainage, 73 catch basins, 7 manholes, 11,188 feet of French drain, 10,400 feet of drainage ditch, and 12,800 feet of sewer were installed, along with a gasoline line aggregating 5,000 feet of 3-inch diameter.

A considerable number of both large and small fields have been equipped with one or more types of buildings—administrative buildings, terminal buildings, hangars, and miscellaneous structures. The latest W. P. A. inventory lists 387 new buildings and 600 improved structures of all types, of which 155 new buildings and 159 improved structures were hangars.

The W. P. A. program was launched at a time when radical changes in seaplane design necessitated many changes in ramps and landing platforms, and W. P. A. engineers and their technical advisors were careful to insure that their construction kept pace with new developments. At the W. P. A.-built seaplane base at Charleston, S. C., for example, specifications were changed at the last minute to provide a timber ramp with a marine railway and to provide other equipment for the handling of the longer, heavier type of seaplane then coming into use.

This new base, which already has been used as an emergency terminal by a west-bound clipper ship from Europe unable to alight either at New York or Baltimore because of adverse weather, has many natural advantages, among them the year-round favorable climate, and the existence 110 miles inland of Lake Murray, an artificial body of water that can be used as an alternate landing area in event of stormy weather on or near the coast.

W. P. A.'s latest summary shows that 1,756,000 feet of new runways have been built, of which 1,065,000 feet were of high-type surface, and that 372,000 feet of existing runways were improved. Considerable research also has been made by the W. P. A. into various types of hard-surfaced runways. The airport at Purdue, Ind., is serving as a research field, where 12 types of paving are being tried, including concrete, standard bituminous, bituminous stabilization, and calcium chloride with a stabilized base with cotton fabric under bituminous tread; and in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Department of Highways, the W. P. A. has placed 14 different types of paving at the Harrisburg, Pa., airport. This field also is being used for research purposes by the State Highway Department of Pennsylvania and the W. P. A.

A variety of facilities to make flying safer and navigation easier, such as airway markers, beacons, and airport lighting systems has been installed by the W. P. A. Boundary lighting has entailed the installation of 7,873 new standards and improvement to 1,449, the lighting systems varying to meet the peculiar needs of each field. One field whose lighting system has been praised by pilots in the Indianapolis Municipal Airport where the lights used on the W. P. A.-installed instrument approach are set flush with the ground at 100-foot intervals and 50 feet distant from each side of the 5,600-foot runway. Blue mercury vapor lights mark the first 800 feet, white lights the last 2,000, the two colors aiding the pilot to determine the distance along the runway.

Among other safety devices, W. P. A. has established 9,588 new markers and improved 1,559, while building 65 new beacons and improving 10.

W. P. A. has sought to make flying popular, at the same time it labored to make aviation safe. Its recreation division has established classes in airplane model making throughout the United States and at many points instruction in aviation theory has been taught as part of the education program. Instruction in radio aeronautics, for example, has been added to the courses taught at Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., where a former Army Signal Corps officer is in charge. Classes in the theory of flying are held in Hackensack, N. J., and cities in other States, although none presumes to augment instruction with actual flying.

The contemplated program of airplane construction and pilot training makes further expansion of the Nation's airways system an immediate necessity, but the work performed from coast to coast and border to border during the last 5 years has made the job far less formidable than it might have been without the contribution of the Federal work program.

Attached is a list of the principal military and naval air stations and flying fields where W. P. A. workers have made valuable contributions to national defense:

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the Senator will admit, will he not, even as strongly as he feels on the subject, that many projects have been constructed by W. P. A., such as monkey houses and mill ponds and things of that kind, that do not contribute greatly to national defense?

Mr. MURRAY. I do not know of any monkey houses that were built by the W. P. A. I regard the W. P. A. as a competent, able agency of the United States Government, which has done splendid things for the American people. When the history of this period is finally written, I think it will record the fact that the W. P. A. has been one of the greatest activities this administration has undertaken. I do not have the patience to listen to men who want to belittle an agency of that character, which was designed by the Government for the purpose of carrying out a humane program, a program to take care of millions of unemployed persons in this country who are unable to take care of their families, and who are suffering, as a result, from lack of food and from ill health brought on by a depression which they had nothing to do with creating.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I do not quarrel with the basic purposes of relief. I have always supported it; but I think that instead of giving this glorious picture of the administration of W. P. A., instead of its being one of the glorious pages of American history, it will be one of the blackest.

Mr. MURRAY. I disagree with the Senator. He has a different conception than I have of what the W. P. A. has accomplished. I have visited, in my own State, the marvelous projects that the W. P. A. has constructed there. I have seen the projects constructed in the States of Oregon and Washington. I have seen the McCord Air Field in the city of Tacoma, which is one of the greatest defense projects in the country. I have also had described to me the great naval air base at Sand Point, near the city of Seattle, which is regarded as one of the greatest naval air bases in this country, and other air bases of a similar character—for instance, at San Pedro, Calif., and at San Diego.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I heard a story about this alleged monkey house. I do not know just what it was, but the individual had started out and had driven in an automobile across the State where the monkey-house was supposed to be. He passed a great building in a university that had been built by W. P. A. labor and P. W. A. labor; he passed schoolhouses; he drove across overpasses, but all he saw was the monkey house, because that was a habitation with which he was familiar. He had a monkey mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana further yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Wyoming evidently is casting aspersions upon me. So far as that is concerned, I am very willing to stand here and be a critic of W. P. A., as well as to commend the good things it has done.

Mr. MURRAY. I welcome the Senator's criticism.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have been on the floor of the Senate and have heard certain United States Senators compare Harry Hopkins, as Administrator of W. P. A., with the Almighty. That is going to a great extreme. The Senator from Wyoming is going to great extremes. The Senator from Montana is going to extremes.

Of course, the W. P. A. has done some good work. Of course, some form of relief is needed; but all through it has been colored, as I said, with very black pages, with many disgraceful proceedings. Politics has been played all the way through it, and it has been done at the expense of the unfortunate people of the country.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I beg to differ with the distinguished Senator. I think he exaggerates the mistakes which may have occurred in W. P. A. I think he may find a few isolated instances of poor projects; there may be some instances where politics entered into the W. P. A.; but I assert again that, on the whole, the W. P. A. program has been one of the best things this administration has accomplished for the people of this country, as is recognized by leading economic experts. For example, Fortune magazine has had experts study the W. P. A., and I intend to refer to its report later on in my remarks. They have found that the W. P. A. is worthy of great respect, even from the big-business interests of the country, because it has greatly helped in saving from bankruptcy some of the large industries of the United States.

[1] This list does not include aviation facilities and improvements made by the War and Navy Departments with W. P. A. funds at regular Army posts and naval stations, where such facilities are only incidental to broader programs of work. Neither does this list include sites of projects carried out by the Coast Guard with W. P. A. funds.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. MEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am glad to learn from the Senator's remarks what he considers the outstanding achievement of the New Deal. I am glad to know he thinks it is the W. P. A.

Mr. MURRAY. If the Senator will read some of the conservative Republican papers, such as Fortune magazine, he will get a little education on this subject.

I yield now to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. In view of the fact that the Senator from Montana has mentioned the Fortune magazine, which is a conservative publication, let me read a sentence or two from what that magazine said in February last. It stated:

> W. P. A.'s worst leaf-raking days are over. From the men who carve toy ducks for poor children out of old Surplus Commodities fruit crates on New York's Tenth Avenue to the women who carry saddle bags of books to the mountain people of Kentucky, there is scarcely a project anywhere that is not eloquent, even if at a whisper, with a sort of social utility.

W. P. A.'s leaf-raking days are over, says Fortune magazine, and in the same article to which I just referred Fortune magazine states:

> W. P. A.'s use of idle skills for the good of society has resulted in a list of accomplishments that read like a psalm to a modern Pharaoh.

That is from Fortune, and it occurs to me that anyone who seeks to indict W. P. A., in view of the volume of evidence in its favor, is not making a very helpful or wholesome contribution to the solution of our unemployment problem.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator from New York. I appreciate the contribution he has made.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know what the experience in the different States may be, because it is impossible for any one man to ascertain unless he makes it a point to travel all over this great country, but I do know conditions as they exist in my own State.

In Delaware, W. P. A. has been considered one of the very best activities of the Government, not only for the assistance of people needing relief, those who have needed the things which the W. P. A. was supposed to provide, but because of the various projects in the State which have been undertaken. I am not speaking from a partisan standpoint, not because I happen to advocate the New Deal, but I could bring evidences from every Republican paper in our State of the value of the W. P. A. Every daily newspaper in Delaware is Republican, and I could bring clippings from every one of those Republican newspapers to the effect that in Delaware there has been no politics in W. P. A. The Wilmington Every-Evening, the Morning News, and the Star, are all Republican papers, and it has not been a month since I noted in their editorial columns statements to the effect that there has been no politics in W. P. A. in Delaware. It may be that it is not so in other States, and it is unfortunate if that be the case. It has also been said that the numerous projects which have been carried on by W. P. A. in Delaware, and the numerous things they have done, were good accomplishments, that they were satisfactory, and that the newspapers had no criticism to make of the W. P. A. in Delaware.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator from Delaware. I think Senators from practically every State in the Union could verify the observations made by the distinguished Senator from Delaware. I know that in my own State, where all the newspapers are corporation controlled, the editors have been writing editorials praising the program of the W. P. A. They could not avoid doing that, because the programs which have been carried out were of the very finest character, resulting in building up the State, and improving the various communities in which the projects were constructed. There have been built dams and reservoirs, roads and schoolhouses, and all sorts of projects which have improved the social and economic conditions of our State. As I have said, editorials in all the Republican-controlled newspapers of the State have approved the program.

I have tried in my remarks to show that the program I have in mind in connection with W. P. A. is not a program of work of an unnecessary character, merely to provide employment for the men employed. I am seeking to put these men to work on projects of an essential character in connection with our national-defense program.

It must be obvious to every intelligent person that if we expand our national armaments and air force, about which we are talking in the Senate, a very extensive program of works in the various sections of the country will be required in order to make the program operative.

As I pointed out earlier in my remarks, there is a definite tie-in between this work-relief program which we are discussing and the national-defense program. I wish to emphasize this with all the force I can. A great deal of work which comes under the category of national defense can be done by W. P. A. The W. P. A., for instance, has already built, as I have pointed out, some of the finest national-defense projects to be found in the Nation today. We know they can do this, because they have done it in the past. Recently the W. P. A. published an inventory of accomplishments for the first 4½ years of its operation. Let us examine a few items in this report, and see what W. P. A. workers have already done to bolster our national defense.

Let us first take the matter of airports. The relationship between airports and national defense must be obvious. There is hardly an airport in this country which has not been built or improved by the W. P. A. or one of its predecessors, the C. W. A. or the F. E. R. A. Whether we talk of airports such as the New York City airport, which was built entirely as a W. P. A. project, or of small emergency landing fields, such as we find in every State in the Union, relief workers helped to make them possible.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator referred to what is now called the LaGuardia Airport. That airport will stand for all time, in my opinion, as a monument to the work which the administration has been able to do, because it is regarded as not only the finest airport in this country but as the finest airport in the world today. It not only accommodates the airplanes which come from all over our country, but it is the base for the Pan-American Airlines. It will always stand as a monument to the work of the W. P. A.

Mr. MURRAY. The work of the W. P. A. in the New York project is an answer to the unwarranted attacks made on W. P. A. It proves absolutely the efficiency of the W. P. A., and shows that it has accomplished a great program of improvement in the United States.

The project to which the Senator from New York has just referred is not the only one constructed by the W. P. A. Hundreds of them have been constructed by the W. P. A. They have been constructed in every State of the Union The W. P. A. has not only constructed airports, such as the one mentioned by the Senator from New York, but has constructed naval air bases and military air bases of the finest character, recognized by the Army and the Navy as perfect projects.

This morning I talked to Admiral Moreell. He called my attention to the splendid work done by the W. P. A. in connection with the Sand Point Naval Base in Seattle, which is regarded as one of the finest naval air bases in the world. There is nothing to excel it. The Army air base at McCord Field, Tacoma, which I believe the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had the opportunity to visit sometime ago, is one of the finest air bases in the country.

I do not need to dwell on those things. I hate to hear people attempt to malign the W. P. A. I hate to hear them misrepresent and deceive the public with regard to the W. P. A. To do so is certainly unfair and unjust, and it is unpatriotic. When they do so they are injuring the feelings of men who have taken great pride in the work they have done. In the eastern end of my State, which was affected by the drought, the W. P. A. has built great reservoirs, and the men in charge take great pride in what they have there accomplished. The men in charge of the projects there dwell on the splendid character of the men employed, and the good work they have accomplished, and they feel they are constructing something which is of benefit to their fellow citizens. I feel utterly out of patience with those who attempt to misrepresent the W. P. A. and deceive the people of the United States with respect to a matter of such significance to the welfare of our Nation.

Whether you talk of the great airports in the country, such as the New York City Airport which was built entirely as a W. P. A. project, or of small emergency landing fields, such as you find in every State, relief workers helped make them possible. It is safe to say that if it were not for the increased ground facilities created by relief workers, aviation in this country could not possibly have advanced to where it is today. If it had not been for the W. P. A. program we would indeed be in a sorry situation today with reference to our national defense.

Let us get back to the W. P. A. accomplishment report and see what was done for aviation in just 4½ years. W. P. A. workers constructed 197 new airports, and they reconstructed, made additions to, or made improvements on, 372 others. They have built 1,756,000 feet of new runways, they have improved 372,000 feet of existing runways and they have surfaced 170,000 additional feet. They have built 387 airport buildings and reconstructed or improved 600 others. In addition, they have built thousands of ground lights, airway beacons, and airway markers.

Let us consider what W. P. A. workers have done for automobile transportation—certainly a major item in national defense. W. P. A. workers have constructed or improved a total of 457,000 miles of roads in a 4½-year period. In addition, they have constructed 56,000 new bridges and reconstructed or improved 37,000 others.

In the field of public buildings I will select two items which are definitely related to national defense. W. P. A. workers constructed 156 new hospitals and reconstructed 1,500 others. W. P. A. workers have built 222 new armories—which certainly should be regarded as helpful in our national-defense program—and reconstructed or improved 370 others.

These accomplishments are only a few from a long list. Surely the figures I have quoted above are impressive, and surely the work they represent is of tremendous value in our national defense. These accomplishments were made as part of a general work program—not as a special defense program—yet they represent a very valuable contribution to national defense. Mr. President, what I am getting at is this: If we increase our W. P. A. working force now to 3,000,000, as I am proposing, and if we direct the work insofar as may be possible toward national-defense projects, we can make rapid progress in carrying out a gigantic program of national defense. While we are doing this, we are giving our unemployed citizens an opportunity to support their families by their own efforts, and we are showing them that they are not to be regarded as outcasts but as loyal, patriotic citizens of our Republic.

I think we are fortunate at this time to have as Commissioner of the W. P. A. a Regular Army officer and engineer. While I do not speak for Colonel Harrington, I think it is obvious that he will direct the W. P. A. program to national defense, insofar as he is permitted to do so under the bill the Congress passes. I do not mean that W. P. A. workers will be set to making guns, planes, engines, tanks, or battleships. For the most part, they are not trained for that type of work. But they can—they have demonstrated that they can—work on projects which are vital for our national defense. They can work on airports, on roads, on barracks, on armories, on warehouses, on rifle ranges, on Army and Navy bases.

It seems to me poor economy, from any point of view, to limit the number of people to be employed on the W. P. A. program to less than 3,000,000 and thus retard our defense program. If someone should ask me, "Can we afford it?" I would answer, "Can we afford not to do it?" If we cannot afford to look after our own democratic system and our own people who are in real jeopardy, then we had better really be concerned for our safety as an independent Nation.

Mr. President, let me warn this body, with all the force my meager ability is capable of, that the safety and security of the United States does not rest alone in a great mechanized army or a super navy. Without a loyal, patriotic citizenry armaments will prove to be a futile means of preserving the Nation. "An army in overalls," as one thoughtful editor says, "is today as essential to national preparedness as an army in uniform." By arms alone, absolutely indespensable though they are, neither this Nation nor any other can make itself secure. A nation, however highly armed, must have a sound internal policy or it will find itself at last in mortal peril.

The great threat to the security and happiness of our country rests today in the battalions of our unemployed. It rests in the millions of men, women, and children menaced by poverty and ill health. No powerful combination of warlike nations can threaten the United States half so seriously as those conditions which are of our own making. Let us, therefore, arm now against this dangerous enemy within our gates which threatens to undermine our country. Put these unemployed to work on our defense program and block the development of "fifth column" activities at home while we face the danger of a ruthless enemy abroad. That is the American way of meeting this issue.

I have concluded my discussion of the first amendment which I have presented. I will now refer to my second amendment. My second proposal concerns itself with the administrative expenses of the W. P. A. My proposal is to set a flat maximum of 5 percent of the total for the administration of the program.

The W. P. A. is a huge and complex agency. It has offices in every State and city in the United States. It works on every conceivable type of public project. It is the largest employer of labor in the United States, and yet we expect this agency to operate the vast program efficiently and intelligently on a shoestring. Every year we increase their burdens, and every year, instead of raising their administrative budget, we cut it.

During this fiscal year the W. P. A. is operating on the basis of 3.7 percent for administrative expense, yet the House proposes to cut this small item by 20 percent. To me, this seems like poor business. The purpose of the cut is obvious to all. It is designed to hamstring and discredit the W. P. A. The proponents talk piously of economy, while Mussolini-like, they stick the harpoon into the body of W. P. A.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As the Senator knows, the W. P. A. has been reducing its expenses. In some years past, in relief bills, we established a maximum of 4 percent for administrative expenses, which the W. P. A. said was adequate. Then the percentage was reduced. This year the House cut 10 percent from the Budget figures. The Senate committee recommended the restoration of the Budget figure, which the W. P. A. says will be adequate, although it will have to be economical and careful. The percentage is about 3.7 percent. We have felt that the W. P. A. would not be willing to cut its forces below the number needed.

Mr. MURRAY. I am glad to hear the distinguished Senator from Colorado make that explanation. I am not familiar with the hearings, but I know that the Senator from Colorado is very familiar with the W. P. A. I am very glad to know that he has given consideration to that point, and that the Senate committee has restored the cut which was made in the House. However, in view of the fact that we have placed additional burdens on the W. P. A. in the way of making additional reports and investigations, which I shall mention later, I still think we should to some degree at least increase the administrative expenses of that organization. I do not think the Administrator would ask for an increase unless he thought it was necessary.

About the time the hearings were in progress I called up the W. P. A. office, and I understood at that time that the W. P. A. was greatly injured by the attempt to reduce its administrative expenses. That was the reason why I became interested in the matter. I want the administration to be efficient and the program effective.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of making a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that following the address of the Senator from Montana, and during the further consideration of the joint resolution now under consideration, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McNARY. On the joint resolution or any amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. On the joint resolution or any amendment.

Mr. McNARY. That would allow an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would allow an hour if any Senator should wish to use an hour.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask any Senator or any industrialist if 5 percent of the total appropriation to operate a program as far flung and complicated as is the W. P. A. is too much. I invite comparison with any other governmental agency—or, for that matter, with any private agency—to prove whether or not the administrative expense allowed W. P. A. is pitifully insufficient.

In 1937 Fortune magazine conducted an extensive research into the operations of W. P. A. Certainly no one would suspect that magazine of bias in favor of this Federal agency. Let me quote from the editor of Fortune, discussing its survey:

One conclusion of this research will perhaps startle you.

Says Fortune.

This impartial and wholly unbiased survey gave strongest support to the feeling that the machinery of the damned and despised W. P. A. functions with an efficiency of which any industrialist would be proud.

We expect the W. P. A. to make periodic surveys of the needs of its workers. We tell it that it must not employ aliens, Communists, or members of the Nazi bund, and we expect it to carry out these provisions to the letter. We chastise it, and cry "boondoggling" whenever we find a W. P. A. project, no matter how small, which to us seems poorly handled. We expect the W. P. A. to eradicate all political influence on its projects. We expect every project to be well planned before work starts. We expect the W. P. A. engineers to make periodic inspections to see that the jobs are progressing on schedule. It must apportion its funds in an equitable manner. It must be sure that no work is done on private property. It must arrange for sponsors' contributions. It must make thousands of reports—to the Treasury Department, to the Attorney General's office, to the Comptroller General's office, to the President, and to the Congress. It must be sure that every proposed project is socially worth while. It must be sure that suitable labor is available before a project begins. It must watch each project closely, so that the final costs do not exceed the initial estimates. I do not say that all these things should not be done. What I do say is that we should give the W. P. A. sufficient money so that they can be done properly. By so doing, in the long run we should save money.

The average W. P. A. administrative wage is considerably less than the average Government wage. I do not know why that should be. The jobs of W. P. A. administrators are just as difficult, if not more so, just as important, as those of any other bureau or agency. Yet we persist in underpaying them. I am familiar with the W. P. A. situation in my own State, as other Senators no doubt are familiar with the situation in their States. I know that the administrative staffs in the State office and in the district offices are made up of hard-working, intelligent men and women. I know, too, that they are underpaid, understaffed, and overworked. I do not think we should practice economy in that way. I predict that if we increase W. P. A. administrative expense to 5 percent of the total appropriated, we shall have a more efficient and effective W. P. A. program.

Mr. President, we are today facing a crisis in this country caused by the tragic international situation. Democracy is on trial as never before. We must think seriously of what we are doing. This is no time for dilly-dallying, for bickering, or for political pettifoggery and deception. We must get down to brass tacks, and do so promptly. We must consolidate all our forces. We must give work to our unemployed, so that they may play an important role in our defense program. We can no longer sit back and merely say, "Nobody in this country will starve." This is a negative attitude, and it is not enough. Besides, malnutrition, discouragement, and poverty may be just as devastating as starvation. What we should say is, "Let every American produce his or her share for the national defense and general welfare of the Nation. Let every man and woman become a part of our American defense program and a part of our society." We must provide the unemployed the opportunity to participate in this program—not as charity, but because they need work, and because we need their loyalty and patriotism.

Mr. President, there can be no safety or security for a nation infected by the dangerous plague of unemployment and destitution. We have millions of unemployed workers who are able and willing to work. It seems to me only logical that we should utilize these workers, as far as possible, in our national defense program. By providing useful—nay, essential—work for 3,000,000 of our unemployed fellow citizens through the W. P. A. program, we shall go a long way toward providing genuine national defense, both within and without our borders. We shall have provided insurance against communism or totalitarianism. We shall have reunited our country and our people and strengthened our democracy, and we shall be able to face the whole world without fear.

ATTITUDE OF AMERICA TOWARD EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the lateness of the hour, I think we cannot finish the joint resolution tonight; and inasmuch as we have already secured a limitation on debate, it may be advisable to have it go over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is the Senator about to move a recess?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to do so; yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow me 5 or 6 minutes before he does that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the leader for his kindness.

Mr. President, I have just learned through newspaper sources that the city of Paris is practically on the verge of capitulation—news which, I am sure, must bring tears to the eyes of the Members of this body and to the American people.

No wonder the Premier of France addressed to the President of the United States the plaintive appeal which is carried in this afternoon's newspapers, reading as follows:

Mr. President, I wish first of all to express my gratitude for the generous aid which you have decided to give us in the matter of aviation and armament.

For the past 6 days and 6 nights our divisions have been fighting without an hour's respite against an army having crushing numerical and material superiority. Today the enemy is near the gates of Paris.

We are fighting in front of Paris, we are fighting behind Paris, we are inclosing ourselves in one of our provinces and if we are chased therefrom we shall go to North Africa and if necessary to our American possessions.

REYNAUD JOINS ARMY

Part of the government has already left Paris. I myself am getting ready to leave for the armies. This is to intensify the struggle with all our forces we still have and not to abandon the fight.

May I request, Mr. President, that you explain all that to your people, to all American citizens, telling them that we are determined to sacrifice ourselves in the struggles we are leading for all free men.

At the moment I speak to you another dictatorship has hit France in the back. A new frontier is menaced. A naval battle is about to begin. You generously replied to the appeal I launched a few days ago over the Atlantic. Today, June 10, 1940, it is new aid, even wider, that it is my duty to ask of you.

At the same time that you expose the situation to the men and women of America I beg you publicly to declare United States' accord with the Allies and moral and material aid by all possible means excepting the dispatch of an expeditionary corps.

I beg you to do this before it is too late.

I realize the gravity of such a gesture. The gravity necessitates that it does not come too late.

You, yourself, said on October 5, 1937: "I am compelled and you are compelled to look ahead. The peace, freedom, and security of 90 percent of the world population begins to be jeopardized by the remaining 10 percent who are threatening to break down all international law.

"Surely the 90 percent who want to live in accordance with the moral standards that have received almost universal acceptance through centuries can and must find some way to make their will prevail."

The hour has come for these 90 percent of the citizens of the world to unite against the mortal danger menacing all. I have confidence in the solidarity of the American people, in this vital battle the Allies are waging for their own salvation, but also for the salvation of American democracy.

Mr. President, a few days ago prominent Members of this body were heard to say that the Allies had not requested aid of the American people. If anybody ever had a doubt that any of the other sentiments coming appealingly across the water were not official in character and did not come from the hearts of the Allied governments, that doubt is now definitely dispelled beyond question by the direct appeal made to the head of our Government by the Premier of the Republic of France.

Mr. President, it will be noted, in the alternative presented by the Premier of France, that yet closer and closer to our own continent, and closer and closer to our own country, comes the reach of the wings of this vicious vulture of war. There are growing up in our Congress those who, I can see, already are becoming the champions of the philosophy of appeasement in America. They say, "We are too weak, and therefore we had better not antagonize Hitler." They say, "Wait awhile, and perhaps he will spend his force and be exhausted so that he cannot get out of the Old World." They say, "Wait awhile yet, and perhaps he will not attack this continent. Wait awhile, until we are stronger and surer that we can resist defensively any encroachment he may hurl upon us."

Yesterday another important speech was made, Mr. President. It was made by the head of the Government of Brazil. That speech spoke complimentarily and approvingly of the virility of the new governments and peoples. That must have had an ominous sound to the ears of every Member of this body and every citizen of this country. Either that speech indicated that the head of the Government of Brazil—one of the major republics of the 21 on this continent—was already, in faith and in philosophy, at one with the opponents of democracy, or he must have thought there was a sentiment of that character so strong in his own country that he was obligated to recognize it at a time when he paid some tribute to the democracies.

I wonder, Mr. President, where these champions of appeasement are going to make their stand.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator pardon me for just a moment? If not on the Rhine, if not at the Meuse, at the Somme, at the Seine, on the Loire, at Paris, at Tours; not in Europe, if not in South America, where do the champions of appeasement propose to say, "Here we stand," and fight as men who were worthy always have fought for the things they held dear?

There seems to be a growing conspiracy in certain places to denounce some of us, and the President of the United States, and the Democratic Party under its present leadership, as being a war group and a war party. That policy is too obvious, Mr. President, for its slimy trail not to be odiously observable to everyone of us. Let history decide who is the war party of America. Let history decide who spills the blood of American boys. Let history decide whether the battle might have been avoided, but by the appeasement champions was ultimately and inevitably brought to the shores of this country they profess to love.

So I say, Mr. President, that appeasement is a germ which destroys the red corpuscles of every body politic in which it has been permitted to live.

If our body politic, if our Government, is once infected with that virus, it, too, will go the way of all others which have nourished it hospitably in their blood.

So, as Paris is about to fall, as the battle moves down to one of the provinces of France, as the government turns its eyes to the nations of the world appealing for succor, not for troops—and I cannot make it too clear that no Senator on this floor would more definitely vote against that than I would—appealing to this Government for what aid it can render short of war, if this Government now, in this crucial hour, fails to heed that plaintive appeal from the heart of crucified and expiring France, Mr. President, it not only constitutes ingratitude for what France did for us in an earlier day when we appealed to them, but it will mark the day when we choose to forfeit our standing in the family of the respected peoples of the world.

If we now decline to espouse a cause in which we profess to believe, and those who are our first line of defense there will come eventually the terrible day of realization that the champions of Chamberlainian appeasement led us not to peace but to a ghastly war in this hemisphere, if not in our country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I sought to interrupt the Senator in order that I might ask him a question.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was prompted to interrupt by his reference to the recent remarks of the President of Brazil. I have not had opportunity of reading the entire text of what the Brazilian executive said. I wonder whether the Senator from Florida has had that opportunity.

Mr. PEPPER. I regret to say that I have read only the newspaper accounts of it; I have not read the entire text.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought that was probably the case, and that is what prompts me to say that perhaps it would be a little bit premature to pass judgment now upon the full meaning and the full significance of what President Vargas actually said.

I think that what has been printed may justify the conclusion, not that he has expressed any hostility toward or any doubt in the virtue of democracy, but, rather, that he has expressed an opinion that organization is needed to protect and promote democracy. I felt, perhaps, it would be well for us to withhold judgment before expressing on this floor an opinion about a speech the meaning of which certainly cannot be clear to us until we have read the entire speech.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the spirit of caution which is contained in the words of the able Senator and my friend from Wyoming. No Senator on this floor is a greater admirer of the Government of Brazil than I—its very splendid and able Ambassador to Washington and his lovely wife, and its foreign minister, whom I was privileged to meet upon his last visit to this country. No one has looked with greater approval upon the spirit of cordiality and cooperation with which Brazil has entered into the family of nations constituting the 21 American republics. But in these crucial times we need more plain speaking than less, and the sentiments uttered by the President of Brazil were extremely disturbing to me either way, whether they indicated the sentiment of the President himself as giving approval to the totalitarian philosophies because of their vigor and efficacy, or whether he thought it necessary, because there are more than a million Germans in Brazil who are quite an influential factor in its population, to express approval of the totalitarian philosophies. Either, I say, has an ominous sound in the ears of the other republics of this hemisphere.

I certainly hope and pray that the sentiments in the hearts of the people of Brazil will always be the sentiments of democracy, but this is no time to talk of appeasement with totalitarianism, and if our friends to the south of us are beginning to appease the dictators, beginning to speak well of them, to be cordial and hospitable to the receipt of their doctrines and their philosophy, it is time we knew it now, because there may come a time when the United States will have to know who are its friends and who are its enemies.

What I am appealing for is that the Congress of the United States shall stand up unafraid and say, "We denounce totalitarianism, we denounce Hitler, we denounce Mussolini, we declare anew our sentiments of democracy and Americanism, we reaffirm our Monroe Doctrine, we propose to give all aid short of war to the Allies now, beginning now, not tomorrow; and tomorrow giving yet more material aid as our capacity expands."

The Congress, however, has not even the courage to stand up and utter those sentiments. We quibble, we equivocate, we evade, we hesitate, we wait; and even the Congress does not stand up and say, "Hitler stinks in democracy's nostrils, and so does his ally and confederate in crime, Mussolini; and so do their philosophies, and all they stand for." We cannot even get the Senate to say that. Therefore I should not be very much surprised if, knowing the Senate of the United States will not say that, the President of Brazil, a country in which there are over a million German citizens, will not dare to say it. So as he stands on a battleship speaking of the glories of Brazil in times past, of victories won, he thinks he had better put in a good word for the dictators, because Hitler is at the gates of Paris, and the great Italian air force and Army are poised ready to strike. The dictators are about to win, the democracies are decadent, are afraid, they cannot make up their minds, and they let Chamberlains lead them. They will not say what they think, for to do so might make some dictator angry.

If that is the kind of example the American Congress is going to set the South American republics, if their ambassadors are going to be able to tell their people, "Roosevelt has gone away out in front, and he has himself out on a limb, but you don't hear much from Congress, do you? They have not said these things"—do you not think they will all begin to say, "We had better play up to Hitler a little"? Then the next time they make a speech they will say, "While we appreciate the sentiments of democracy, we cannot withhold our compliments from the new virility and the new faith."

That is the trouble; if the dictators win, if Paris falls, and France is destroyed, how long do you suppose these smaller countries are going to stand up when Herr Hitler says, "All right. I want your wheat; I want your cattle; I want your lard; I want your cotton, and here are goods in return," and we, through our State Department, say, "Don't deal with Hitler. You are playing up to the totalitarian philosophy. You are making it impossible for these nations ever to restore themselves to power."

Do you think they are going to listen to us? They will not listen to a democracy that is afraid to say anything as against Hitler, who is neither afraid to say nor to do what his beastly will may dictate. So that the time has come when we would better make up our minds whether we are going to set an example of courage, or whether, in our equivocation, under the leadership of the champions of appeasement, we will give fearful and costly encouragement to the dictators.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am rather sorry I interrupted the Senator now, because I think it provoked him to make even a more grave charge against the leader of a great American republic than he had previously made.

The point I offer is that the Senator has not read the speech of President Vargas. It seems to me it is inadvisable, at least, for any Member of this body to link the leader of an American republic with the leaders of totalitarian states abroad, because it is possible that if the Senator had had the opportunity of reading the entire speech, a different conclusion might have been drawn. I do not pretend to say that President Vargas agrees with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Florida, but I do say that it behooves us, sitting in this Chamber, to speak with caution about the opinions expressed by leaders of other American republics until we know definitely what those opinions are.

I can sympathize completely with the Senator's denunciation of totalitarianism. I can sympathize, and I do, with his repudiation of the philosophy which is guiding Hitler and Mussolini; but I am not yet ready to link any American President with either of those two dictators, and I believe that the evidence is not at hand to justify any Senator to link them together. That is the only reason I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to make an observation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. While we are denouncing Hitler and Mussolini, I think we ought to include Mr. Stalin, of Russia. I think Stalin is accomplishing as much devilment in this country as is anyone else.

In view of the fact that my distinguished friend the Senator from Florida made mention of the South American situation, which really is a very serious one, and naturally an extremely interesting one, I now ask, without comment, to have published in the RECORD at this point, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming, an editorial which I read this afternoon, appearing in the Washington Daily News.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of June 13, 1940]

TNT—THE MONROE DOCTRINE TODAY

Among Latin American nations Brazil has long been regarded as the most friendly to the United States. Over the years her foreign policy has frequently been deliberately alined with our own. Hence the shock resulting from Tuesday's pro-Fascist speech at Rio of her dictator President, Getulio Vargas.

Defending "vigorous peoples," Vargas attacked the "sterile demagogy of political democracy." Since this may mean us, it again becomes necessary that we take another look at our political hand. Once more it looks as though loose talk in Washington may have gotten us into a tight spot abroad.

A few days ago a congressional resolution dramatized the Monroe Doctrine as a war issue in these words:

"The United States would not recognize any transfer and would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power."

The resolution's threat, pointed at Germany, is substantially what Monroe said in different words back in 1823 when the target was France, Spain, and the Holy Alliance. "Not acquiesce in" are fighting words. Considering the amount of armament we have "on order" and the amount we have "on hand," fighting words do not appeal to us as much as preparedness actions.

Frankly, we think the whole subject of the Monroe Doctrine is loaded with political TNT; that it is a little known but widely misunderstood document that may very easily involve us in trouble more quickly than some of the more obvious threats. It is our baby. Latin America has never adopted it, seldom liked it, and has generally hated it. For us to assume that the nations south of the Rio Grande have changed their views overnight is at least naive.

There are many scars. Dollar diplomacy, 30 invasions by us into the internal affairs of 9 supposedly sovereign and independent Latin American nations, the story of how we got the Panama Canal, the activities of our marines in Central America and the Caribbean—a long and often sordid tale of the build-up over a century of distrust and suspicion of Yankee imperialism.

President Roosevelt, by his good-neighbor policy, has made a commendable effort to heal old wounds. But he was dealing with a Latin psychology and Latin suspicions. The best that has eventuated from conferences at Buenos Aires, Lima, and Panama, conferences designed to make the Monroe Doctrine a real pan-American doctrine, has been an agreement to confer when danger threatens anywhere in this hemisphere—as would be the case in any attempt, for instance, to transfer the Dutch West Indies from a conquered Holland to a conquering Germany.

But there is a tremendous gap between agreeing to confer and agreeing to act. Since by the congressional resolution we are committed to action, we may have assistance or we may have only conferees. As a result of talking first, Congress has saddled us with a responsibility that stretches from pole to pole, from ocean to ocean, and from hell to breakfast—without any assurance that President Vargas, or any of his fellow Latin American dictators and presidents, includes us in his group of vigorous peoples.

Question: Why should we be the I'll-help-youse Happy Hooligan of the Americas? If the Monroe Doctrine idea—when the showdown comes—can't be turned into an iron-clad, mutually respected military alliance, then why should we stick our neck out way down south of the Equator?

Suggestion: Cut out the conversation and the resoluting. Call a conference, or page every nation in Latin America, and find how far, if at all, each of them is willing to go in a move for the joint protection of the Western Hemisphere—a move which would be the common task of all, not the self-imposed but deeply resented task of Uncle Sam.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BONE. So that the day-to-day record may be duly kept up to date, let me call the attention of my brethren to the fact that a few days ago that great diurnal, the Washington Star, published a very interesting news story by one of its contributors, pointing out that a few years ago German military experts came to this country and made a very careful examination of our mobilization plans, as a result of which Germany adopted the mobilization plans of the War Department of the United States of America, and is now employing them in its successful "blitzkrieg" against France, Belgium, Holland, and Great Britain. Therefore, when we hear totalitarianism savagely denounced on this floor we can all say, "Amen" to the denunciation, but hope to God that we will never have to adopt the things that Hitler adopted after looking over our plans.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I am reluctant to say anything at this late hour, but it seems to me that in the remarks of the Senator from Florida are some things to which exception should be taken.

The Senator denounces those whom he criticizes as the "apostles of appeasement." There is no occasion for appeasement on the part of America. Appeasement comes into play when there is controversy, when there is difference. There are some who are apostles of peace rather than of appeasement. I say to Senators that what America wants is peace. What American citizens—men, women, and the young folks—want is peace, but the very things that are being said on this floor, and elsewhere, by public officials, are jeopardizing the peace of America.

As a citizen I am interested in peace. As the father of two sons of military age I am interested in peace. I am not willing, without entering my protest, that everyone who insists that America go its way and mind its own business should be denounced. I am unwilling to have those denounced who, like myself, think we should not participate in the affairs of Europe. I have sat here day by day and heard made various speeches which apparently sought to create such a situation that America would not have a single friend in the association of nations. One Senator denounces Germany, another Senator denounces Italy and its leaders, another denounces England, another denounces France, another denounces Russia. We leave no nation undenounced.

My judgment is that in the affairs of nations, as in the affairs of men, friends are what count, not enemies. We may disapprove, we do disapprove, we abhor what is going on in Europe, but how many American boys are we willing to throw upon the altar of martial sacrifice in order that affairs in Europe may be conducted and regulated as you and I would have them conducted and regulated? I say, unfortunate, disastrous, distressing, and tragic as are conditions in Europe, I am not willing to have the Senate of the United States or the Government of the United States take a position or move forward in a way that will cost the life of a single American boy. It is for peace, not appeasement, I speak.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it the friendship of Hitler the Senator wants to retain?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not interested in his friendship, but I am not trying to incur his enmity. I would rather have Hitler's good will than his ill will. There is no reason to go out and invite danger. There is no reason to denounce ideas or ideologies which we do not like. In other words, I am interested in the welfare of this country. I am interested in the men, in the women, and in the boys of this country.

I fear that the things the Senator from Florida says are nothing more nor less than a demand that America go into war. We cannot go as far as we choose and then say, "No, we were not making war." In time of war we cannot say to one side, "We will give you everything we have; we will do everything short of war for you," and then expect the other party to say, "Of course, inasmuch as you say that what you do is not war, it is not war." You can go so far, but if you go beyond that you drag and you drive and you impel war upon us. That is what we want to avoid.

I merely differ with the conclusions which the Senator from Florida draws; I am afraid he is talking war when he means peace.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, with the light of this day, renew the sunlight of our spirits and the childhood of our hearts. Remind us that life is redeemed by sacrifice and service. Revive within us the sympathy that feels another's grief and shares another's gladness. The Lord help us to forgive that we may be forgiven; cleanse Thou us from secret faults. Grant that our faith in God, in man, and in our country may never die away. We earnestly pray Thee to give our national life a deeper, richer tone that preserves us from those powers of chaos and anarchy which are darker than unstreaked midnight. Thou hast made everything beautiful in Thy time, fair and sublime forms, yielding us their wealth as we pause to listen to their whispers. We praise Thee, our Father, that there is still something beyond, better than bread, more radiant than June skies, more blessed than the silences at twilight; something that urges us to bow and pray: Bless Thou the truth to us, dear Lord, as Thou didst bless the bread by Galilee. In the name of our dear Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

R. 8745) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes," and that the Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 95 and 110 to said bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Richard L. Neuberger.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and at this point to include a very short letter from the New York State Federation of Labor concerning Senate bill 591.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that under the agreement entered into in reference to extension of remarks everything except the remarks of the Member will have to go in the Appendix.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask that it be placed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert a telegram from a group of editors in the State of Minnesota on adjournment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include copies of diplomatic letters from the Polish Legation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, let us keep the record straight. On June 7, in an extended article in the press, President Roosevelt informed Democratic leaders that it was imperative that Congress adjourn by June 22. On June 12, when signing the Navy fund bill, he stated he saw no reason for Congress to remain in session more than 10 days or a fortnight.

Yesterday, in his able address on the floor of the House, the gentleman from Virginia, Congressman WOODRUM, said that Congress should remain in session in accordance with the unanimous vote of the Virginia delegation. He also stated he was very glad to see in the press a statement correcting an article of a few days ago saying that the President wanted Congress to get out of Washington. While I have searched the papers with care, I do not find any reference to the change of mind on the part of the President. He certainly wanted Congress out of his way, but now that public opinion has been aroused by the Republicans against adjournment, he is running to cover.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, when gentlemen quote the President as saying he wanted Congress to get out of town or he wanted it to adjourn, they are quoting something that never happened. The President never made any such statement to the press or anybody else.

There has been a great deal of talk about adjournment. It reminds me of a certain bug that looks one way and pushes another. A great many gentlemen talk against adjournment, but it would be my opinion that a great many of them, if there was a secret ballot, would vote to adjourn by an overwhelming majority. Under the circumstances, however, I think I may state that in all probability all gentlemen will have all the time to stay in Washington this summer that they desire. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 2803 (C) AND 2903 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 9909, to amend sections 2803 (c) and 2903 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Massachusetts explain what this bill is?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; this is a bill reported unanimously by the Ways and Means Committee. Under the present law, over the top of a bottle of distilled liquors is placed a strip stamp that costs 1 cent apiece to purchase. Of course, the regular tax is paid on the liquor. This strip is for the protection of the revenue, and also to protect the purchaser against poor and bootlegged liquor. If those stamps are damaged, for example by water, a refund can be made, or they may be redeemed by an equivalent amount of stamps, but if completely destroyed, for example by fire, the purchaser then must sustain a complete loss.

A distillery purchased $4,500 worth of these stamps. There was a fire. These stamps, incidentally, are under the control of the Government at all times. The distiller has to get an order from the storekeeper-gager at his plant to buy a certain number of stamps. He has to go to the collector, present the order, and when the collector sells the stamps to him they are not delivered to the distiller or to his representative, but delivery is made to the storekeeper-gager. So at all times the Government knows what stamps have been issued, and what stamps have been used. This is simply to allow the Government to reimburse either in money or by the issuance of additional stamps in lieu of those actually destroyed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is no chance for fraud, is there?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; because the Government has complete control at all times. When the stamps are sold they are sold only upon the order of the storekeeper-gager at the plant, and the stamps are delivered to the storekeeper-gager, who is an employee of the Government. The Government is in control of the stamps at all times and has a record of them at all times.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, may I say that this bill comes here with the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2803 (c), Internal Revenue Code, be amended to read as follows:

"(c) Unused stamps; exchange, refund, etc: The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by him and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may redeem or make allowance for any unused stamps issued under section 203 of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934 or subsection (b) of this section by exchanging them for other stamps of the same kind or by refunding moneys received therefor: Provided, That stamps may be exchanged or the value thereof refunded only in quantities of the value of $5 or more: And provided further, That no claim for the exchange of strip stamps or refund therefor shall be allowed unless presented within 2 years after the date on which such stamps were lawfully issued. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this provision."

SEC. 2. Section 2903, Internal Revenue Code, is hereby amended by relettering subsections (e), (f), and (g) as (f), (g), and (h), respectively, and by inserting a new subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) Unused stamps; exchange, refund, etc.: The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by him and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may redeem or make allowance for any unused case stamp, with all coupon strip stamps attached thereto, issued under section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond,' approved March 3, 1897 (29 Stat. 626), or under said section 1, as variously amended, and may redeem or make allowance for unused strip stamps issued for bottles of distilled spirits bottled in bond under said section 1, as amended by the act of July 9, 1937 (50 Stat. 487), or under subsection (d) of this section, by exchanging them for strip stamps for bottled-in-bond spirits, or by refunding moneys received therefor: Provided, That stamps may be exchanged or the value thereof refunded only in quantities of the value of $5 or more: And provided further, That no claim under this subsection for redemption or allowance in respect of case or strip stamps shall be allowed unless presented within 2 years after the date on which such case or strip stamps were lawfully issued. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this provision."

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding the limitations contained in sections 2803 (c) and 2903 (e), Internal Revenue Code, as amended and inserted, respectively, by this act, as to the time within which claims under such sections must be presented, claims under such sections for the exchange of or refund for stamps lawfully issued prior to the date of enactment of this act may be allowed if presented within 2 years from the date of enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article appearing in the Nation magazine by Richard L. Neuberger of the Portland Oregonian in reference to the Grand Coulee Dam and the Columbia Basin project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DISPOSITION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7074) to amend an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, projectiles, and other condemned material in their respective departments, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after "Republic," insert "posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky explain this bill and the amendment?

Mr. MAY. The original House bill merely authorized the War and Navy Departments to make sales of surplus guns and other material to the American Legion Posts. The Senate added the posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is obsolete material?

Mr. MAY. Yes, obsolete material.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thought you were sending all that over to help in the fight across the waters.

Mr. MAY. We are keeping a little of it for these posts, to keep their patriotism up, too, like mine and that of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the result of a poll.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a brief poem, The Two Altars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the June issue of World Affairs, organ of the American Peace Society.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an able address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a few brief suggestions on preparedness by the editor of my largest newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two resolutions, one from the city of Santa Monica with reference to national preparedness, and one from Inglewood, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to read to the Members of the House the contents of a telegram received by me this morning from leading publishers and editors of trade magazines and leading citizens of the State of Minnesota:

The undersigned think it most important that Congress remain in session during the much-talked-of crisis, if one actually exists. We also regard the defense program as urgent, and earnestly ask your support. It is our opinion that if this country faces a great emergency, the blame rests directly upon a policy of meddling and of too intemperate talking. Let's set matters right in our own country before attempting world-wide reformation. We insist upon no foreign interference in this hemisphere. Why should we interfere in the affairs of Europe?

Mr. Speaker, I concur in the sentiments expressed in this communication.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked this morning to read in the Washington Post an Associated Press dispatch which quoted from the London Times as follows:

We have to appeal to our American friends for haste and yet more urgent haste. It is essential to send, and send immediately, every available unit that can by any means be equipped. This is a necessity, by common consent, that takes absolute precedence to the defense of these islands.

By what manner of reasoning should the London Times ask that the United States of America send units of their men over to fight on foreign fields? [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain quotations from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is in addition to the request I made a while ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I have read a letter which was sent by our colleague the gentleman from Michigan to some of his colleagues in the Congress. I can hardly conceive that many of us will harbor the same sentiments that were expressed by him in that letter. I propose that hereafter, so that we can distinguish this particular missive from other missives, that we call it The Hymn of Hate by Hoffman.

Expressions such as were contained in that letter are a distinct disservice to the Government and to the people of this country. They retard the preparedness program, they promote and encourage "fifth column" activities, and I would say they do not discourage treason and disloyalty to the Government of the United States. I feel sure that there are very few Members of this Congress who will follow the suggestions made by the gentleman from Michigan, and I am sure that we Democrats on this side of the aisle will particularly watch to see if any Member of this body follows the leadership of the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, why should not President Roosevelt give the Congress the benefit and use of the War Resources Board report made last fall? The Board, appointed by the President and headed by Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., made a detailed study and report of the condition of our war resources. The main reason for the report was to have the facts in case an emergency should arise. Time and money have been spent to collect these facts. The Congress, and particularly the Military, Naval, and Appropriations Committees, whose duty it is to establish our military and naval policy, should have access to it. Why is it being held up?

What possible excuse can the President give for withholding this important data and refusing to turn the entire report over to the legislative branch of the Government during its consideration of our war resources for purposes of national defense?

There should be no partisanship in the question of preparedness and national defense, and all available facts should be presented to the Congress so as to expedite sound and necessary measures for the protection of the American people and the safeguarding of our national interests.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1 to 15, inclusive: Provides certain small increases in salary to various employees of the Senate, the proposal to make such increases being concurred in by the House.

On No. 16: Appropriates $2,000 for a contested-election case expenses as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 18, 20, 24, 25, and 26: Provides total increases of $4,274 in appropriations for salaries of employees under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol in order that certain administrative promotions may be made. The House has concurred in the action of the Senate in providing these additional funds.

On No. 19: Eliminates, as proposed by the Senate, an appropriation of $350,000, which had been provided by the House for reconstruction and repair of the terraces of the Capitol Building. The House managers recognize the need for this improvement work to be done but have deferred their approval thereof until next year in order that exclusive attention may be given to the sizable task of replacing the roofs on the House and Senate wings of the Capitol.

On Nos. 21 and 22: Appropriates $306,745, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of maintaining the Senate Office Building, instead of $254,503 as provided by the House, and makes $10,000 of this sum available for certain painting and $5,000 for the purchase of rugs as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 29: Makes $5,000 of the appropriation for acquisition of books, Library of Congress, available for traveling expenses, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,000, as provided by the Senate.

On No. 30: Appropriates $148,000 for purchase and acquisition of books for the Library of Congress, instead of $118,000 as proposed by the House and $158,000 as provided by the Senate.

On No. 31: Makes $16,500 of the appropriation to provide books for the adult blind available for payment of personal services, instead of allowing $13,000 for this purpose as proposed by the House and $20,000 as provided by the Senate.

On No. 17, relating to the pay of the legislative counsel of the Senate, is reported as in disagreement.

LOUIS C. RABAUT,
J. O. FERNANDEZ,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
ROBERT F. RICH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I hate to have to take the floor and oppose a conference report of the legislative appropriation bill, but the situation is such that I feel most keenly that I would not be doing my duty if I did not call some attention to some of the things that have been going on. I hate to do this for another reason. I believe that, generally, the legislative appropriations subcommittee has done a very good job and has held things down and they have refused to stand for increases, but there is one particular item in connection with Senate Amendment No. 28 which I feel calls for attention. I feel that the membership of the House should have its attention called to this item which relates to the legislative-reference service.

I wonder how many Members of the House realize that there are in that set-up speech writers for Members of the House. Why, I am informed that two or three of them are accustomed to gather in one Member's office.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is the objection to telling us who it is?

Mr. TABER. Well, I am not going to do that right now, but I would say that these fellows have solicited the writing of speeches for Members.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman mean that some Member of the House has Government-paid officials writing his speeches for him, or assisting in the writing of them?

Mr. TABER. I do know they are soliciting the writing of speeches and they were asked why they did not go to me and ask me if they could not write my speeches and they said they would not dare.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. That probably accounts for the low order of speeches that are delivered on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Well, I would not be surprised if some of the things that have happened here in the last year are due to that fact.

Now, the man in charge of this legislative reference service is Dr. Luther Evans. Dr. Evans was an instructor at Princeton until his communistic activities required his separation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment, when I have finished this description.

He was then the head of the writers' project on the W. P. A., and anybody who would read the productions that that outfit got out would realize that he was a total failure in that job, and as a result of his being a total failure he qualified for appointment under the new Librarian last winter as Chief of the Legislative Reference Service.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment, I will yield.

I wonder if the House wants that kind of stuff to go on. Personally, I do not.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Referring back to this speech-making, I hope and trust that none of this crowd is engaged in letter writing such as I have seen floating around here lately.

Mr. TABER. I do not know anything about letter writing. I can write my own letters and I hope the gentleman writes his.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there about the letter writing?

Mr. TABER. Well, I ought to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. I suppose the remark of the gentleman refers to a letter that I wrote to the Republicans on the 5th of June, and which in some way came into the hands of somebody on the majority side. Now, you know that eavesdroppers and fellows who get somebody else's mail and then have it reproduced and circulated never enjoy the contents; but I intend to take occasion before the session is over to give you the facts and show that the statements in the letter are true.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Lord knows that nobody would ever accuse anybody else of writing such a letter but you.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And now, if the gentleman will yield further.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. May I have 1 minute more and I shall not yield further?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I could not do that without the permission of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. COCHRAN. But this is in reference to the speech that he is making concerning the conference report.

Mr. TABER. But I promised not to yield to anybody and to use it myself.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York provided he confines his argument to the bill.

Mr. TABER. Then I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, shortly after the new Librarian was appointed, there came to my desk from the legislative reference service, prepared by them, a digest of bills. It was not really a digest, but simply an announcement of bills as contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I took that matter up with the new Librarian and called his attention to it, saying it was an absolute waste of money.

He agreed with me, and agreed it should be discontinued. I think if the gentleman will call to the attention of the new Librarian what he has just related, with reference to the legislative reference service, writing speeches for Members of Congress, that the new Librarian will see to it that they will stop writing speeches for Members of Congress or anybody else.

Mr. TABER. I would hope so, and wish I had warned the Librarian at the time he made this appointment of what he might expect. Approximately $86,000 was asked of the House committee and the House committee did not give them any of it. The Senate committee gave $42,000, and there is a compromise here of cutting the difference in two. Personally, I don't want to see this service have any more money and I am therefore opposed to this conference report. I hope that it will be rejected.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that every Member of the House should contemplate the pending conference report, and particularly the bill, as constituted, in a rather profound and solemn way, because it is an echo from the past. This legislative bill is unlike any other appropriation bill that comes to the floor of this House. It is something of a landmark. It is like plunking a stone into the recesses of memory that go back for many years. The bill reminds me of that area around Dunkerque, France, where a great rear-guard action was fought to protect retreating troops, because this legislative bill is something like that. It is a vantage point from which we fight a rear-guard action as we seek to resist the administrative and procedural "blitzkrieg" that has been changing the appropriating procedure of Congress during the last 8 years. If you have noticed this legislative appropriation bill, it identifies particularly every employee and the salary he gets. It controls the expenditures of every committee, and indicates the number of employees that shall work for the House or the Senate, in the Botanic Gardens, the Congressional Library, and elsewhere. But note the great departure there has been from this procedure. Pick up any other appropriation bill, and you will find a paragraph substantially as follows:

For salaries and administrative expenses, $4,526,433—

Or some other like figure.

There is no mention of the number of employees.

There is no mention as to the salaries that each one shall receive; there is no mention of administrative promotions or otherwise. But in this bill everything is particularized. Once upon a time that was the procedure that was followed in every appropriation bill that came to this floor.

So I say that unlike the 12 or 13 regular, supplementary, and deficiency bills that find their way through the Congress in every session there stands out apart, and singularly apart, the legislative appropriation bill which still conforms to the old procedure. There is much to be said for it. We can control the expenditures of this Government. We can control particularly the administrative abuses if we would go back to that kind of procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, I think a brief explanation of the conference report will suffice as there were no items of real contention between the House and Senate.

The bill as finally approved by the conferees carries a total appropriation of $23,671,220, which is a reduction of $2,118,392 in the Budget estimates, or nearly a 9-percent reduction. It is with some pardonable pride that I point to this accomplishment in effecting these measurable savings in the appropriations for our own establishment, and it is at least evidence that Congress, although making tremendous appropriations for all other activities of Government, is most economical when it comes to making provision for itself. I think it might be appropriate to observe, as a testimonial of some kind or another to our work, that this conference report is the first conference report that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has seen fit to attach his name to within the last 2 years.

As a matter of collateral interest, I might say that I am planning to introduce within the next few days a concurrent resolution which proposes the creation of a joint House-Senate committee to study the pay rates of all the employees of the House and Senate with a view of establishing comparable rates of salary for comparable duties performed in each of the two Houses and with the further purpose of arriving at some formula for making regular promotions to employees of the legislative establishment, who, by dint of long and faithful service merit some such consideration being shown them.

Under the present system of making appropriations for the various administrative agencies, moneys that the administrative heads are able to save as a result of lapses in salary caused by deaths, resignations, or transfers of employees can be used to make administrative promotions of employees. The net result of this practice is to afford means for the regular and consistent promotion of personnel of the administrative branch of the Government. But contrast this procedure with the manner by which we make provision for the employees of the legislative branch. We have no system whatever for affording merited step-ups in salary to our personnel. Those employees that have the ear of an influential Member are frequently successful in having their salary increased, while other employees, not having avenues for a successful approach to their purpose of gaining additional compensation, are foreclosed from consideration. Some of the salaries paid in both the House and Senate are too high and should be reduced, although I do not believe that such reduction should affect the present incumbent of any such position. On the other hand, there are undoubtedly some positions being compensated for at entirely too low a level. The joint committee my resolution proposes to set up, can proceed to correct these inequities. The Senator from Maryland, Senator TYDINGS, will introduce a resolution identical in terms in the Senate, and I sincerely hope that Congress will see fit to make provision for this study. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 86 and noes 48.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 129, not voting 62, as follows:

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 17 and agree therein with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17 and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out all the matter inserted by said Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That hereafter the compensation of the Legislative Counsel of the Senate shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and any other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEPORTATION OF HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution No. 511.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 511

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9766, a bill to authorize the deportation of Harry Renton Bridges. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule on the so-called Bridges resolution. This is frankly an unusual piece of legislation; but, equally frankly, it is to meet an unusual condition. And I wish at the outset to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] for his industry and patriotism in sponsoring this legislation.

Harry Bridges has been a guest of the United States for approximately 20 years. He is an alien, a resident of Australia, and is within the borders of the United States as a guest of this country. As such he, of course, is amenable to the laws of the country and certainly should comport himself as a guest and comport himself with the laws that govern our own American citizens. I do not have time to go into all of the details of the history of the sojourn of Mr. Bridges in this country. Suffice it to say that he has been a troublemaker. He has not comported himself in the manner that has met with the approval of American citizens generally. He has been a disturbing factor and ought to be deported from this country.

We are now in the process of expending billions of dollars of the people's money to prepare this country to meet any eventuality. The first thing we ought to do in this country is to get our own house in order and to see that we do not have within our own borders those who are guilty of or who likely would be guilty in time of a national crisis of sabotage and subversive activities. We do not want to have to wait in this country until we are spilling the lifeblood of our own nationals in defense of the country in order to rid ourselves of unwelcome guests.

I think this man ought to have been deported a long time ago. Although the conclusion of the Landis report was that he should not be deported, I say that in that report he is indicted as an unwelcome visitor to this country.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I am sorry, my time is rather limited.

I say that the Landis report shows that while he is not an admitted Communist, he has associated intimately with and has been in conference with and has gone along with the leadership of the communistic element within the borders of this country. This being true, he having alined himself with this communistic element within the country, he has not comported himself with proper respect for the institutions of our country and its Government.

CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

There can be no doubt that the power of Congress to regulate and control the admission, rejection, and deportation of aliens is an absolute one (Hawe May v. North, 183 F. 89 (C. C. A. 9th, 1910), cert. den., 223 U. S. 717 (1911)).

This is true even though an alien is entitled to the protection of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and fourteenth amendments (Skeffington v. Katzleff, 277 F. 129 (C. C. A. 1, 1923)). The rights of an alien to these protections does not deprive the Congress of its power to order the deportation of an alien whose presence in the country is deemed hurtful (Ng Hung Fo v. White, 259 U. S. 276 (1922)).

It must be remembered that there is no constitutional limit to the power of Congress to exclude or expel aliens—see Skeffington against Katzleff, supra. As a matter of fact, Congress may exercise this power, even in times of peace, for any reason it may deem sufficient (Chay Chan Ping v. United States, 130 U. S. 581 (1889)). In addition to this power that may be exercised at any time, it has been held that an alien acquires no rights by a domicile in this country that will relieve him of the effect of a decision ordering deportation by an agent of Congress, the Department of Labor (Ex parte Crawford, 165 F. 830 (D. C. N. Y. 1908)).

From the above it can be seen that the power of Congress with regard to the control of aliens is practically absolute. The question then is whether or not the exercise of this power violates article I, section 9, of the Constitution, which reads:

> No bill of attainder or exposed facto law shall be passed.

A bill of attainder has been defined as a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. However, if the punishment is less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. In its interpretation of this provision, though, the Supreme Court has held that the bill of attainder includes the bill of pains and penalties. Cummings v. State of Missouri (4 Wall. 277, 323 (1867)). In that case the Supreme Court held unconstitutional a provision of the Missouri constitution that required a so-called expurgatory oath for any person in the position of trust or responsibility. The oath was the result of the high feeling engendered during the War between the States. In holding the provision unconstitutional the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Field, said:

> It [the constitution] intended that the rights of the citizen should be secure against deprivation for past conduct by legislative enactment, under any form, however disguised. * * * Cummings v. Missouri (supra, at 325).

From the quotation thus given it can be seen that the concern of the Supreme Court was directed toward the invasion of rights of citizens, not of persons who had not attained the status of citizenship. This construction is borne out by the constitutional debates where the founding fathers were concerned principally with the bills of attainder that had originated in England and had been applied for the purpose of banishing various persons that had become undesirable. This bill was used in England for the last time in the case of Sir John Fenwick. See Hutchinson, the Foundation of the Constitution 138, 157. Bills of attainder were not unknown in the colonies, as they had been used on several occasions to secure the banishment of undesirable persons. Several colonial constitutions prohibited these bills prior to the adoption of the provision in the Constitution above referred to.

It appears clear that these bills had been aimed at persons who were citizens, as otherwise they would have been unnecessary, due to the control that is inherent in a sovereign State over its alien population. Thus the purpose of the framers of the Constitution must have been to protect the rights of citizens from being invaded by the legislature through the enactment of bills of attainder.

The absolute control of Congress of the exclusion and ejection of aliens, plus the fact that the constitutional provision prohibiting bills of attainder could only have been aimed at the protection of citizens, make it clear that an alien may be ordered to be deported by the Congress without infringing the constitutional prohibition against bills of attainder.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NICHOLS). The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. COLMER. We are going to hear a lot during the debate on the rule and the bill it makes in order about hysteria, about civil rights, civil liberties, and so forth. But let me point out to you that this man is an undesirable alien, that for 20 years he has stirred up trouble in this country. One of the first things we ought to do at this time is to get our own house in order. We should be controlled neither by hysteria nor false sentiment. False sentiment should not lead us to try to protect aliens in this country who work against the interests of the country. If this man were an American citizen rather than a guest of the country and we had the laws to deport him, he ought to be deported. If that unfortunate time should come that we get into a great international crisis, this man, even though he were a citizen of the United States, would be interned.

I think the rule ought to be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to remove Madam Perkins' Bridges. [Applause.] You will probably hear a great deal during the discussion of this rule and the bill that follows as to the constitutional powers of the House of Representatives to act. This is not exactly a new matter with me. Ten years ago when I was chairman of the Committee to Investigate Communist Activities and Propaganda in the United States the committee unanimously urged the deportation of alien agitators. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress has the power to deport any alien agitators. I do not care whether they come from the left or the right; whether they are Communists, Nazis, or just alien agitators. Even if we did not like the color of their eyes or the color of their hair, the Congress has full power under the law and the Constitution to deport them; and we have the power today to deport Harry Bridges as an undesirable alien. You do not have to prove that he is a Communist; you do not have to prove anything else except that he is an alien agitator and an undesirable alien. And I go even further: You do not even have to prove that he is an undesirable alien if the Congress thinks it is in the interest of America and our institutions to deport such a person as Harry Bridges. We not only have the right to do so, but it is our duty to do so.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman believe that a person should be deported pursuant to the statutes the Congress has enacted? And if Congress feels that those statutes are inadequate, should we not have proper remedial general legislation rather than to have the entire Congress of the United States set itself up against one man?

Mr. FISH. We are not setting ourselves up against one man.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is what you are doing.

Mr. FISH. This man is a symbol; he is a symbol of un-American activities and the "fifth columnists" in our midst. My only regret is that we have delayed so long. We should have enacted this bill 5 years ago. [Applause.] The trouble with Congress is that we tolerate these un-American activities too long. No other nation in the world would tolerate the insidious activities of an alien agitator like Harry Bridges in its midst. The time has come to find out whether Harry

Bridges, an Australian alien, or the Congress of the United States runs this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is not the Constitution designed to defend its citizens and not its enemies?

Mr. FISH. Certainly. And we have more to fear from our enemies from within than from our enemies from without. [Applause.] We have spent a lot of our time talking about our enemies from without, but it is time to clean our house from our enemies from within.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. With reference to the statement made by the gentleman from New York about the general immigration law, is it not a fact that although we have a general immigration law covering importation of aliens, we do import many aliens under special acts of Congress? This Congress has imported many aliens under special acts for which the gentleman from New York voted. Only last week the gentleman voted for such alien-import bills on the Private Calendar. If we can import aliens by special acts of Congress, we can export them by special acts.

Mr. FISH. There is no question about the power of Congress to do this. Article I, section 1 states:

> Congress shall have the power to establish uniform rules of naturalization.

We have this power and we also have the power to regulate deportations. Many years ago I went as far as to say, and I believe it today more than ever before, that we do not even have to say that an alien is a Communist, we do not even have to say he is a "fifth columnist," we do not even have to say he is an undesirable alien or an agitator; all we have to say is we do not want him in this country. We may even say we do not like the color of his hair. I hope the Congress will use its constitutional and legislative power and send this alien agitator, Harry Bridges, back to Australia where he belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not take the floor at this time to defend Bridges, nor do I take the floor to argue or persuade you to vote down the rule. I take the floor in defense of democracy and in defense of our constitutional form of government. I will give a man a chance to speak freely and I will defend that man under our Constitution. I loathe Communists as much as any Member of this House. They have no business here, and we should provide proper procedure to solve the problem by statute in order to dispose of our enemies from within. This is a problem I have talked about in this Congress for 6 long years. My appearance on this floor today is solely to bring out the fact that I do not question the right of the committee to vote out this bill, nor do I infer any bad motives. I have the highest regard for every member of my committee, and I respect their opinions. They saw the thing one way, and I may have seen the matter in another way.

The only fact I want to bring to your attention at this time is, regardless of whether it be Bridges or anyone else, he ought to have his day in court. Although I might have agreed with the committee that Bridges is an undesirable alien and should be deported, it is my contention and I still believe that Bridges should have received a hearing at the hands of the committee so that he could present, as I understand he wanted to do, his side of the case. It seems to me that this sort of procedure is wrong. I have pleaded with the members of my committee, whose opinions I regard highly, to give the man a hearing, but this was voted down. I am not here defending Communists, and I want that clearly understood. I do not want any Member to come back and say that I am right on the job in the defense of communism. My record speaks for itself. I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, about our constitutional form of government, which provides that a man has a right to his day in court, which Bridges did not receive, and that is the point I am making before this House today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true that this man Bridges has four times applied for citizenship, then when the storm was over he has withdrawn his application?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know Bridges, and I do not want to know him. But the fact remains that in the Stryker case, which is a parallel with the Bridges case, the Supreme Court exonerated Stryker. The Landis opinion exonerated Bridges. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that we have the right, that the committee and the Congress have the right; but do you want to exercise that right and go that far? It would permit any Member to introduce a private bill to deport anyone in this country for some reason or other, and I do not think that this should be done without a hearing before a committee so that evidence may be presented to sustain the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did not the gentleman introduce some bills to import them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not yield. I told you a moment ago—and I want the gentleman who injected that question to listen—that I have not introduced bills to import them. I have not introduced any bill to import anybody, and I do not question the right of the committee or the Congress to pass this bill. I am only appealing to your sense of justice that a man ought to have his day in court and he should be given a hearing. That is all I am presenting to you.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS], a member of the Dies committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, back in March 1939 I introduced a resolution to impeach the Secretary of Labor and two of her assistants for their failure—I called it conspiracy—to take the necessary action which would result in the deportation of Harry Bridges. My resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee, which carried on extensive hearings and made an investigation. The result was there was no impeachment. But a lot of water has gone over the dam since then. If there was reason then, as I was certain there was, to deport Harry Bridges, there is more reason today for doing so. All you have to do is to read the testimony given in the hearings before the Dies committee to come to a definite conclusion that Harry Bridges should be deported from the United States. I now want to read some of it to you—a paragraph from the published hearings held by the Dies committee. This is from volume No. 4. This is testimony given to the committee by Capt. John J. Keegan, chief of detectives of the Portland, Oreg., police department, a man who has made a study of not only the Bridges case but Communist activity on the Pacific coast, and this is what Captain Keegan said to the committee:

> We found that Harry Bridges, leader of the Longshoremens' Union on the Pacific coast, was an alien and a member of the Communist Party of the United States of America, and also that Harold Pritchett was a Canadian subject and also a member of the Communist Party. He is president of the Timbermens' and Saw Mill Workers' Union International; and that these two men have been active in and around the Portland area as well as in other areas on the Pacific coast; and that while they are working under the guise of labor leaders, they are in reality both members of the Communist Party; and that, based upon his investigation and the affidavits which he is in a position to furnish to the committee, he would say that their real purpose, in my belief, is to undermine the Government and overthrow it by force and violence when the proper time comes.

Since we got that particular testimony, the Dies committee has received any amount of additional testimony which conclusively shows that Harry Bridges is a Communist and a menace to our form of government and to the people of this country. This man Bridges is not only a menace to our institutions and to our Government but he is also a menace to the very people he says he represents—labor. He is more of a menace to labor in the United States than is any one other person in the country. He is doing an irreparable harm to labor. I think that labor should be more interested in having this man deported than any other group in this country.

May I say in conclusion that the people of this Nation are sick unto death with the way we have pussyfooted on this question of "fifth columnists." They are disgusted at the way the Department of Labor has coddled this man Bridges. They know he has been the blond-haired boy of the Department of Labor for the last number of years. They now want action. They are certain that the only place they can get action is in this body, the House of Representatives, so I think that today we must take favorable action not only on the rule but also on the bill in order to forthwith deport Harry Bridges, and make him an example to the entire country. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, section 9 of article I of the Constitution of the United States contains the following statement: "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." The annotated Constitution, as published by the Government Printing Office, defines a bill of attainder as a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.

In this case the House committee in charge of the bill now before us refused to give the person to be punished even a hearing, and ignored the fact that in a previous trial under due process he was acquitted from all the charges made against him and a warrant of deportation against him was dismissed.

The bill is clearly a bill of attainder within the meaning of the Constitution. Its passage would be a violation of the limitation of power imposed by the Constitution upon Congress, a violation made flagrant by the fact that the committee which reported the bill refused, by a vote of 9 to 3, to give Bridges or his counsel any hearing at all. The committee report frankly states that it deliberately recommends the deportation of Bridges without giving any reason therefor.

Last year the Department of Labor issued a warrant for the arrest of Harry R. Bridges, an alien, on the ground that he was subject to deportation under the provisions of section 2 of the act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (8 U. S. C. sec. 137). The specific charges made in the warrant against Bridges were as follows:

First. That, after he entered the United States, he became a member of an organization that advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

Second. That, after he entered the United States, he became affiliated with such an organization.

Third. That, after he entered the United States, he became a member of an organization that causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, and displayed printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

Fourth. That, after he entered the United States, he became affiliated with such an organization.

Thereafter, in the congressional district which I represent, hearings were conducted for a period of 11 weeks to enable Bridges to show cause why he should not be deported. Rarely has any defendant in a criminal action in this country been subjected to a more searching and extensive trial.

The trial examiner appointed by the Secretary of Labor to conduct this hearing was James N. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School.

The testimony covers 7,724 pages, exclusive of 274 exhibits. As indicative of the time consumed respectively by the parties, a rough count would attribute 2,900 of these pages to interrogation of witnesses by the Government, 3,600 to interrogation of witnesses by counsel for the alien, 500 to interrogation of witnesses by the examiner and the balance to proceedings of a miscellaneous nature. Of the 274 exhibits, 138 were introduced by the Government and 136 by the alien.

Contrary to the usual procedure in such cases, the hearings were open to the public.

On December 28 last, the trial examiner, Dean Landis, reported to the Secretary of Labor that—

> My conclusions are that the evidence does not permit the finding that Harry R. Bridges is either a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with that party.

In his report, the trial examiner, Dean Landis, made a very lengthy analysis of the testimony of all of the important witnesses who testified during the hearings, and set forth carefully the features of their testimony which led him to his conclusions.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has completely ignored the trial and acquittal of Bridges. The bill now under consideration would authorize his deportation by an arbitrary act of Congress, without giving any reason therefor. This is stated plainly in the committee report on this bill.

In other words, although Harry Bridges has been arrested, kept in jeopardy of deportation for a period of 11 weeks during one of the most searching and exhaustive trials in the history of American immigration law, and finally exonerated and acquitted by the findings of one of the most eminent legal scholars in America who acted as the trial examiner, it is now proposed by this legislation to disregard all of these facts and deport him forthwith without regard to right or justice.

My opposition to this bill is not in any sense a plea for the leniency to the individual, Harry Bridges. My acquaintance with him is very slight.

But I am deeply concerned with the violence which such an action would do to certain fundamental American principles which I hold dearer than anything else in life. The intense inquisition to which this man was subjected during his lengthy trial last year did not reveal a single ground upon which a criminal action could be brought against him. But he has been the leader of a powerful and militant branch of organized labor and has led the membership of his organization through several bitter strikes. I say to you without hesitation that the enmities aroused by his militant leadership in these industrial conflicts are primarily responsible for the determined campaign to deport him from this country. Whether the Members of Congress realize it at the time or not, if Harry Bridges is deported by this action it will be because he has been a militant leader of labor. Congress could, and should, logically proceed, therefore, to punish by special legislation all labor leaders who have conducted strikes in which violence has occurred.

I am an advocate of complete preparedness for national defense, and as a Member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House I have given my wholehearted support to the program of expansion of national armament which is now under consideration. If I believed for one moment that the continued presence of Harry Bridges in this country constituted a menace to the safety of the Nation because of a danger that he might become a leader in a "fifth-column" activity, I would undoubtedly give my support to legislation designed to remove such a menace. But there is no justification for such a belief except the suspicions and unsupported accusations directed against him by those who hate his labor record.

I am under no illusions as to the unpopularity in certain circles of the position which it is my duty to assume here today. The gentleman from Louisiana, who is the author of this bill, said he could not conceive how any American could oppose it. I say to you that it is because I am an American—because the America I love, and which my forefathers helped to create, is the America of tolerance, of freedom from oppression, of refuge for political exiles, of civil liberties for all—and because I fear that these sacred institutions of freedom which constitute the very heart of the America which I love are endangered by the exercise of ruthless power such as is here contemplated—because of all these things I am constrained to ignore the criticism which

I know is in store for me, and to appear here in opposition to this rule.

One hundred and forty-two years ago the Federalists, representative privileged and money classes, were responsible for the adoption of drastic Alien and Sedition Acts. President Thomas Jefferson later drafted resolutions declaring the alien and sedition acts null and void and in violation of the Constitution.

Congress, in considering this measure, should remember the inscription on the Statue of Liberty:

Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to be free, the wretched refuse of your teeming shore; send these, the homeless, the tempest-tost to me; I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

Does Congress wish this inscription on the Statue of Liberty to be erased? [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-half minute, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, Premier Reynaud's message to President Roosevelt, made well before his speech at Charlottesville, said, "Italy has struck her neighbor in the back with a dagger."

President Roosevelt in his speech Monday night said, "Italy has driven a dagger into the back of her neighbor."

I hope that the time has not come in America when our President's state papers are dictated and copied from foreign capitals. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California, who preceded me, was clearly in error as to whether or not the Congress can deport Harry Bridges. Two questions present themselves to the Congress. The first one is, can we deport Harry Bridges? The second one is, should we deport Harry Bridges? Those who say we cannot do it rely upon constitutional provisions which interdict a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law. Let us look for a moment at what Mr. Justice Field said in the case of Cummings v. State of Missouri (4 Wall. 277):

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without prejudicial trial.

If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties.

Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties.

Remember that word "punishment" because that is vital.

By an ex post facto law is meant one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed, or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed, or changes the rule of evidence by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was required.

Let us see whether or not under that definition the bill before us constitutes a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law. I quote from the case of Wong Wing v. United States (163 U. S. 229, at p. 236), the opinion of Mr. Justice Shiras, May 18, 1896:

The order of deportation is not a punishment for crime.

It is not a punishment; that is where the gentleman from California fell into error.

It is not a banishment in the sense in which that word is often applied to the expulsion of a citizen from his country by way of punishment.

It is but a method of enforcing the return to his own country of an alien who has not complied with the conditions upon the performance of which the Government of the Nation, acting within its constitutional authority and through the proper departments, has determined that his continuing to reside here shall depend.

So it is not a punishment for a crime. Get that in mind. Congress is clearly within its authority. This is not an ex post facto law or a bill of attainder.

Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr GAVAGAN rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no time; I am sorry.

Now, let me quote just a little further upon the advisability and the wisdom and the authority of the judicial branch to impose any restriction upon the Congress in this matter, quoting now from the case of Li Sing v. United States (180 U. S., p. 486), the opinion of Mr. Justice Shiras:

The question whether and upon what conditions these aliens shall be permitted to remain within the United States being one to be determined by the political departments of the Government, the judicial department cannot properly express an opinion upon the wisdom, the policy, or the justice of the measures enacted by Congress in the exercise of the powers confided to it by the Constitution over this subject.

What more is necessary in answering question No. 1 as to whether the Congress can deport Harry Bridges? The Congress can do so, and it is neither ex post facto nor a bill of attainder.

The second question is, Shall we deport Harry Bridges? I think the answer to that can be found in the special report which was filed by Dean Landis on special appointment as trial examiner in the Harry Bridges case, and all you need to do is to read his conclusions regarding the activities of Harry Bridges. Here is what Dean Landis says:

Bridges' relationships to the Communist Party have already been sketched at length. They are, in general, his well-defined opposition toward "red" baiting; his acceptance of aid and assistance in his industrial struggles from the Communist Party—indeed, his solicitation of that aid; his expressed disinclination to disavow that help; his association with persons admittedly Communists, an association that derives primarily from his requests for and acceptance of such aid. There are, specifically, his support of the Western Worker during the 1934 maritime strike; his requests for aid in connection with such issues as the King-Ramsay-Connor and Modesto cases and the United Labor Party ticket; his not infrequent conferences with the Communist officials on the Pacific coast in regard to these and other matters; his admiration of the sincerity of persons in the trade-union movement, some of whom were avowedly Communists; and his willingness to work with them in the realization of his trade-union ideas.

This evidence, however much it may disclose lack of judgment or associations that may be regarded by others as reprehensible or unfortunate, falls short of the statutory definition of affiliation. Persons engaged in bitter industrial struggles tend to seek help and assistance from every available source. But the intermittent solicitation and acceptance of such help must be shown to have ripened into those bonds of mutual cooperation and alliance that entail continuing reciprocal duties and responsibilities before they can be deemed to come within the statutory requirement of affiliation. Judge Chase, in Kettunen v. Reimer (79 F. (2d) 315), and the other judges in the cases heretofore reviewed, insist upon the application of this standard. To expand that statutory definition to embrace within its terms ad hoc cooperation on objectives whose pursuit is clearly allowable under our constitutional system, or friendly associations that have not been shown to have resulted in the employment of illegal means, is warranted neither by reason nor by law.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the language of Dean Landis himself, who rendered a 150-page opinion in this case, indicates to all the world the answer to the second question, the undesirability of keeping Harry Bridges in the United States.

The authorities are clearly all on one side that we can deport him, and I think the evidence is all on one side that he should be deported. As I make this statement I want to pay my gracious testimony to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. LOUIS GRAHAM, on the Republican side, former United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who has handled many deportation cases and who has dug out much of the law. I am willing to go along with that gentleman because he is an expert from long practice and from an experience of 38 years at the bar. When he says to me we can do it and that he has done it, as a practical matter, that resolves question No. 1 whether we can deport Harry Bridges.

On question No. 2, take the record of Dean Landis and it is an answer as to whether he should be deported.

Let me add that the bill before us ought to be modified in language so as to make it absolutely mandatory, so that there is no power in or out of government to stop these deportation proceedings. [Applause.]

Now to summarize the situation before us, the decisions are quite clear and unequivocal that the element of punishment must be present to make a legislative act fall within the prohibition of the Constitution on bills of attainder and ex post facto enactments. Deportation in the language of the court is not a punishment. Therefore, the measure before us is neither a bill of attainder or an ex post facto act. Congress can therefore deport Harry Bridges.

As to the question of whether Congress should issue a legislative mandate to deport him, the record is abundantly clear on that point. His undesirability has been fairly well established.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I fully appreciate, especially at this time, that it will be very unpopular to say anything in the defense of Harry Bridges, or in opposition to the deportation bill pending before us, but notwithstanding that fact, I feel it my solemn duty to call attention to the House and the country that such legislation is in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights.

I feel there is not a lawyer of experience who is a Member of the House who will have the temerity to claim that the bill will be held constitutional. But notwithstanding this, they may and probably will support the bill, because it will subject them to the lesser amount of criticism. I predict there will be very few who will have the courage to vote according to their innermost convictions.

However, Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a time to give real serious consideration to a measure before deviating in any way from our constitutional restrictions and privileges, this is the time. But, unfortunately, due to the well-organized and Nation-wide attacks upon this labor leader, and I deplore and regret the fact he is not an American citizen, I fear the country believes him to be a dangerous person who should not be permitted to remain in the United States. One can hardly blame the people for being of this opinion in the face of a persistent and systematic campaign to have him publicized as an extreme and dangerous Communist. Unfortunately, those who ordinarily believe in fair and square dealing and just treatment never were able to obtain his side of the case.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization reported the bill without giving him or his attorney a minute's time, and even when the bill was before the Rules Committee no one was given a chance to show that many of these charges and accusations were not founded on facts. Personally, I have received hundreds of telegrams and letters from nearly all the labor organizations, urging that opportunity be granted Mr. Bridges to defend himself, but it was of no avail. The resolution, same as the bill, was forced through without granting his appeals and requests. Only a few days ago I received a personal letter from Mr. Bridges, and I presume a similar letter was mailed to others, and I feel that you Members who are going to vote for the rule and his deportation may some day, after you have acted and have had time to peruse this letter, realize that Mr. Bridges clearly and positively denies all the accusations, and, for that reason, I am going to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point and include this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks and to include therein a letter from Harry Bridges. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, since obtaining the unanimous consent to insert Mr. Bridges' letter in the RECORD, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has obtained unanimous consent to read the letter, and, therefore, to save space and prevent repetition, I shall not avail myself of the unanimous consent, because that letter will appear in Mr. MARCANTONIO's remarks.

In lieu of his letter, I will quote extracts from an editorial by Chester Rowell, one of the most prominent editors on the Pacific coast, which appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle May 24, 1940, and which is entitled to our thought and consideration:

> Congress is still playing with the idea of deporting Harry Bridges by bill of attainder, regardless of the constitutional prohibition of such a process. It is a curious paradox that those who shout most loudly for the Constitution are often those least familiar with its provisions and least concerned for granting to others the rights it guarantees to themselves. In this case, since the effort to deport Bridges by due process of law failed on a finding of want of proof, it is proposed to substitute undue process of attainder. For surely, these objectors conclude, Bridges is an "undesirable alien," since they do not desire him. And if it is pointed out that there is no general law for the deportation of aliens merely because they are "undesirable," what could be simpler than a special law for the deportation of this particular undesired one?
> The general right of an alien who legally entered the country to remain here unless found guilty of deportable offense cannot be taken away by a special legislative act declaring him guilty of that offense without hearing and imposing on him a penalty not thereby applied to others. This is the exact "bill of attainder" which the Constitution forbids. It had been a real evil, under despotic governments in England. It has since passed so far out of use and memory that most people had forgotten even the constitutional provision against it. This Bridges resolution is the first time it has been proposed in American history.
> In these times, when feeling runs high and when the "fifth column," which has proved so dangerous elsewhere, may have to be dealt with here, it is especially important that we realize the importance of proceeding against only actual evils, and not even against them by denying rights whose protection is important to all of us. There was too much of that, under less provocation, in the last war. The temptation may be greater now, which is the greater reason for being on our guard against it.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat what I have said on the floor a dozen times, that I am just as much opposed to communism as nazi-ism, and you know my position on nazi-ism and fascism. But this man, whom we are about to order deported, positively states that he is not a Communist, and that he believes in a democratic form of government. The fact that his son has served and has reenlisted in the Army of the United States, and in view of the further fact that he, himself, by telegraph, nearly 2 years ago called attention of the President and the Department of Justice to some of the subversive activities of the real culprits, namely, certain members of the German Bund and the Nazi organizations, should satisfy anyone that he cannot be a Communist.

He admits that he has received aid from many organizations, religious and political leaders, including even Communists, in his effort to organize the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which he accomplished and which is one of the strongest and most democratic and representative labor organizations in the United States today. Not only does he make clear that although every effort has been made to bribe him, he remained steadfast in his duties toward his coworkers, which brought about higher wages and shorter hours. I view this fight as one angle of the eternal effort of great and powerful employers to descredit organized labor—as only that and nothing more.

Some day, in the near future, the country will know what organization or what men are really guilty of subversive activities specialized in by agents of the "fifth column." In fact, in the last few days it has been made clear that it is the Nazis and the Fascists in our country who are the dangerous elements within our midst, but, as I stated sometime ago, in their shrewd and clever manner, they continue to insinuate and accuse every progressive labor leader of being communistic so as to divert attention from their own subversive activities.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that among others that will speak for the resolution will be the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], and I predict he will continue to assail Mr. Bridges as a Communist and as a danger to America. I am commencing to strongly feel that this may be for the purpose of distracting attention from the activities of the "fifth columnists," namely, the Nazis.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked with several of the Members of Congress from the State of California, who know Mr. Bridges and of his activities, and with the exception of two Members, they all feel that the shipping interests are behind the movement to bring about this action which we are about to take.

The specific charges made in the warrant against Bridges were four in number:

(1) That, after he entered the United States, he became a member of an organization that advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United State.

(2) That, after he entered the United States, he became affiliated with such an organization.

(3) That, after he entered the United States, he became a member of an organization that causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, and displayed printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

(4) That, after he entered the United States, he became affiliated with such an organization.

Bridges went through 9 weeks of investigation and trial, and throughout he was courteous, respectful, and helpful to the court and investigators, frankly answering all questions, showing no resentment nor evasiveness at any time. The trial examiner was James M. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School, especially selected by the Labor Department because of his recognized ability and standing with the American bar. His finding, covering 152 printed pages, was a complete exoneration of Bridges, and was as follows:

Conclusion: The evidence therefore establishes neither that Harry R. Bridges is a member of nor affiliated with the Communist Party of the United States of America.

Out of the hundreds of telegrams and letters that I have received protesting the passage of this bill I will tax the RECORD with but a few:

We vigorously urge the House Rules Committee to reject and bury H. R. 9766. The matter of the deportation of Harry Bridges has been acted upon by the recognized judicial bodies of this country and his innocence has been duly established. For your committee now to recommend any action contrary to the decision handed down by those judicial bodies would, in our opinion, be a miscarriage of justice and a violation of basic democratic principles.

SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND NEWSPAPER GUILD,
CHARLES L. IRVINE,
Executive Secretary.

Five hundred marine radio officers, members American Communications Association, protest against and urge defeat of H. R. 9766, intended to deport Harry Bridges, C. I. O. director in California, as nullifying the Bill of Rights and denial of civil liberties.

AMERICAN COMMUNICATIONS ASSOCIATION,
Local 2, New York City.

International Woodworkers of America, representing 100,000 organized woodworkers in 23 States, unqualifiedly denounce H. R. 9766 as being not only discriminatory and designed to crush organized labor but as unconstitutional and opposed to the democratic rights on which our governmental structure is based.

B. J. MCCARTY,
Secretary-Treasurer, Seattle, Wash.

Some of the speeches here today are suggestive of that state of hysteria that was prevalent in this Chamber in the days preceding the vote that put us in the World War. Calm judgment becomes almost impossible where hysteria exists.

Some of the speakers painted Bridges as the foremost lawbreaker of the country. If he has broken even one of our laws, why has he not been arrested, convicted, and put in jail?

Most of the speakers say that he was an agitator, and that he made people discontented. Every single step of progress that the human race has achieved since the curtain rose on the dawn of civilization was the result of agitation. If there had not been agitation by Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and a lot of others, we would not be under the American flag today, but still under the flag of Great Britain. If we ourselves had not done a little agitating among our home folks, all of us would still be down on the farm, or to say the least, we would not be here.

If there had not been 50 years of agitation, women today would not have the vote. Before the Constitution was amended to make woman suffrage constitutional, it was held that women were not "people" within the meaning of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and therefore were not eligible to vote. But the women started agitating, resorting to such tactics as chaining themselves to lamp posts, and in other ways making themselves so disagreeable that their agitation finally brought results.

If there had never been any agitating, there would never have been any labor unions, and if there had never been any labor unions, workers would still be working 12 and 14 hours per day at pitifully small wages as they were in the steel mills before organized labor succeeded through agitation in making the workers so discontented they went on strikes until thereby they finally succeeded in improving their conditions and standards of living. Agitation has been responsible for every bit of progressive legislation that has ever passed this House of Representatives in which we today have been so vehemently decrying and denouncing agitation. When agitation ceases, all reforms and improvements will cease, and we will become a decadent people and Nation.

Mr. Speaker, though I know the bill under consideration will pass by a tremendous majority, I, myself, personally, conscious of my oath of office to uphold the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights, cannot bring myself to the point of being willing to take the responsibility of voting for this bill which I believe is unjust, definitely unconstitutional, and a violation of the Bill of Rights.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has properly presented the case in behalf of this bill to deport Harry Bridges. I am glad that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], chairman of the Immigration Committee of the House, has admitted that by special act of Congress we can legally export individual aliens, because day after day his committee favorably reports special act bills to import individual aliens. I respectfully submit these facts to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], who has voted for many special act bills to import individual aliens.

I hold in my hand—and this is not hearsay—a 72-page document entitled "Why Communism?" by M. J. Olgin. I shall quote briefly from this Communist document, which is published by the Workers Library Publishers, of New York City, which is the official Communist publishing house in the United States. At the bottom of the last page, page 72, appears a symbol which is not the symbol of the United States, but the hammer and sickle, symbol of the Communist bloody red butchers of Moscow. Beneath this symbol appear the words, "Emblem of the Communist Party."

I now quote from page 72 of this Communist publication, as follows:

The seat of the Comintern is Moscow because this is the capital of the only workers' and peasants' government in the world, and the Comintern can meet there freely. As the workers become the rulers of other countries the Comintern will not have to confine its meetings to Moscow alone.

The Communist Party of the United States of America is thus part of a world-wide organization which gives it guidance and enhances its fighting power. Under the leadership of the Communist Party the workers of the United States of America will proceed from struggle to struggle, from victory to victory, until, rising in a revolution, they will crush the capitalist state, establish a Soviet state, abolish the cruel and bloody system of capitalism and proceed to the upbuilding of socialism.

This is why every worker must join the Communist Party.

Mr. Speaker, from page 32 of this Communist bible I quote the following:

We Communists say that there is one way to abolish the capitalist state, and that is to smash it by force. To make communism possible the workers must take hold of the state machinery of capitalism and destroy it.

Mr. Speaker, chapter 6 of this Communist booklet is entitled "The Revolutionary Overthrow of Capitalism and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat," and I now read from page 59, as follows:

It is not necessary that this final blow, i. e., the revolution, should come in connection with an imperialist war, although this is very likely. Capitalism will seek to prevent a revolution by plunging the country into war. War is to serve not only as a way out of the crisis but as a means to arouse the patriotism of the masses, to increase governmental terror (martial law), and to divert public attention from internal affairs. War, under such conditions, for a while retarding the revolutionary movement, may hasten it later when the war sufferings begin to tell on the masses.

A time comes when there is demoralization above, a growing revolt below; the morale of the army is also undermined. The old structure of society is tottering. There are actual insurrections; the army wavers. Panic seizes the rulers. A general uprising begins.

Workers stop work, many of them seize arms by attacking arsenals. Many had armed themselves before as the struggles sharpened. Street fights become frequent. Under the leadership of the Communist Party, the workers organize revolutionary committees to be in command of the uprising. There are battles in the principal cities. Barricades are built and defended. The workers' fighting has a decisive influence with the soldiers. Army units begin to join the revolutionary fighters; there is fraternization between the workers and the soldiers, the workers and the marines. The movement among the soldiers and marines spreads. Capitalism is losing its strongest weapon, the army. The police as a rule continue fighting, but they are soon silenced and made to flee by the united revolutionary forces of workers and soldiers. The revolution is victorious.

Mr. Speaker, under a heading entitled "The Question of Force and Violence," which appears on page 61, we find:

But this is force and violence, somebody will contend. Don't you Communists know that the use of force and violence is wrong? We reply to this, first, that if being a red-blooded American means anything, it means that you must not take punishment lying down, that you must offer resistance; secondly, that it is not the workers but the capitalists and their state that start the use of force and violence.

Mr. Speaker, we also find in chapter 6 of this Communist publication under the heading "The Soviet state" the following language, which appears on page 63:

This Government has the great task of taking away from the owners the plants, factories, railroads, banks, and turning them into public property to be administered by the workers for the common benefit of all. In other words, it is the task of the Soviets to abolish private property in the means of production and to establish socialist production and distribution.

This cannot be accomplished peacefully. The exploiters won't give up their loot, even after their state power is crushed. They will have to be routed. The Soviet Government will have to expropriate the expropriators by force. The latter will conspire and plot against the new system; they will organize counterrevolutionary uprisings. The Soviet state will have to crush these with an iron hand. The former exploiters will be given no quarter. The old system of robbery with all its rubbish will have to be cleared away. This means that the Soviet state must be ruthless; it must destroy the counterrevolutionary forces—the quicker the better for the workers and for the future of mankind. This is why the Soviet State is named Dictatorship of the Proletariat. It is the reverse of capitalist dictatorship. It does not pretend to be a government treating all on the basis of equality. It openly declares itself to be a class government, directed against the former ruling class. It is avowedly an instrument for the expropriation and suppression of the former exploiters and oppressors. It is a government of the former exploited and oppressed. And it does away with exploitation and oppression forever. As soon as private property is abolished, as soon as the industrial machinery of the country has become socialized; as soon as the individual farmers have been induced, for their own advantage, to unite in collective farms, exploitation of man by man ceases to exist. That means freedom.

Mr. Speaker, the alien British subject Harry Bridges was the ringleader of the indefensible San Francisco general strike. Let us examine the record of this Communist manifesto and observe that this strike was a part of the Communist United Front program.

It is for this reason that we Communists have been advocating and organizing the United Front for the last few years. While we have met with resistance on the part of many reformist union leaders and leaders of the Socialist Party, we have met with response among the workers and farmers. Thus, united May Day demonstrations, united anti-Facist and antiwar demonstrations, united fights for home relief, united campaigns for social insurance, and, above all other things, the great San Francisco general strike have been brought about.

Mr. Speaker, that is the destructive general strike which was led by Harry Bridges, the alien British subject. He is a Communist agent and an able leader of the "fifth column," linked with the bloody "red" Communist butchers in Moscow by their own publication which I hold in my hand and from which I have quoted. Alien Harry Bridges has been carrying on a guerilla warfare in order to paralyze and obtain control of our American merchant marine, which is an essential arm of our national defense, just as essential as airplanes, cruisers, submarines, and battleships.

Mr. Speaker, are we going to permit an alien Communist controlled and directed foreign agent like Harry Bridges to hamstring and control our American merchant marine which is an essential arm of our national defense? With all of the potential dangers confronting our country are we going to permit an alien agent of Communist Russia or any other foreign country to control any part of our national defense, whether it be the battle fleet, a squadron of airplanes, or our merchant marine? I do not intend to do so, and will therefore vote for this pending bill to deport alien Harry Bridges, a big-shot leader of the Communist United Front.

Mr. Speaker, the record of Bridges is such as would justify a unanimous vote to deport this alien Communist agent who has been doing everything he can to advance the Communist program to destroy the Government of the United States from within and replace it with a Soviet Communist system as outlined in the Communist publication from which I have quoted verbatim. Let no one who votes against this Bridges deportation bill ever claim to be opposed to alien "fifth columns" whose purpose is to destroy our American constitutional system of government.

Mr. Speaker, this Communist publication indicates that the Communists in the United States are linked directly to the Communists in Soviet Russia and that they aim by revolution to transform our American constitutional democracy into a collective Soviet state, destroy lives and savings of our people, penalize success, discourage thrift, destroy private business enterprise and sacred rights and liberties while smothering the vital energies of a free people and shackling them in bonds of regimented political and economic slavery.

The record reveals that the Communists in Russia have effaced in blood every trace of justice, liberty, morality, and individual human and private property rights. We know that the Communists in all lands including the United States openly proclaim their loyalty to the hammer and sickle red flag and regard Moscow as the world capital and Red Soviet Russia as their fatherland. This attitude harmonizes with the international character of the constitution of the Soviet Union adopted in Moscow in 1923, the first article of which describes the world as a battlefield divided between socialism and capitalism. The record also conclusively proves that the Communists in Russia have not only repealed the Ten Commandments of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, but have confiscated private property, destroyed sacred rights and liberties, and the lives of millions of people in order to chain the living in bonds of gangster autocracy.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the record I believe that there is no more fitting way to uphold, defend, and preserve our American constitutional form of Government with its sacred rights and liberties than to overwhelmingly vote for this bill to deport Harry Bridges, to the end "that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth" as nobly said by the martyred Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to pause for a moment and analyze the procedure that we are following here and then ask ourselves the question as to whether or not we should feel ashamed of ourselves.

We are asking that the Congress of the United States, in all its dignified might, direct the deportation of one individual. The only basis upon which that request is being made is a statement contained in the supplemental report accompanying the bill to the effect that Bridges is regarded by the framers of this bill as a menace to the interests of this country. In other words, we are asked to deport one individual—all of Congress against this one individual—based on the conclusion contained in the report from this committee. Bridges was not given any hearing before the Committee on Immigration. He was not permitted to be heard before the Rules Committee. This is the first time in the history of this country that a man is being convicted and sentenced without being given an opportunity to defend himself. Any alien, no matter how heinous the crime may be for which he is being deported, is given a hearing. He is given a hearing before the immigration officials. Then that hearing is reviewed. It is reviewed before a Board of Appeals of the Labor Department. Then that alien has an opportunity to go to court and be heard on a writ of habeas corpus. But in this case no hearing, no opportunity to be heard at all was afforded, and we consider that perfectly sound American procedure. If that is sound American procedure and the majority of Congress is going to put its stamp of approval on this type of procedure, I do not believe I am mistaken when I say that the day is not far off when those same Members who put their stamp of approval on this procedure will be ashamed of the action that they are about to take today. We all know the real reason for this attempted deportation of Bridges. Bridges organized the workers on the west coast and made the labor exploiters pay decent wages. Now, taking advantage of the war hysteria, these same labor exploiters seek his deportation and use Congress for this foul job.

I have before me a letter from Harry Bridges. I think it is only fair that Bridges be accorded just this opportunity to have some Member of Congress read an answer to the charges that have been made against him. I now place this proposition before the House: I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I be permitted to read this letter, which is seven pages long, and that it not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NICHOLS). The gentleman from New York asks permission to read a letter and that it not be taken out of the time for debate on this resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The Speaker pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. I would like to know if it is in order to make a motion to that effect?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, since objection has been heard——

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on the objections that have been made to my request, but I do think that now it becomes very, very obvious to every Member in this Chamber that you are asked to convict and sentence a man without giving him an opportunity to even have a Member of Congress read a letter which presents his answer to the charges that have been made on the floor of the House, leave alone the fact that you have already denied him every opportunity to be heard.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I agree with the gentleman that he should be given an opportunity to read the letter, and I hope the gentleman will ask permission to read it under general debate.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I would be denied this privilege under general debate.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. MASON. I want to suggest that the gentleman will have plenty of time to read that letter when the bill is being read, by striking out the last word, and I hope he does it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I say to the gentleman that I will be in no different position then than I am now. When the bill is being read for amendment all I will have is 5 minutes and I will have to make the same request which has been objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. All right. Let us proceed with the legislative lynching.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection, to the gentleman's request.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] be allowed to proceed for 7 minutes without its being taken out of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has withdrawn his objection. Does the gentleman from New York wish to renew his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to read the letter dated June 1, comprising 7 pages, addressed to me by Harry Bridges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I object. This man has had too much time already, and the sooner you find that out the better.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. You would not hear him before the committee. Why? Do you not want the Congress to have his side before it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from New York be given 15 minutes' additional time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to make such a motion. Under the rules the time is controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from New York. The gentleman's motion is not in order. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to read this letter?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, the letter from Harry Bridges reads as follows:

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION,
San Francisco, Calif., June 1, 1940.

Hon. VITO MARCANTONIO,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My purpose in addressing this communication to you is in order that you may know certain facts concerning the attempts at my deportation and certain facts in connection with my official and personal background that may not be generally known.

First, as to my personal record in connection with citizenship. On March 26, 1940, Representative LELAND M. FORD placed a letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD including an article that appeared in the American Legion magazine. This letter was full of misstatements and inferences and unwarranted conclusions. The magazine article was a reprint from a metropolitan daily newspaper, the Capitol Daily, of Washington, D. C., of February 15, 1939, and the statement is made that this article itself provides sufficient evidence of my undesirability.

I first filed application papers for citizenship in 1921. In 1928, prior to the expiration of my papers, I filed for second or final papers in the city of San Francisco and, after the application had been sent to Washington, was notified to appear in the United States District Court in San Francisco with witnesses to receive my final papers.

I appeared with witnesses at the time and place indicated by the notice and was then notified by the local immigration authorities that all final steps, including the actual granting of final papers, must be taken prior to the expiration of first papers. I have the records to prove this, including the notice to appear at the district court with a notation in red pencil on the notice by the immigration authorities to pay particular attention to the date as my papers expired soon.

The point is that I almost completed the getting of my final papers, even to appearing at court with witnesses. I have since been informed by my attorneys that the advice that I received at that time was faulty and that I was legally entitled to go ahead as long as my application for final papers was filed, as it was, prior to the expiration of the first papers.

Immediately following this I filed another application for citizenship papers but was forced, of course, to wait 2 years under the law until I could apply for second or final papers.

Two years later—that is, when it was time for me to again apply for second and final papers—the country as a whole and myself were affected by the depression. Very frankly, from 1930 and the following several years the necessary money, around $20, to secure final papers was beyond my ability to raise.

I had been and was still in difficulties with the company union on the water front and suffered blacklisting and discrimination for that reason.

At that time it took me 2 or 3 weeks to earn $20, and I had a wife and two children to support.

Late in 1932, September to be exact, and from then on through 1933 and 1934 my activities along organizational lines became very much the concern of the company union and the shipowners on the water front.

My second set of first papers expired in 1935. From 1933 on, I was active in union matters, and the union was engaged in a series of disputes with the shipowners. Because of my activities in these disputes, the shipowners were out to get me.

At the particular period my papers should have been procured the maritime unions were engaged in a sympathetic boycott or strike in support of British Columbia water front workers, and I, together with other officials, was called back to Washington, D. C., by Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady on this matter.

Incidentally, at this time I was publicly being accused of being a British secret agent concerned with disrupting American shipping to the advantage of British shipping inasmuch as British ships were able to ply to and from the ports of British Columbia but the American ships refused to handle strike-bound or unfair cargo in support of the striking B. C. workers.

All in all, at this time my own conclusions, together with advice and information from sources I had no reason to doubt, were that I would be denied citizenship if I attempted to complete my application, mainly for the reasons I have stated here.

There were other reasons, none of them, however, the reasons charged against me by my enemies.

In addition, numerous charges had already been made against me by employer groups, the American Legion subversive activities committee headed by one Harper Knowles, and others, and again it was definitely my opinion, based on advice of many to whom I went, that I would have a hard time procuring any citizenship papers until these charges were investigated by immigration authorities or some other governmental authority and I was cleared of these charges.

I was afraid to risk being refused citizenship, knowing that such refusal based on false statements would react against me and my union activities.

The American Legion article claims other acts that make me undesirable, namely, not behaving as a person of good moral character, and second, by swearing to false statements.

These charges are made on the basis of conclusions not drawn from facts but on baseless assumptions regarding my marriage and the legitimacy of my daughter.

The facts are as follows: I have two children—one a stepson and one my own daughter. My stepson, Kenneth McCley, was born on July 27, 1916, in Marshfield, Oreg., and my daughter, Betty, was born December 26, 1924, in San Francisco. It should be noticed that the immigration official checking the records merely stated that he found no records and from this failure to find records the deduction is made that I am not married, and therefore my daughter is illegitimate. It is also claimed that I have made false statements, because on one set of papers I said I had one child and on the other set that I had two children.

It is correct that on one set of papers, the recent ones, I stated I had one child living at home, my own daughter. My stepson at that time had left home. He left home to join the United States Army, and in the last 2 or 3 weeks has just reenlisted for his second period and is now stationed at the San Francisco Presidio.

My marriage is legal. I have my marriage certificate. I should not be held responsible for failure of investigators working secretly to find such records. At no time was I asked or approached by any Government official to produce the records.

I might also mention that at no time did I make any effort to conceal anything from the local immigration authorities in San Francisco and that I sought their advice regarding the filling out of my application papers for citizenship.

Certain other matters should be mentioned. In addition to being an organizing force in the trade-union movement on the west coast, I have engaged in other forms of activity in connection with my official position.

No one can deny the improvement in the conditions of the maritime workers since they were organized. No one can deny that the organization of the longshoremen in 1934 led to the organization of all other maritime unions where before that time none existed. Through organization the Pacific coast longshoremen have won American wages, hours, and working conditions, and eliminated longshore unemployment. The method of hiring and dispatching longshoremen to so equalize the work, create jobs, and relieve unemployment was made the subject of a study by the United States Government, and the conclusions reached by this study enthusiastically endorsed the progress made through waterfront organization and the beneficial effect on the maritime industry.

All charges of union dictatorship and gangsterism that have been made can best be answered by simply pointing out that I have taken the lead and been mainly responsible, together with other of our union leaders and members of the rank and file, in building what is, as far as we know, the most democratic union in the America labor movement.

All officials of our international union, including myself, are subject to an initiative petition of recall that can immediately remove us from office, upon being signed by any 15 percent of our membership in good standing.

The recall can remove any official, including myself without a trial and our union constitution prevents any retaliatory steps being taken against those persons or groups that initiate the recall petition. After the recall petition is circulated, the officials are immediately removed and then placed on trial. If necessary, the results of the trial can be referred by the petition signers to a secret ballot of our entire membership.

All officials including myself must be elected each year by a secret ballot of our entire membership and must receive a majority of all votes cast to be elected. Both primary and final elections are held in order to assure a majority of votes being received by the elected officials.

In the last 3 years I have been unopposed for office despite numerous nominations made against me, all of whom declined.

In addition to union activities, organizations, etc., given solely to the matters of hours, wages, and working conditions, we have also been in the forefront on issues of a somewhat different nature.

It is less than 2 years ago that I wired the President of the United States concerning Nazi spy and sabotage activity in west coast aircraft plants. I personally sat down with Congressman JERRY VOORHIS on this matter and did everything possible to bring it to the attention of the proper governmental authorities, including the Department of Justice. It was also brought to the attention of the Government that the brother of one of the German agents that was arrested in the New York spy ring some time ago was still at that time holding an important position in the Boeing Aircraft plant in Seattle, together with other Nazi bund members.

I attempted to bring to the attention of the Federal Government and also stated to Congressman VOORHIS that our union people in the aircraft plants had noticed that German and Japanese agents apparently buying airplanes had easy access to airplane manufacturing plants in California, whereas many American people were closely questioned and excluded from these plants.

It should be remembered that my telegram to the President of the United States concerning this Nazi activity was dispatched just a few hours prior to the crash of the Douglas plane at the Douglas flying field in southern California, when it developed that a so-called Douglas mechanic turned out to be a French Army officer flying in the plane in complete violation of the law. We knew at that time that the same had occurred with agents of other foreign governments.

During the Italian campaign in Ethiopia our men protested bitterly against the quantity of war materials that were being shipped over Pacific coast water fronts to the Italian forces and Government, although ostensibly destined for the Italian Red Cross.

On numerous occasions we bitterly opposed placing aboard American and Japanese ships huge shipments of scrap iron, airplane engines, chemicals, and other war materials for shipment to Japan to be used against defenseless and innocent Chinese people. Our men have handled, against their will, thousands of tons of this material, knowing well what it was to be used for, and knowing well that at some time in the future it might be returned to us from Japanese airplanes in the form of Japanese bombs and from Japanese cannon in the form of shells.

We have on numerous occasions done everything possible to bring to the attention of the public and authorities the extent of Japanese spy activities in the Pacific coast fishing fleets. We know and everyone should know that oceangoing fishing craft with a cruising radius of some 6,000 miles, powerful, up-to-date, two-way radios, better mine- and submarine-detecting equipment than is carried on United States naval craft, operate along the entire Pacific coast seaboard. On numerous occasions our fishermen organized into the C. I. O. have observed these craft in forbidden waters, such as naval anchorages, mine areas, etc.

My supporters in the union and I were of the opinion that the thorough airing of the charges in the 9 weeks' trial on Angel Island had cleared the way for me to gain citizenship. This hearing has been attacked as a "whitewash" on the part of Dean James M. Landis.

I need make no defense of Dean Landis, the Immigration Department, or any others concerned, but the fact remains that no one Government witness in the hearing could point to a single example, even though they were asked to, or any statement or action by me or our unions tending to undermine or overthrow the American form of government, or to any action of the unions that could be considered un-American.

The main witness who was employed by the steamship interests of the Pacific coast to build a case against me, no matter what methods must be used, we found impossible to get on the witness stand, namely, Stanley Morton Doyle, an employers' labor spy who utilizes his badge of membership in the American Legion to cover and further carry on his activities.

The decision of Dean Landis, his reasons, and the record in this case speak for themselves. The charges were found to be merely hearsay charges originating with the employers' paid labor spies and agents and sympathetic officials in the police department and governmental agencies of some Pacific coast cities.

The point is made in connection with the present alien deportation bill that I admitted association with "known Communists."

Of course, being on the witness stand and under oath, I told the truth in every detail without attempting to evade any question. I explained that as the ranking official of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and, in addition, as the west coast C. I. O. director of all the Pacific Coast States, it was my official duty to meet with politicians and persons representing every type of organization.

I can give instances where I have had associations with numerous political and religious leaders that did not at all commit me to their policies. The same is true as to meetings with any Communist officials. I accepted help from any source, including Communists, if I believed that such help was given in good faith and was of benefit to our union movement.

In not a single instance has it been shown that such associations were for any other purpose or used for any other purpose.

I should like to mention finally the fact that at present we are engaged in negotiations attempting to secure a contract covering longshore work on the Pacific coast. For some months past we have attempted to have American shipowners and operators execute a contract for a period of at least 3 to 5 years, aimed at preventing any stoppages of work or strikes between longshoremen and employers for this length of time.

Our union membership and I well know that the present attempts to railroad me out of the country simply because I am undesirable to a minority group of American people is being used to prevent the successful negotiating of this contract.

I have never been, and I am not now, concerned with my own personal welfare in these matters. In 1934 I was offered, first, $50,000, and then an offer to name my own price if I would betray the union. This offer came from those interests who have constantly sought my deportation under false charges.

I am a resident in this country by choice, not by accident, and I am very familiar with American institutions, civil liberties, and American democracy, and I appreciate and support them.

I myself sought the investigation and hearing by the Government into the charges against me with a view of getting them out of the way so that I could complete my citizenship. Those forces that howl so much against my not being a citizen are the same forces that will leave no stone unturned to prevent me from becoming naturalized.

The passage of the Allen bill will be a victory for powerful minority forces. It will certainly not be a defeat for me or what I represent. The defeat will be to American civil liberties and democracy and will be looked back on in the future, if successful, as such acts that occurred in the last World War were ultimately regarded, such as the changing of the name of "hamburger" steak to "liberty" steak, etc.

In concluding this somewhat lengthy communication I merely want to repeat what I said at the outset, that I believe that the Representatives in Congress should know the facts of this case. The facts as I have stated them here are correct and are a matter of official record in some form or another.

With the personal appreciation of myself and the full appreciation of our union membership for your past efforts on our behalf, I trust that everything possible will be done in the interests of the American labor movement and American democracy to prevent the passage of this piece of private-interests legislation.

Very truly yours,

H. R. BRIDGES, President.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If I have any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how the time stands?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Mississippi has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], I may say that he is not the first man who has been misled by Harry Bridges.

I believe that Harry Bridges is one of the most destructive labor leaders who has ever hit the United States. Many good labor people have been misled by Mr. Bridges.

I think Dean Landis, wherein he sought to whitewash but did not exonerate Harry Bridges, had to go to great lengths to make the decision he did; and I am going to quote some page numbers wherein you may verify that. See footnotes and pages 122, 124, 125 clear through to page 151 of the Landis report where he refused to deny his communism. Time will not permit me to go into this as much as I would like to. I just want to say that the gentleman from New York read a lot of words into the RECORD, but not a word in Harry Bridges' defense. He did not present it because he did not have any, he just simply did not have any, and I am going to read the record on this, too. He went to great lengths to say that the Department of Immigration did not know anything about his marriage. Of course, the Department of Immigration would not know, but he did not say anything about the registrar of vital statistics. I am going to read the record. On May 7, 1920, Harry Bridges came to the United States and registered as an alien. On July 13, 1921, he filed his first papers for application for American citizenship. On August 9, 1928, he again filed his first papers. Now, there was a reason for that. He did not mention marriage in his first application. He got afraid. There was a very logical reason why he filed again. This time making his declaration before the clerk of the United States District Court of Northern California, he stated under oath that he was married and that his wife's name was Agnes McClay Bridges. That was in 1928. On May 2, 1936, 8 years later, he filled out a preliminary form for declaration of intention and signed it. In the above form he stated that he was married on May 1, 1934, at San Francisco. Bridges stated that he was married on December 2, 1923, under the name of Harry Renton Bridges to Agnes McClay Bridges.

We had this matter looked up by the registrar of vital statistics of California, whose duty it is to find out these things, and here is what he says:

> There is no record in California of Harry Renton Bridges and Agnes Bridges, or McClay, having been married either on December 2, 1927, May 1, 1934, or on any other date between July 1905 and June 30, 1938.

There is your answer to Mr. Bridges' defense. That is the complete statement. He could not defend himself because he did not have any defense.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. No.

Mr. GEYER of California. I thought so.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. You just thought so to get your nose in.

Mr. GEYER of California. I think——

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is: The gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] will proceed.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Now this man comes before us and he hollers and he screams for his rights under the Constitution of the United States. I read into the record, in the N. L. R. B. hearings, some of the letters written by his crowd, in which he said to business:

> We are going to call on you, and your men are going to come peacefully to our union, or, if they do not, it is just going to be too bad.

I also read in here the letters that went to the workers:

> You are going to come into our union; and if you do not come in peacefully, you had better take a look at some others who refused to come in.

And those others had broken arms, their own arms broken over their knees, or jaws with broken bones that stuck out in two or three places—injuries inflicted by the thugs of Harry Renton Bridges. I ask you what consideration did he give to the rights of others? It seems to me that in this country individual right is interpreted to mean that you may do what you wish to do provided you do not infringe on the rights of others.

Here is a man who has no respect for others. In sit-down strikes, like in the Douglas strike, they moved into those plants; they got into those plants and sat there. They did not own those plants. I ask you, is that due process of law when you take possession of the other fellow's property? You people scream for the rights of Harry Bridges; you scream for the rights of these others, but I ask you to square the actions of those men with their requests for recognition.

Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry I have not 25 minutes longer to discuss this matter.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, George Washington, the Father of his County, made a strikingly significant and unforgettable statement when he said:

> Citizens by birth or choice of a common country; that country has a right to concentrate your affections.

We are increasingly becoming aware in this Nation that there are far too many individuals who, with lying tongue and false prophecy, are spreading discord in the ranks of labor, bringing about unnecessary strikes, and tearing apart the solidarity of the American system of government. [Applause.]

AFFIRMATIVE NOTICE WILL BE SERVED

The Congress of the United States, by favorable action on the bill to bring about the deportation of Harry R. Bridges, will serve notice, not only to him but other thousands in this country, that we are finally alert to this problem. Far, far too many of such persons are allowed to continue to live in the Republic and accept the privileges, the profits, and the protection of America, but assume none of the responsibilities of citizenship at the same time. [Applause.]

Facts will be adduced in the debate later today which will bring clearly to our attention and to the attention of the citizenry of this Republic the reason why favorable action on this measure should be speedily forthcoming. In many States of the Union there are large populations of aliens, and I want to make myself clear on that score.

NATURALIZED CITIZENS ARE VALUABLE

Naturalized citizens are just as important to America as are native-born citizens. I have aided scores of men and women to receive their papers of naturalized citizenship. I know their loyalty and faith centers in the United States. They join hands today in patriotic union with native-born citizens as we all awaken to the fact that aliens are besmirching the good name of those who are responsive to the challenge of real citizenship. All of us are descended from those who came to our shores, either at an early or late date, and in fighting for true Americanism we fight in a common cause. In the State of Pennsylvania, to cite an example, there are today reported to be 130,000 aliens. That is not the most disturbing figure. It is that only 21 percent of those 130,000 individuals have even signified or declared their intention of becoming citizens of the country in which they reside. The percentage is believed to be approximately correct. What about the 79 percent? What is their answer? Those individuals have remained as residents of the United States on an average of from 15 to 17 years. That is a tragic situation.

AMERICA FOR AMERICANS

Mr. Speaker, today there is more at stake than merely acting on the case of Harry R. Bridges. There is a call to the membership of this House, regardless of party, to so publicize our position clearly at this hour that the country and the world will know that we have come to the time in the history of this Nation when we mean to make America safe for Americans. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that Mr. Bridges has not had his day in court. He is having his day in court in the only forum in this land which has the right to enact laws defining the rights of an alien to come in here and his right to remain. He is here by sufferance, not by right. We have the undoubted right to say that an alien shall not come in. Coupled with that is the right to say when one is undesirable we may put him out.

A reference has been made here to the finding of Mr. Landis. I have read Mr. Landis' report upon the record made in that case, and the findings and opinion of Mr. Landis are the finest example of a constipation of ideas and a diarrhea of words that I ever saw in my life. As a matter of fact and of law, it is hard to prove some offences of which men are guilty. One of those offences is fraud, which is akin to the activities of Mr. Bridges since he has been here. One great judge once said that—> Fraud is hatched in secret; it hides in the hollow of a tree, and, like a snail, it must be trailed by the slime which it leaves behind.

The facts of the Bridges investigation amply justified Mr. Landis in ordering his deportation. That he is a Communist is shown by his associations, his subversive activities, and his devious moves with respect to naturalization. He has "wormed in and wormed out and endeavored to leave everyone in doubt as to whether the snake that made the track was coming in or backing out." It would be interesting to inquire just what state of facts would lead Mr. Landis to conclude that an undesirable alien should be deported. The anomalous thing about a man like Bridges is that he assails with pick and crowbar the foundations of our institutions, then when he is caught in un-American activities he flees to the courts and lays hold of the horns of the altar and appeals to the laws and institutions which he seeks in season and out of season to destroy.

As a matter of fact, this is a long-delayed action. Bridges has sinned away his day of grace. His deportation is long overdue. It is the beginning of what must be a concerted move on the part of the Congress, and that is to delouse the body of Uncle Sam of these undesirable aliens like Bridges. [Applause.] Then, when we have done that, let us give the body politic a good, strong dose of legalistic vermifuge and clean out the internal parasites that now afflict us. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, from the testimonies of former members of the Communist Party who sat with Harry Bridges in Communist meetings, from his own public statements, and from information which has come to me from reliable sources, I am convinced that Harry Bridges is a Communist and, therefore, subject to deportation. My opinion is not based upon biased testimony or hearsay evidence, and it is confirmed by the fact that Bridges has religiously followed the Communist Party line. Naturally, it is difficult to prove by membership books the affiliation of any Communist with the party. This is because the Communist Party conceals its records and, under existing laws, we are unable to compel them to produce these records. It is also the practice of the party to classify certain influential members as members at large, known only to the top-ranking Communists in this country and in Russia. The evidence received by our committee justifies and compels the finding that Bridges is a Communist and an undesirable alien. He should have been deported years ago. When Secretary Perkins selected Mr. Landis to pass upon this question, I predicted that Bridges would not be deported. No one will deny that there was ample evidence before Mr. Landis to authorize the deportation of Bridges.

Bridges could have been deported under existing laws and, in the interest of America, he should have been deported. As an alien, he occupies the status of a guest. The courts have held repeatedly that Congress has a right to terminate the stay of an alien guest at any time and for any reason. The argument that this bill is unconstitutional is without merit. If I thought for a moment that it was unconstitutional or came under the classification of bills of attainder, I would vote against it. I do not believe that we should violate the Constitution or the Bill of Rights in our determination to rid this country of undesirable aliens, but the status of an alien is wholly different from that of a citizen. It is unfortunate that we have been compelled to resort to a private bill to expel Bridges from this country. It should have been done by the Secretary of Labor in the enforcement of existing laws. It is also regrettable that we cannot secure additional legislation along the lines of the bill which I recently introduced, which would make it mandatory for the Department of Justice to deport all undesirable aliens in this country. But since the laws were not enforced and it is improbable that we can secure the necessary general legislation at this session there is no other alternative left to the Congress. The very people who are opposing this bill have favored or introduced similar bills to exempt aliens from deportation. They have gone on record in favor of withholding the deportation of aliens who are mandatorily deportable and have been ordered deported by the Department of Labor.

I do not think that it can be justly said that the deportation of Harry Bridges constitutes punishment. He has shown that he does not appreciate the hospitality which America has extended to him as a guest. He has shown that he does not believe in our form of government, and he has not hesitated to denounce it. In view of this attitude, it should be a favor to Mr. Bridges to get him out of a country that he does not like. It is fairly certain that passage of this bill in the Senate will be prevented. But favorable action by the House will serve notice upon the enforcement agencies of our Government that the Congress is determined to rid this country of undesirable aliens. This will have a wholesome effect upon the entire country, and it will remove any doubt in the minds of any Government official with respect to the overwhelming desire of the American people to expel Communist, Fascist, and Nazi aliens.

Harry Bridges has become a symbol of the kind of aliens who are not wanted in America. The passage of this bill by an overwhelming vote may bring about a fearless and honest enforcement of our deportation laws.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 351, nays 21, not voting 59, as follows:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman qualify?

Mr. FISH. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague——

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that I shall have to object to any statement as to how a colleague would have voted if present.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. KEAN——

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am sorry to have to object to any announcements as to how colleagues would have voted. It is a flagrant violation of the rules of the House, is unfair to other absent Members, places a trying obligation on spokesmen for other delegations, wastefully consumes the valuable time of the House, cumbers the RECORD, encourages delinquency, is in effect proxy voting, against which there is strict law, and, in addition, renders no real service to the absent Member whose solicitous colleague, usually without his knowledge or consent, impose on the Speaker and the House by making such announcements. In response to sentiment throughout the membership of the House, I am constrained to raise the point of order against all such inconsiderate, unwarranted, and unwanted breaches of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects to such announcements.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9766) to authorize the deportation of Harry Renton Bridges.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the great interest in this bill, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is very necessary in order that the program may go along that the consideration of this bill be completed today. Under the rule, there is an hour of general debate, which would certainly take until 4:15 to conclude. There will be at least two roll calls, I understand, on the motion to recommit and on the passage of the bill. This would run us up until in the neighborhood of 5:30 even though there were no debate under the 5-minute rule. I understand several amendments are to be offered. If the time for general debate is extended, we may be here until 6 or 7 o'clock. As far as I am individually concerned, I am not going to object, but I do want to call attention to the situation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MASON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9766, with Mr. CALDWELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

When the bill was introduced for deportation of Harry Bridges, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization discussed this question at its several committee meetings, and by majority vote, voted the bill out for further consideration of the House.

In the discussion by members of the committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the committee members had not been satisfied with the findings of the Secretary of Labor and feel that if private bills are passed by Congress for relief of aliens, then that Congress has the same power to deport undesirable aliens

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the bill which we are today considering, proposes to deport immediately the famous alien, Harry Renton Bridges. His activities are known all over the United States. Incidentally, I understand that he has sometimes given his name as "Albert" instead of "Harry." But a whole Nation knows the person against whom this bill is directed.

Four times the Immigration Committee has had this bill before it, and each time a vote was taken either upon the bill as a whole or upon some phase of the legislation—and let it be said to the eternal credit of that committee that in spite of all the pressure that has been brought to bear to stop this bill, the committee never wavered in the least. When the roll is called today, I think you will still find every member of the committee standing behind the bill except two. I am especially indebted to my colleague JAMES VAN ZANDT for his able assistance and full cooperation in this matter.

The Immigration Committee went almost in a body to the Rules Committee and that fine committee also took a courageous position and granted a rule by a unanimous vote to bring the bill to the floor of the House.

I desire to pay tribute here to my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi, BILL COLMER, who handled the bill for the Rules Committee on the floor. He remained steadfast in his determination to press for action on this bill and rendered invaluable service not only to his own Rules Committee but to the entire Congress. He deserves the gratitude and support of patriotic Americans for his vigorous action and able support of this bill and other legislation to rid America of undesirable aliens.

And so, today we have the bill here. I think the Members of this House are sufficiently aware of the tremendous pressure that has been brought to bear to keep the bill from coming to a vote. I have been astounded at the influence and strength manifested by elements seeking to destroy this legislation. I have been receiving a great deal of correspondence from all over the United States on this bill and I am happy to say that the writers, for the most part, are anxious to see the bill passed. However, I have received some very severe criticism from Communists and their sympathizers. The following quotation from a letter is typical:

> By your introduction of the bill to deport Harry Bridges you have started an action which may finish your political career. The C. I. O. will help to retire you to political oblivion.

My answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that I am going to place my country first and I will not be intimidated by Communists, Nazis, Fascists, nor any other subversive element bent upon destroying our country.

Mr. Chairman, if certain high public officials had discharged their plain duty, there would have been no necessity for this bill. We had hoped that Mme. Perkins would change her attitude toward the undesirable alien question, but our hope was in vain. Finally, the President, evidently noting the increasing resentment in Congress and in the country toward the Secretary of Labor, removed the Bureau of Immigration from the safe haven of that official. I believe that the introduction of this bill contributed to that decision and has thus served a very useful purpose. I trust that the situation will be better in the Justice Department; certainly, it could not be worse.

If I correctly read the mind of Congress on this question dealing with undesirable aliens and subversive elements, Congress is tired of the sham that has been perpetrated upon the American people, and I believe that it is ready to take such action as it necessary to remedy this situation. Let us in this bill solemnly but courageously notify not only Harry Bridges, but all of his kind, that America cannot and will not tolerate them. Let them know that Congress has a way, or will make a way, to protect America. Let the message go to Hitler, to Stalin, and to Mussolini that their parachutists will not land in the waiting and welcome arms of those who would destroy this Republic. Let us see to it that if they undertake to land here the reception committee will consist of good, honest-to-God Americans, appropriately dressed and properly outfitted to give them such a reception that even the "Mad Man of Munich" may not fail to understand.

Here today is an opportunity to translate into action the verbal protests which have been rising from all over America. We are called upon to answer a universal demand. Failure to take decisive, affirmative action to rid this country of undesirable aliens will meet the condemnation which it deserves. A vote against this bill today will properly be construed as a license to these undesirable alien elements to pursue their dirty work of striking down America from the rear. I cannot overemphasize the importance of this vote and what it means to the security of our Nation. It is a direct step, a bold action, to route the enemy within. The fact that it is new is no argument against it. To the charge that the remedy is drastic, I answer that the disease is serious. Ask the bleeding nations of Europe, overrun by enemy aliens, if they would consider the remedy too drastic. The fact that the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, largely controlled by Bridges, went on record a few days ago in opposition to the defense program speaks for itself. But I say to him and his kind that we are rearming so that this land of the free will never become a part of the Russian Soviet Union. We have been called upon even this week to vote billions of dollars to defend this country and the Congress has cheerfully done so. It is as necessary to rid this country of enemies within as it is to arm to protect it from the enemy without. So, Mr. Chairman, this is purely an American bill. It was introduced in the American Congress, to be voted upon by Americans for the American Nation. Let no man evade his responsibility today. There is no middle ground. Pretext will satisfy neither the conscience nor the people. We have just witnessed the fall of Norway, Belgium, Holland, and Luxemburg—accomplished largely by the work of alien enemies. The great French people, stabbed in the back, today are struggling against insurmountable odds, and perhaps before the sun sets, Hitler may be marching through the streets of Paris. Gentlemen of the Congress, this is no time to temporize, no time to theorize, no time to speculate. Selfish ambition and desire should go. One motive and only one motive is worthy in this House today, and that is to do the thing that is best for America.

Whence comes the defense of Harry Bridges and other alien enemies? What voices are raised for them? Can any person say that Harry Bridges wants to defend America? Does he love America? Will he fight for our institutions? Nay, gentlemen. Read the record in this case. It is bristling with evidence which leads me to the irresistible conclusion that Harry Bridges was and is a Communist. The evidence is as clear as the noonday sun that he is a very undesirable alien. Even the report of Dean Landis is most damaging to Bridges. I quote from the dean's report, and he certainly put it in the most favorable light possible for Bridges:

> There is no doubt but that Bridges had at that time (1934) and has since, friends and associates who are Communists. At no time was he hesitant to admit these associations nor to deny that on occasion he has sought the help of the Communist Party.
> Bridges has also refused to adopt any policy whereby his unions would exclude or discriminate against any person upon the ground of membership in the Communist Party. * * * Bridges offered no apologies for the Communists that were in his unions. He regarded them, in the main, as "militant and sincere" and as good union men.
> Bridges admitted that he had occasionally dropped in at the Communists' headquarters when they were at 37 Grove Street, but that all he had done on those occasions was to purchase some pamphlets at the bookstore that they maintained in that building.

Time does not permit me to go into the evidence offered by the Government. To my notion, that was conclusive that he was a Communist in belief, in sympathy, and in action. Here is a case of a man who has been in this country more than 20 years and has never made a serious attempt to become a citizen of the United States. The Dies committee, which has rendered a great patriotic service to America, took a great deal of testimony upon the Bridges case, and all of that testimony was incorporated in and made a part of the hearings by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House. No fair-minded person can read that report, I think, without reaching the conclusion that Bridges is not only a dangerous radical alien, wholly undesirable as a citizen, but also a Communist.

Mr. Chairman, this House will without doubt take this important step to defend America. I want the vote to be decisive. I want it to be a warning to those who come here and abuse the privileges of American hospitality. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to summarize the Bridges case for the benefit of the Members of the House as calmly and as dispassionately as I know how to do it, and this summary is based upon the evidence that is contained in the records of the Dies Committee.

First. Bridges is an alien, a guest within our gates, and he has become, by his actions, a very undesirable guest, as judged by a great majority of the American people. To illustrate, if I am a guest in your home and I criticize the way you run your home and I demand that you change the method of operation in your home, you have the right to say to me as your guest, "If you do not like the way I run my home, you should get out."

Now, a guest in your home only has the privileges that you grant to that guest. He has no rights as a member of the family, and an alien only has privileges granted to him and no rights by virtue of being a citizen.

Second. Bridges, according to the evidence, is a Communist and has advocated the overthrow of this Government by force. Twice he has been picked up to face deportation proceedings and the first time the proceedings were canceled by the Secretary of Labor. The second time the proceedings were postponed, waiting a decision from the Supreme Court in the Strecker case.

Now, to the lawyers in this House the Strecker case was not a parallel case to the Bridges case. The Strecker case was based entirely upon past membership in the Communist Party and whether past membership in the Communist Party was a deportable offense under our laws. The Supreme Court ruled that it was not, and therefore the Bridges case was brought to trial. But was it brought to trial in front of the court—the Federal court—and the Federal judge by whom Bridges was to be tried?

No; that Federal judge had ordered the deportation of others that were indicted before that court for the same offenses that Bridges was indicted, and the Department of Labor demanded a special judge in this case, and Judge Landis, the dean of the Harvard Law School, and I am told, one of the best legal minds in the United States, was selected as the trial judge. The Department of Labor, through its agents, prosecuted the case. The Department of Labor presented much flimsy and contradictory evidence in the case before Judge Landis, and the Department of Labor neglected to present real evidence that was available in that case, and Judge Landis, as any other judge, cannot go beyond the evidence presented in his court in deciding the case. He must decide it upon the evidence presented and Judge Landis decided that the case against Bridges as to being a Communist, was not substantiated by the evidence presented to him and he cleared Bridges of that indictment and therefore Bridges was permitted to go free.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill when it reaches that final action. I shall vote for it, despite the fact that there may be serious question in the minds of some lawyers as to what ultimate decision may be made of it should it finally be enacted into law when it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States. The subject is one for intrigue to a lawyer to investigate and study whether or not this proposed legislation may be in contravention and in violation of the Constitution. However, my own studies upon the subject as a lawyer have convinced me that if the matter is finally fairly presented to the Supreme Court there is a fair chance that the Court will hold this legislation to be constitutional, and for that reason I intend to support it.

There is another reason why I intend to support this legislation, and that is because it shall serve as a notice to the people of America that the Congress of the United States is finally, and at last, going to respond to the demands of the people that something be done to rid our Nation of those who are out to destroy it. [Applause.] Would you expect Harry Renton Bridges to admit that he is a Communist? No. I am surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], in reading the statement that was presented to him by Harry Bridges, did not investigate a little bit further into the situation in connection with the report of Judge Landis, and had he done so he would have very clearly found that from the mouth of Harry Bridges himself he made admissions before the committees of this Congress in which he admitted his cooperation with Communists. Moreover——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman mentioned my name.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman's name has been mentioned many times, and I expect will be mentioned many times more in connection with this throughout the entire country. I ask the gentleman to let me finish. I refuse to yield. If you read the report of Judge Landis you will observe that one of the bases for the charge by the Department of Labor for his deportation was that he had become affiliated with Communist organizations. Judge Landis listened to the testimony on the subject of his affiliations, and he also listened to the testimony on the subject of his membership. He found that he was not a member and further found that he had not been affiliated with Communist organizations under the very strained and technical rules of law by which he interpreted the use of the term "affiliation"; and you will find his discussion in that regard on page 133 of his report, in which he uses these words:

> Persons engaged in bitter industrial struggles tend to seek help and assistance from every available source. But the intermittent solicitation and acceptance of such help must be shown to have ripened into those bonds of mutual cooperation and alliance that entail continuing reciprocal duties and responsibilities before they can be deemed to come within the statutory requirement of affiliation.

And he held that there was no evidence to show that there was cooperation between Harry Bridges and the Communist Party, and as the basis of that he held that there was no proof of an alliance between Bridges and the Communist Party. Harry Bridges was before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in May.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. KEEFE. When he was before that committee he was examined by members of that committee, including the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN] and the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN]. He said in answer to questions which were asked him:

> Mr. BOYKIN. Have you ever counseled with them—referring to Communists—or cooperated with them?
> Mr. BRIDGES. I have.

That will be found in the record of the proceedings, and there from the mouth of Harry Bridges himself is his own statement that he not only has counseled with Communists in connection with his work as a labor leader, but that he cooperated with them, the very thing that Judge Landis used as the basis of his decision in holding that he was not affiliated with the Communist Party. I take it from the mouth of Harry Bridges himself. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the question of doubt raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], in respect to the constitutionality of this action is best answered by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the case recorded in Two Hundred and Fifty-ninth United States Reports, page 276, May 29, 1922. This is Mr. Justice Brandeis talking:

> Congress has power to order at any time the deportation of aliens whose presence in the country it deems hurtful and may do so by appropriate executive proceedings.

Similar language was used by the Court on May 12, 1913, in the case of Bagajewitz v. Adams (228 U. S. 585) in which Mr. Justice Holmes used the following language as reported on page 591:

> It is thoroughly established that Congress has power to order the deportation of aliens whose presence in the country it deems hurtful.

Here are the opinions of two outstanding liberals which I deem to be squarely in point on the issue before us.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHERIDAN].

Mr. SHERIDAN. Mr. Chairman, I have sat here for many months watching my colleagues in the House, and I think I will take this occasion to disagree with the potential majority vote on this bill. I cannot reconcile myself to the position that where a man has been tried under our Federal constituted jurisdiction and procedure and found not guilty that this House should deport him. I do not think there is one man in this House who questions the integrity of Dean Landis, of the Harvard Law School. If he did, I do not think there is a Harvard man who would permit his—Dean Landis'—continuance in that high position. I may say for your information I am not a Harvard man.

I sometimes wonder whether you are fair and honest, because I do not know Bridges from Adam; but why take these proceedings piecemeal? How many Members of this House have read the incorporated report upon which Dean Landis has predicated his decision? I will wager not 10 percent of the House has read it. He was in a position to see the demeanor and the facial expression of the witnesses appearing before him. Many of the witnesses were perjurers and paid witnesses, as disclosed by the testimony. Upon that testimony you want to deport Bridges. It is not Bridges that is involved here. It is the American principle, our procedure of government. If we pass this bill, it will be an indelible blot upon this House, not on Bridges, because I do not think this bill will ever pass the Senate. That is my own conclusion. But we can never erase the blot on this House.

I heard my colleague from Wisconsin state "that the strange and technical principles of the law." I happen to be a lawyer myself. I know it always has been a principle of our law that he who affirms must prove. There is no duty devolving on Bridges or any other person who comes before our Federal procedure that he has to answer one iota. Many times, as lawyers, we assume the obligation of not putting our clients on the stand when we feel that the Government has not proved its case.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in the history of our Government, Congress is called upon as representatives of the people to direct the Attorney General of the United States to deport without equivocation one who is recognized as an undesirable alien and a serious menace to the welfare of our Nation. Gentlemen, I refer to Harry Renton Bridges.

For years the American people have been menaced by the presence of such alien influences who have been permitted to spread their poisonous doctrines and false philosophies unmolested.

In the case of Harry Renton Bridges, public sentiment long ago demanded that he be deported. Why was he not deported? Simply because certain officials in responsible positions in our Government adopted a sympathetic attitude that ended with a complete whitewashing of charges that would have been sufficient cause for deporting anyone else so charged.

In considering this type of legislation there is unfolded before our eyes the workings of a real democracy. The American people, through their form of government, are immune from the wanton neglect of any appointed official to discharge the duties of his office. Hence, Congress is called upon to recognize the will of the American people by deporting this undesirable alien.

This brazen individual has from time to time defied the American people by preaching doctrines that are incompatible with American institutions and the American way of life. He has had the gall to declare war against that great veteran organization—the American Legion—composed of more than a million men and women whose services during the last World War are a source of pride and honor in the history of our country.

The American Legion has a right to speak in defense of real Americanism because many of its members learned what it means to fear death in the form of an enemy submarine, a burst of shrapnel, the deadly fire of a machine gun, or the sudden explosion of a hand grenade. They know what it is to seek shelter from the hail of lead in the mud and filth of a stinking trench. They know the utter weariness and the hunger of suffering, of endless marches under the cover of darkness. They know, too, the scream of a dying comrade—crucified on a cross of barbed wire because he was willing to give his life to protect our Americanism.

The American Legion has no selfish interest in advocating that this so-called agent of Moscow be deported and is not alone in its crusade to ferret out individuals of his stripe.

The American Legion supports this bill and is upheld in its course by 99 percent of the American people. They know, and we Members of Congress should be quick to realize, that aliens of the Bridges type are accountable for the admitted existence in our country of such a despicable group as the "fifth column."

Every American citizen is conscious of the danger of the "fifth column," recalling with vivid memory the fate of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Belgium, Holland, Norway, and other countries. While it was Hitlerism in those lands, in this country it is the scourge of communism.

The adoption of this bill will sound the death knell to such vultures from Moscow who are bent on enjoying the privileges of a democracy, and, on the other hand, are engaged in destroying a form of government that represents a masterpiece of statesmanship.

The action of this House in approving this measure should also convey to the heads of our Government, and especially to the Department of Justice, that they must redouble their efforts to purge the Federal pay rolls of hundreds of Communist fellow travelers who openly boast of their affiliation with such Moscow-minded organizations while receiving their livelihood from the taxpayers of America.

These followers of Stalin who receive annual salaries ranging from $1,080 to $10,000, for a total of $1,800,000, are a serious threat to not only our form of government but are preparing now to worm their way into responsible positions in the national-defense program.

Gentlemen, I repeat again, this is an eventful moment in the history of the United States. As representatives of the people, this Congress has a grave responsibility. By passing this bill we can demonstrate that we are alive to the danger that the "fifth column" presents to our national existence.

Our duty is clear and unmistakable. Let us move promptly in banishing from our shores such un-American trash that too long have been permitted to enjoy a hey-day at the expense of liberty-loving America.

On June 14 we as a nation will observe Flag Day and pay tribute to Old Glory. I can think of no greater observance than to rededicate ourselves to the principles for which our flag stands in keeping America for Americans, and thereby recall the words of Theodore Roosevelt:

> Above all, we must stand shoulder to shoulder for the honor and greatness of our country.

[Applause.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN].

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here listening to those gentlemen who are in favor of the passage of this bill. Thus far I have heard nobody utter one word, one fact which would justify the passage of this bill. Our duty as Members of the House of Representatives is to act upon legislation being considered by this body only after due deliberation and upon full information. I do not believe that anybody can reasonably say that this House is considering this bill with due deliberation and upon proper information.

I hold no brief for Bridges. Assuming that he is all the proponents of this bill claim that he is, the principle involved in the passage of this bill is more important than Bridges or a thousand Bridges. That principle is whether this House is proceeding, in the traditional, Democratic, American way, whether we are proceeding in accordance with the principles of justice and democracy which underlie consideration of all special legislation, for that is what this bill is. I am not concerned at this time with whether or not this bill is unconstitutional because it is a bill of attainder. We may be all convinced that it is, but I am willing to leave that for the decision of the Supreme Court, within whose jurisdiction it properly is. What I do object to is the establishment by this bill of a precedent which is dangerous, which is harmful, which is undemocratic, a precedent which is the first step along the road toward the adoption of that form of Government which now prevails on the greater part of the European continent. If we adopt this bill, if we can do this to Bridges now, there is no reason why we cannot do it to anybody else with or without a reason. That, I say, is the principle involved in the matter now before us. Let me illustrate the proposition.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I cannot yield. I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I cannot yield. I only have 3 minutes.

On June 6 I wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and I said:

> MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I note that in the report filed on behalf of the committee to accompany H. R. 9766, the last paragraph therein reads as follows:
> "Special evidence was produced before the committee in the hearing of a general bill in which the record of this alien was fully set forth. Such record was felt sufficient to justify the introduction of this bill."
> I am desirous of acquainting myself with the evidence offered to support that conclusion, and, upon inquiry, find no printed report was made. Will you please be kind enough to direct the clerk of your committee to lend me a copy of the minutes of that hearing wherein testimony was taken with reference to the conclusion stated in the said report?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman let me answer the question? You want some evidence. I am going to give it to you.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I do not yield. Ever since I sent that letter I have not been able to obtain a copy of the record. I have not been able to examine the record in order to determine for myself that the claim which is contained in the last paragraph of the report of the committee is justified by the contents of the hearings which they held. In other words, I have been asked to vote for a bill on the ground that there is evidence heard by the committee which justifies deportation from this country of a named individual, and yet I have not been able to see and examine that evidence for myself. Although I have made a persistent and continuous effort to obtain even for a short space of time a copy of the minutes from the office of the clerk of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I have not been successful in doing so.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Does the gentleman want to see the report?

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. As I have said, at no time could I obtain the evidence upon which the committee made its decision and without which I cannot conscientiously and honestly make my decision. Let us consider what is the acknowledged evidence with respect to the deportation of Bridges.

We all know that Mr. Bridges was arrested upon a warrant issued by the Department of Labor for his deportation on the ground that he was, or is, a member of, or affiliated with, an organization whose primary objective is the overthrow of our democratic form of government. I have no sympathy, nor is any Member of this House in sympathy, with anyone who would overthrow our form of government, or effect any change in that form of government except in the constitutional way provided for making such changes. The hearings were conducted before a special trial examiner, James M. Landis, who is now dean of the Harvard Law School, and who before that was Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and whose adherence to democracy and our constitutional form of government cannot be doubted by anybody. Mr. Landis conducted a long and careful hearing, at which both the Government and the alien were permitted to present their side of the matter in full detail.

At the end of that hearing Mr. Landis took the record, sat down with it, and prepared his decision based upon what had taken place at the hearing and what he found in the record. His careful and scholarly report I recommend to all of you as required reading in voting upon this bill. Mr. Landis came to the conclusion that he could not find Mr. Bridges to be a Communist or affiliated with the Communist Party. This conclusion he based upon the fact that the evidence offered by the Government, that is, the testimony of the Government's witnesses, on the whole, was unreliable, contradictory, and not worthy of belief. While he did not entirely agree with all the testimony offered on behalf of the alien, pointing out contradictory and weak points in the testimony offered on behalf of Bridges, he found that the Government had not proven its case; that Bridges had made out a strong case that he was not a Communist, but, rather, one whose philosophy of life was based upon democratic principles and whose only fault was, as far as the evidence before Mr. Landis showed, that he was a strong and active trade-union leader.

I have recited what took place before Mr. Landis not because I believe that Mr. Bridges is an angel or a paragon of all the virtues, but because there are people, of whom I am one, who are inclined to the belief that this effort to deport Mr. Bridges is based upon his active role as a trade-union leader rather than upon any connection which he may have with an organization which intends to overthrow our democratic form of government. If we deport Bridges, who is an active leader in one trade-union, there is no reason why we cannot deport an active trade-union leader of another organization, nor why we cannot deport all of them. If we can deport a trade-union leader, we can deport a person because we do not like the race from which he comes, or do not like the church in which he worships our Creator, or because we do not like the color of his hair; in fact, just because we do not like him.

From time to time in this country we are subject to waves of antialien hysteria. Any Member of this House who cares to consult the files of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Committee on Labor, can readily see the great number of bills against the employment of aliens and realize that we are again in the midst of such a period.

We must, of course, take necessary measures to defend our country, to prepare against attack from without and within, but that is no reason why we should throw away all judgment and attack everybody merely because a label has been p'nned upon him. Such a procedure is un-American, undemocratic, and a terrible indictment of the way in which democratic processes function under strain.

If the committee which considered this bill received evidence which shows Bridges is a Communist or is affiliated in any way with the Communist Party the course of action is clear. Our immigration laws provide for the deportation of such individuals upon service of a warrant and upon a fair hearing. The committee states that in hearings upon a general bill it received sufficient evidence to justify the introduction of this special bill. I am reliably informed that although several of the members of the committee requested that Mr. Bridges be called to appear before the committee to answer such evidence that the majority of the committee objected to calling him. I do not think that such procedure is democratic or American. I do believe that it violates every tenet and every tradition of our system of justice. It might be possible perhaps that this evidence was so strong nothing Mr. Bridges might say would overcome it. In that case certainly such evidence should have been made public. Even if it were that strong Mr. Bridges should have had an opportunity to appear before the committee to answer such evidence. An ex parte trial and ex parte condemnation is not the foundation upon which our country has prospered.

The evidence which the committee has should have been submitted to the Department of Labor for further action by it, for issuance of another warrant and another hearing. If the committee believes the evidence to be as strong as it claims then certainly the only result of the hearings on this warrant before the Department of Labor would be an order for his deportation. That is the American way.

There has not been cited one precedent in support of this special bill. Never before has Congress by special legislation singled out for deportation one individual or even a few individuals. Always it has provided a procedure for deportation of undesirable classes of aliens, specifying the conditions which determine undesirability. Always undesirability has been determined by a quasi-judicial hearing held by the Department of Labor. At such hearings the alien was given a full opportunity to present his defense against the charges leveled at him. Today, for the first time in our history, we propose to deport one individual without conforming to traditional procedure and without giving him an opportunity to be heard in his own defense.

More than any other Member in this House, I stand to gain from the deportation of aliens who are members of or affiliated with the Communist Party. My record and my stand with respect to communism are clear. I was elected a Member of this House at a special election held on February 6 of this year. Unlike my Republican opponent, I openly declared my hostility toward communism and successfully defeated the Communist candidate, Earl Browder, by an overwhelming majority. While the deportation of alien Communists would improve my political position, what I have to consider here, however, is not what is the easy way for me, which is to vote with the majority, but what is the proper way for me to act on this bill even though it be not the way of the majority.

If it were consonant with American principles, American traditions, American democracy, to deport a single individual upon ex parte accusations, I would, of course, vote for this bill, but that is not my conception, or the conception of most people in this country, of democracy. We must remember that this same charge was made against Bridges and that upon a fair and full hearing the charge was not sustained. I cannot hold my self-respect and assert hereafter that I believe in the American way, in our constitutional form of government and the principles which underlie our democracy if I cast my vote for the passage of this bill. I trust that a majority of this House will not support this bill, because there is no evidence to justify its adoption, because it constitutes the establishment of a vicious precedent in these troublesome days, and because it clearly is a violation and contradiction of our democratic way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill (H. R. 9766) because I think it proposes to do something which is fundamentally wrong. This bill of five lines contains enough political dynamite to blast into dust the constitutional and legislative pillars which are the foundation stones of our democratic system of government. In brief, this bill directs the Attorney General "notwithstanding any other provision of law" to deport an individual named therein. Such a mandate would be an historical departure from our American tradition. This is the first time in the history of our Government that an act of Congress has singled out a named individual for deportation. Since the passage of the Alien and Sedition laws, a century and a half ago, it is the only bill that has provided for a deportation without a hearing or without giving the accused what our Nation has long known as "due process of law."

Mr. Chairman, the man at whom this bill is directed was lawfully admitted to this country, but it is now charged that he is here in violation of the law. After a lengthy hearing, and the taking of over 7,000 pages of testimony, it was the opinion of Mr. James Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School, who presided at the hearings, that the accused man should not be deported. The Secretary of Labor approved the findings of the trial commissioner. This bill would reverse the action of the Secretary of Labor.

The precedent that would be established by the passage of this bill would be detrimental to the general welfare of every citizen. As an American, I will not, for the sake of my own liberty, deny the protection of uniform and indiscriminatory laws, and of fair hearings to any other person. For the sake of argument, I am willing to concede that the person named in this bill is an undesirable person and should be deported. However, in our desire to deport one man, do not let us do violence to a precious heritage—the Bill of Rights! The sound timbers with which the Ship of State was built were shrewdly and wisely selected—by thinkers, idealists, soldiers, and philosophers. In its structure there is a plank that guarantees every person equal rights before the law. Our forefathers objected to a Government where "whatever pleased the prince had the force of law". There can be no doubt that the framers of our Constitution were determined that every man should have his day in court. If this bill passes, we shall, in my opinion, be striking a deadly blow at that sacred right.

I think that the pending bill goes so perilously near to being a bill of attainder as to be almost indistinguishable from one. I believe that it could be regarded as an ex post facto law. The Constitution of the United States says: "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed (art. 1, sec. 9).

Ex post facto, arising or enacted after the fact; retrospective; retroactive, ex post facto law, any law which contemplates the penalizing in any degree of any act or of the omission of an act, which acts and omissions were respectively permissible and not punishable before its passage. Such laws are declared to be unconstitutional by article 1, section 9, paragraph 3, of the United States Constitution, nor can they be made virtually effective by giving them a civil form; in England, however, Parliament is not enjoined from passing such laws.

During this debate I have heard the proponents as well as the opponents cite the same authority for their position. It is found in Cummings against Missouri.

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. "Bills of this sort," says Mr. Justice Story, "have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or of gross subserviency to the Crown, or of violent political excitements, periods in which all nations are most liable, as well the free as enslaved, to forget their duties and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others." These bills are generally directed against individuals by name, but they may be directed against a whole class. Cummings v. Missouri 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 323, 18 L. ed. 356).

Mr. Chairman, there is an unbroken line of authorities supporting the Cummings case. Cummings against Missouri held unconstitutional an act passed by the legislature of Missouri that denied, not to an individual, but to a class, ministers of the gospel, the right to preach the gospel unless they took an oath that they had not been affiliated with the Confederacy during the period of the Civil War. A Catholic priest saw fit to violate the law in Missouri. He was arrested. His name was Cummings. The case went to the Supreme Court on the issue that the law was in the nature of a bill of attainder. It was held to be a bill of attainder and in violation of section 9, article I of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, without doubt this bill is unconstitutional because it is a denial of "due process" under the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

At this time, I wish to reply to a statement that has been repeatedly made here this afternoon to the effect that an alien has no rights. An alien resident in this country, if he was lawfully admitted, has every right of judicial trial, every protection, and every safeguard that the Constitution gives to any human being.

It is well at this very moment, when passion and prejudice run so high, to be ever mindful of the rich and wholesome restraining influence of our Constitution. Even the meanest, lowliest human being must not be denied the rights secured by that sacred document, which has carried us through our entire national existence and is now the beacon light of hope to a weary, unhappy, and suffering world.

Since the beginning of my legislative career as a State Senator in 1924, right down to the present day, I have opposed and voted against class legislation of every kind. My vote today, on this bill, will be in keeping with that perfect record.

My parents were born in Ireland and, through them, I met many immigrants from Ireland as well as from other foreign countries. In my experience, most of these aliens made good neighbors and became loyal citizens. I deplore the sinister attacks that are constantly being made by certain groups in this country against alien residents because of their race, or their creed, or their color. As a Member of Congress, I shall continue to fight against any attempt to discriminate or penalize a person because of his religious or his political views.

I wish the vote on this measure could be postponed until next week in order to allow every member sufficient time to analyze the bill and contemplate the irreparable damage to one's constitutional rights that will inevitably result from such a law.

By voting for this bill, in a moment of legislative wrath, we would repudiate forever a priceless legacy—equality before the law—no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. By voting against this bill we shall retain that legacy and the blessings of a free country.

In order to obtain the rights we now enjoy under our Constitution, our forefathers pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

Can we do less for our children?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this is an unusual procedure, but it has been made necessary because of the unusual conduct of the officials of the Federal Government in failing and refusing to deport undesirable aliens. [Applause.]

No one here has stated that Harry Bridges is a desirable person to live within the United States. The Congress has the power to pass whatever legislation it desires or feels necessary to protect the best interests of the country; hence this bill before us today. Those who criticize the procedure may be honest and sincere, but they have voted time and time again for private bills amending basic law in order to keep aliens in the United States. Oftentimes they have voted for private bills to permit aliens to remain in this country who entered unlawfully and who had been convicted of crime. Now, however, when it becomes necessary to pass a private bill, or a bill of this character, in order to get rid of an undesirable alien, these same people rise in great horror and cry out on the floor of the House, "Undemocratic! Un-American"! [Applause.]

There has been sufficient evidence adduced before congressional committees—more than one of them—to the effect that Harry Bridges has associated with and has cooperated with Communists; and there is very strong evidence in the records of congressional committees given under oath by responsible and reliable witnesses to the effect he is a Communist and that he has been sympathetic with their program. No one can point to a single good thing he has done which would entitle him to the reward of being allowed to continue to live in this country. He has done more to disturb the peace and the security of certain sections of our country than any alien we have ever had. He has done more to destroy the merchant marine of this sovereign Government of ours than the Confederate States did during the war between the States; yet there are those who would like to keep him in the United States. I cannot understand the spirit or psychology motivating those who want to keep him here. It is ridiculous to assert the United States does not have the power to protect itself by deporting undesirable aliens.

It may be true that Dean Landis is a learned lawyer. It may be true that his students have a great regard for him, but I venture the assertion here and now there is not a Member of this House who thought Dean Landis would hold other than he did in the Bridges case in order to take the heat off of somebody else. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] is to be commended for his untiring efforts to give us protection from undesirable aliens. He has been a leader in the fight for selective and restrictive immigration. In his fight to preserve America for decent, law-abiding, and God-fearing people he is deserving of our praise and support. [Applause.]

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I voted in the affirmative on the rule. I intend to vote in the negative on the passage of this bill if it remains in the condition it now is. If it is amended so as to come within what in my humble judgment is constitutional, I shall gladly vote for it.

I am not going to find fault with any of my colleagues who differ with me in their conclusions, and I want to say that it would be the easier way for me in the congressional district that I represent, being far removed from the coast and having virtually no C. I. O. labor in it, to vote as the great majority evidently will vote from the expressions we have heard; but I cannot in good conscience, consistent with my oath as a Member of this House, likewise as a member of the bar of the State of Washington, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and also as a judge of a court of general jurisdiction for 10 years before coming here, bring myself to the belief that this legislation is constitutional, much as I might feel that Mr. Bridges should not be here. Feeling this way, it is my plain duty to vote against it if it remains as it is now written.

It is unconstitutional, in my judgment, upon two grounds: First, it is a bill of attainder, which Congress is prohibited from enacting.

I shall cite the same authority cited by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], to wit, Cummings against Missouri:

> A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. "Bills of this sort," says Mr. Justice Story, "have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or of gross subserviency to the Crown, or of violent political excitements, periods in which all nations are most liable, as well the free as enslaved, to forget their duties and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others." These bills are generally directed against individuals by name, but they may be directed against a whole class. (Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.), 277, 323, 18 L. ed. 356.)

It is well at this very moment, when passion and prejudice run so high, to ever be mindful of the rich and wholesome restraining influences of our Constitution. Even the meanest, lowliest human being must not be denied the rights secured by that sacred document, which has carried us through our entire national existence and is now the beacon light of hope to a weary, unhappy, and suffering world.

Mr. Chairman, there is an unbroken line of authorities supporting the Cummings case. Cummings against Missouri held unconstitutional an act passed by the legislature of Missouri that denied, not to an individual, but to a class, ministers of the gospel, the right to preach the gospel unless they took an oath that they had not been affiliated with the Confederacy during the period of the Civil War. A Catholic priest saw fit to violate the law in Missouri. He was arrested. His name was Cummings. The case went to the Supreme Court on the issue that the law was in the nature of a bill of attainder. It was held to be a bill of attainder and in violation of section 9, article I of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is unconstitutional also because it is a denial of due process under the fifth amendment to the Constitution and I want to take the argument that is so repeatedly made here this afternoon that an alien has no rights. An alien resident in this country, if he lawfully came in here, has every right of judicial trial, every protection, and every safeguard that the Constitution gives to any human being if he lawfully came in. If he unlawfully came in then he has not acquired rights and if you will follow the authorities, and there is a wealth of material on this, you will find that no alien nonresident has the right to say that he could come to America. The Congress alone fixes that. It is a privilege extended or withheld, but when once extended and he comes to the country, that privilege ripens into a right and no person can be denied or deprived of his rights without due process of law and that irrespective of citizenship. We have set up a quasi-judicial tribunal to try anyone not a citizen charged with being here unlawfully. We go even further than that. We say to that individual, "The burden is upon you to show cause why you should not be deported." But when we seek to deny him the right to any form of hearing we deny him the right of due process as defined in the fifth amendment to the Constitution. I am frank to say that the seven-page letter read here today written by Mr. Bridges in his own defense did not convince me that he carried the burden, but that does not mean that I will violate my oath to uphold the Constitution as I see it and support this legislation to meet the popular clamor of the moment.

In my humble judgment, Mr. Chairman, it would be a serious mistake to pass legislation of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill. I believe Harry Bridges and all of his kind should be deported. He is a troublemaker of the first order and America is not the place and now is not the time for troublemakers.

In answer to the argument advanced by the distinguished gentleman who just preceded me on this floor, may I say that I believe this bill is constitutional. Much has been said concerning a bill of attainder, but I remind you that this is not an action that inflicts punishment for a crime. It is an act by the legislative body against a single individual, but deportation is not punishment for a crime. Deportation is a civil proceeding, not a criminal prosecution.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Is it not a fact that an alien cannot even appeal a deportation order?

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. DIES. Whether there is any evidence to sustain it or not, he has no right of appeal?

Mr. CURTIS. That is right. The prohibition in the constitution of ex post facto laws and bills of attainder refers to criminal proceedings and not to civil proceedings. As has been said, deportation is not punishment for a crime, but a civil proceeding.

This bill comes here with almost the unanimous support of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD], presented this matter to the committee in a general bill and as a result of his able presentation of the facts, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], introduced this bill before the Congress.

Mr. Oppenheim in his work on international law, says:

> Just as a state is competent to refuse admission to an alien, so, in conformity with its territorial supremacy, it is competent to expel at any moment an alien who has been admitted into its territory.
> It is an accepted maxim of international law that every sovereign nation has the power, as inherent in sovereignty, and essential to self-preservation, to forbid the entrance of foreigners within its dominion, or to admit them only in such cases and upon such conditions as it may see fit to prescribe.

That statement was made by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case involving the constitutionality of the Immigration Act of March 3, 1891.

The absolute right of control over immigration by a nation is essential to the preservation of its national existence.

The expulsion of aliens is necessarily embraced in the power to regulate their admission and exclusion.

Mr. DIES. Is there any difference in principle between this bill and the many private bills that have been introduced by the Immigration Committee and supported by many of these gentlemen who are now opposing this bill? We have had many bills where aliens were mandatorily admitted. The Congress said notwithstanding the law and notwithstanding the fact you made other aliens leave the country under like conditions, yet we, the Congress, withhold deportation of the alien. What is the difference in principle?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no difference in principle and in fact it is an established rule where authority to do a certain act the authority to do the contrary is implied. We have court decision after court decision that says that if a certain official has power to appoint subordinates, he likewise has the power to discharge, and it follows that if we have the authority to disregard the general law and admit an individual alien, we have the right to expel an individual alien.

Charles Hyde, in his work on international law declares that a—

State may doubtless decide for itself whether the continued presence within its territory of a particular alien is so adverse to the national interests that the country needs to rid itself of him. If such be its decision, the right of expulsion must be acknowledged. A conclusion in favor of expulsion need not necessarily coincide with one to which the state of which the alien is a national would, under like circumstances, assent.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], the author of this bill, and for the members of the committee who have seen fit to report it favorably. I have the highest regard for the membership of this House, which has just now almost unanimously voted the adoption of the rule for its consideration.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], and I wish to take his opening remarks as the text of mine. He said, and I am sure that he would not have so stated unless he had ascertained that the statement was true, that this is the first time in the history of our Government that a bill aimed at one man has been brought before Congress.

Mr. Chairman, without any passion, without any prejudice whatsoever, heartily favoring the deportation of Harry Bridges, loving everyone in this House, I must call your attention, if I am to be honest with myself, to the fact that this is supposed to be a Government "of laws and not of men"; that bills of attainder, ex post facto laws and the like, are outlawed by our Constitution; that the legislative branch of our Government should not usurp the prerogative of our judicial or administrative tribunals, if we would preserve our historic, constitutional doctrine of separation of powers. Yet today, for the first time in our history, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is correct, we have a bill before us aimed exclusively at one, named, man.

It is so perilously near being a bill of attainder as to be almost indistinguishable from one. It is almost, if not quite, an ex post facto law. The Constitution of the United States says:

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed. (Art. I, sec. 9.)

I happen to have been the chairman of a special subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, charged with the duty of making the investigation under the resolution for the impeachment of the Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and the Solicitor of Labor. In that investigation we read every word of the evidence in the files of the Labor Department, and the report of the Dies committee, against Harry Bridges. I doubt if anything could be said in condemnation of Harry Bridges which I would question. Not only do I have a fixed conviction that he should be deported, but I have tried assiduously to accomplish that desirable end by drawing and assisting in drawing legislation under which he could not escape deportation. This House passed one of the bills to which I refer in May 1939, when we passed the Smith bill, H. R. 5138, with only 48 dissenting votes. I sincerely hope and pray that it will be passed by the Senate and become a law at this session of Congress.

I cannot quarrel with anyone for supporting the bill before us now, but I simply cannot go along. [Applause.]

None of my reasons is based on technicality. It would be unworthy of this occasion, a crisis in the legislative history of our Nation, to deal in technicalities, or fine-spun theories. I favor, strongly, the end. I deplore, strongly, the proposed means. I could not bring myself to take this position unless my reasons were, in my opinion, well grounded and impelling. Here, we are face to face with a challenge to do a legislative job in a workmanlike manner. We all wish that job done. Yet, by this bill we confess our inadequacy—we admit that we cannot draw a bill which will do that job in accordance with the time-honored landmarks of our profession. With the best of motives, this bill frankly transgresses one of the cardinal principles which our founding forefathers would have died to preserve inviolate. Rarely, if ever, since the Barons of Runnymede wrung Magna Carta from the unwilling hand of King John, has any such piece of legislation been seriously considered.

Even the alien and sedition laws, of odious memory, did not name the objects of the then legislative wrath.

Is the bill under consideration (H. R. 9766) a bill of attainder?

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. "Bills of this sort," says Mr. Justice Story, "have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or of gross subservience to the Crown, or of violent political excitements, periods in which all nations are most liable, as well the free as enslaved, to forget their duties and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others." These bills are generally directed against individuals by name, but they may be directed against a whole class. (Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 323, 18 L. Ed. 356.)

The term "bill of attainder," within the meaning of the Federal Constitution, included a general statute passed after the Civil War, which required all attorneys at law to take an oath that they had never voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostilities thereto, as a condition to their right to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States. In this leading case the majority opinion was written by Justice Field, and was based to a large extent upon a prior decision in the same term of Cummings v. State of Missouri (4 Wall. 277), in which the statute of Missouri, requiring ministers of the gospel to take a similar oath as a condition to their right to exercise the privileges of their profession, was held unconstitutional. Mr. Justice Miller, on behalf of himself, the Chief Justice, and Justices Swayne and Davis, delivered a dissenting opinion in Ex parte Garland, which is expressly made applicable not only to that case but to the case of Cummings v. State of Missouri, in which he says "the word 'attainder' is derived by Sir Thomas Tomlins, in his law dictionary, from the words 'attincta' and 'attinctura,' and is defined to be 'the stain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned; the immediate inseparable consequence of the common law on the pronouncing the sentence of death.' The effect of this corruption of the blood was that the party attainted lost all inheritable quality, and could neither receive nor transmit any property or other rights by inheritance. Upon an attentive examination of the distinctive features of this kind of legislation, I think it will be found that the following comprise those essential elements of bills of attainder, in addition to the one already mentioned, which distinguish them from other legislation, and which made them so obnoxious to the statesmen who organized our Government: (1) They were convictions and sentences pronounced by the legislative department of the Government instead of the judicial. (2) The sentence pronounced and the punishment inflicted were determined by no previous law or fixed rule. (3) The investigation into the guilt of the accused, if any such were made, was not necessarily or generally conducted in his presence or that of his counsel, and no recognized rule of evidence governed the inquiry." The conclusion of the majority of the Court was denied by the dissenting judges on the ground that the laws in question did not contain the essential requirements, in the definition of "bill of attainder," of working a corruption of blood, or in describing any person or class of persons by name or description. (Ex parte Garland, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 387, 18 L. Ed. 366.)

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, it is a bill of pains and penalties. As the term "bill of attainder" is used in the Federal Constitution, it includes both bills of attainder particularly, and bills of pains and penalties. (Cummings

v. Missouri, (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356); Drehman v. Stifle (75 U. S. (8 Wall.), 595, 601, 19 L. Ed. 508); Pierce v. Carskadon, 83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 234, 239, 21 L. Ed. 276.)

Quoting further from the dissenting opinion in ex parte Garland:

It is no cause for wonder that men who had just passed successfully through a desperate struggle in behalf of civil liberty should feel a detestation for legislation of which these were the prominent features. The framers of our political system had a full appreciation of the necessity of keeping separate and distinct the primary departments of the Government. Mr. Hamilton, in the seventy-eighth number of the Federalist, says that he agrees with the maxim of Montesquieu, that "There is no liberty if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers."

And others of the ablest numbers of that publication are devoted to the purpose of showing that in our Constitution these powers are so justly balanced and restrained that neither will probably be able to make much encroachment upon the others. Nor was it less repugnant to their views of the security of personal rights, that any person should be condemned without a hearing, and punished without a law previously prescribing the nature and extent of that punishment. They therefore struck boldly at all this machinery of legislative despotism, by forbidding the passage of bills of attainder and ex post facto laws, both to Congress and to the States.

The dissenting opinion in the Garland case attempts to justify its contention by saying that the act of Congress there in question did not contain the name or any designation of a person or persons, and that the barring of attorneys from the practice of their profession who had not taken a prescribed oath, was not a punishment for a criminal offense. But the prevailing opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States swept aside these contentions and held the act to be unconstitutional and void; saying:

The statute is directed against parties who have offended in any of the particulars embraced by these clauses. And its object is to exclude them from the profession of the law, or at least from its practice in the courts of the United States. As the oath prescribed cannot be taken by these parties, the act, as against them, operates as a legislative decree of perpetual exclusion. And exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct. The exaction of the oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom the act is intended to operate, and instead of lessening, increases its objectionable character. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties, and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included.

But wholly aside from the question whether or not the pending bill is unconstitutional because a bill of attainder or a bill of pains and penalties or because it is an ex post facto law, please permit me most earnestly to call your attention to the following considerations:

First. In this bill Harry Bridges is not charged with any deportable offense, nor with any offense at all. Far from being denied, this fact is asserted with evident satisfaction in the report accompanying the bill. See Report No. 2200.

Second. The motivating predicate of this bill, as set out on page 2 of the report, is as follows:

Bridges is regarded by the framers of this bill as a menace to the interests of this country. His close association with known Communists was brought out and admitted by him in the Government's warrant hearing in his deportation case during the summer of 1939.

Thus do we revert to the days of the original alien and sedition laws, which constituted so sad a chapter in the history of the American Congress. But now it is boldly admitted in this report that what was then declared unconstitutional when asserted by mere innuendo has become a legislative virtue. This frankness is commendable. It does not, however, change the fact that this bill would order the deportation of Harry Bridges without charging any offense whatsoever save that he is regarded by the framers of this bill as a menace to the interests of this country.

Third. This bill denied Bridges the right to any hearing whatsoever, although even an alien, as has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court of the United States, is entitled to due process of law under the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Fourth. This bill utterly ignores our traditional doctrine of the separation of the powers of government among the three independent, coordinate branches of our Government—legislative, executive, and judicial. It is a flagrant attempt to have the legislative branch usurp the judicial prerogative hitherto exercised exclusively by administrative or judicial tribunals.

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

In my opinion, Harry Bridges is a menace to the interests of this country, just as the framers of the pending bill regard him. He should be deported. But I maintain that he should be deported by due process of law. His banishment should be decreed for cause, ascertained by legally constituted tribunals—not by legislative usurpation.

He should be deported for what he is: an alien termite seeking to destroy our Government. He should not be magnified by being dealt with in a special, personal bill, even if it were constitutional. But we should not destroy the house of our government of laws to rid the house of one termite.

Lynching is frequently defined as the taking of the law into unauthorized hands. In the light of this definition, may not the passage of this bill be called lynching? [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the House, and the Committee of the Whole cannot extend the time.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I was too late in securing time, therefore I cannot discuss the constitutional phase of this bill.

I voted for the rule. I usually vote for a rule to bring a bill before the House for consideration. But having practiced law since 1904, having served upon the bench, and having appeared before the various courts of this country, I cannot this afternoon, regardless of what the sentiment is here, support a bill such as this containing the provisions it does. We are dealing with something bigger than a man; we are dealing with the fundamental principles of this country. We are dealing with the laws and with the Constitution of this country. Bridges may come and Bridges may go, but it is our hope that the Constitution of the United States will go on forever. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, certainly I see no reason why the membership of this House should get excited about this matter. I realize, as you do, that it is important, but after all has been said on this measure, each of us can vote as we feel about it. We may use our own reason for voting for or against it.

Mr. Bridges, according to his statement, came to the United States 20 years ago last April. He has never become a citizen of the United States. He has never availed himself of the right to appear before any one of our courts for a hearing, as provided by law, asking that he be granted the rights of citizenship. And yet he has been here for 20 years. He said in his statement, that was read by the distinguished member from New York, that in 1921 he filed his declaration to become a citizen of the United States. That he permitted the period of 7 years, as provided by law, to elapse before he thought of filing his petition for a hearing before a court to ask for the granting of a certificate of citizenship. Just a little strange that a man who could read and understand the English language, and who claims to be interested in the affairs of Government, would neglect so important a matter. The cost of a certificate of arrival is $2.50 and the cost of filing the petition is $5.

Furthermore, according to his statement, he almost immediately after his declaration of intention had expired, filed a new declaration, for which he paid the sum of $2.50. Then he says in the statement that we have before us this afternoon he did not file the petition for final papers because of lack of funds. This expense would have been, as I have said before, $2.50 for certificate of arrival and $5 for filing the petition for citizenship and the right to go before the court to ask that he be granted the rights of citizenship. Of course, if his witnesses who were to testify as to his good character and their general knowledge of him would charge him for that service, such expense would be additional.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us be fair about some of these things. What did he do about that declaration that he procured in 1928? He let it lapse; that is what he did. He let it go past the 7-year period and did not during that 7 years even attempt to complete his citizenship. Then what does the record show? In 1935 or 1936, for the third time, he paid the fee of $2.50, and again, and for the third time, filed his declaration to become a citizen of the United States. So far as the record discloses, he has not appeared before a court to ask for a hearing on the granting of final citizenship. Now, I know that this does not condemn him. He does not have to try to complete his rights of citizenship unless he wants to do so. As I said before, here is a man who claims that he is particularly interested in the affairs of this Government. He even says that he wants to help this Government to get rid of certain persons who are obnoxious to the Government of this country. It just seems strange that a man who claims leadership of a great body of American citizens could have proved his sincerity to his attachment to the principles of our Government by attempting to complete his right to become a citizen. Now, Mr. Chairman, he has answered that question rather plainly. We have his statement. It is not the statement of the Member from New York. It is the statement of the man in question. He says that if he should have attempted to complete his citizenship, the courts would not be fair to him. Read his own statement in the RECORD tomorrow. He criticizes the courts before whom he has not even requested a hearing on this question.

Mr. Chairman, something had been said about the Landis report. This report has been made a part of the report of this committee. As I understand it, the question there turned principally on a technicality as to whether or not there was sufficient proof to show that he was "affiliated" with certain organizations. You have that report before you.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, you have a statement of the man who is the subject matter of this bill before you. His statement, consisting of several typewritten pages, has been read to you by a Member of this body. Not to a committee, but by unanimous consent of this membership, the Congressman of New York was granted the privilege of taking the time to place the entire statement before us. I am very glad, indeed, that it was done.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does not inflict punishment on anyone. It does not put anyone in jail or in the penitentiary. It does not relieve him of any of his property. It does not attempt to cancel the citizenship of anyone. It simply says, in substance, that, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, that this alien has so conducted and demeaned himself that his further presence in this country is undesirable. That during the 20 years he has been a guest of this country his conduct and demeanor are such that he should be invited to return to his native country of Australia, if that is the place from whence he came.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the situations that I am about to mention may not quite fit into each other, but a good deal has been said about the right of Congress to deport an alien in this manner. But there are Members of this body who are opposed to this measure, who have private bills pending before the Committee on Immigration, asking that certain individual aliens be permitted to remain in the United States, the application of the law notwithstanding. A number of these bills, for various reasons, have merit. As a matter of fact, this Congress has approved many such bills during this and other sessions. Many have been passed by unanimous consent and without debate.

One thing more, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman from New York quoted Mr. Bridges as saying that he was offered $50,000 if he would resign his leadership of a certain group and join a group or organization who offered the $50,000. That is a pretty strong indictment. I think that if the gentleman really wanted to be really fair, if he is the kind of a person he claims for himself, then in view of this much of his statement he should disclose the name of the person or persons who made the offer and should furnish such further information on this matter as would be of interest to this Government. I believe it is his duty to do it. As a matter of fact, if he wants to be open and aboveboard, he should provide the information or explain why it should not be done. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to take into custody and deport to Australia, the country of which he is a citizen or subject, the alien, Harry Renton Bridges, in the manner provided by sections 155 and 156, title 8, United States Code.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LESINSKI: Mr. LESINSKI moves to amend the title by striking out the word "authorize" and inserting the word "direct."

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, in explanation to the House, the committee wants it mandatory that Harry Bridges be deported.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Attorney General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to take into custody forthwith and deport forthwith to Australia, the country of which he is a citizen or subject, the alien, Harry Renton Bridges, whose presence in this country the Congress deems hurtful."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to prevent any attempt to find a loophole, through a technicality of any description, which would tend to prohibit or prevent the Attorney General of the United States or any individual from evading the intent and purpose of this bill which is a mandate by the Congress of the United States to deport this undesirable alien, Harry Renton Bridges.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. What would happen if Bridges were arrested according to the direction of Congress and Australia refused to accept him?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That becomes a problem for the Department of Justice.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield further, I think I can give him some information.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the situation, if an alien is ordered deported and arrested and the country of his origin or where he belongs refuses to accept him, he is then in custody in the United States. We have had a number of similar cases, as I understand. Russia will not receive a Communist who is ordered deported. Therefore he is in the custody of the United States, and the practice, as I understand it, has been to release him on his own recognizance. The Hobbs bill was introduced here and passed the House in an effort to remedy that situation, but it has not been remedied.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. In reply to the gentleman from Michigan, according to information furnished by the Department of Labor, the United States has encountered no difficulty with the British Government or her possessions about the return of aliens.

Mr. MICHENER. I think that is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. We should not encounter any difficulty in the return of Mr. Bridges since the Department of Justice will be compelled to comply with such a mandate of Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The British Government, of which Harry Renton Bridges is a subject, can use him to good advantage in the fighting lines and we will at the same time be removing him from the guerrilla bushwhacking lines where he is trying to destroy our country's national defense through disruption of the merchant marine of our country.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the latter part of this amendment bring this bill in line with the decisions and statements of our own Supreme Court?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the fact that if his amendment is carried out to its utmost that he even deprives Mr. Bridges of an opportunity to sue in the courts for a writ of habeas corpus?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. An alien who is here for the purpose of destroying our form of government is not entitled to the protection of our courts and has the gall to expect such consideration.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Has no right to a writ of habeas corpus?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Not under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. GWYNNE. Is it not a fact that the court has already said that the Congress may deport a person and that he has no right to a trial in the courts?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is the decision of the court?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question as to the last part of that amendment which, as I understand it, states that the Congress deems his presence to be hurtful? I am wondering about the advisability of that language, and will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. That phrase was included in the bill to bring it in line with the Supreme Court decision which uses that specific language.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does not that put the Congress in the position of sitting in judicial review and forming conclusions?

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman from Washington that that decision was written by Mr. Justice Holmes in 1913, and a similar one by Mr. Justice Brandeis in 1922.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. This action is supported by the Supreme Court in two decisions, one of Mahler v. Eby, (264 U. S. 32 (1924), and Bugajewitz v. Adams (228 U. S. 585 (1913)), where it was held that the right to expel aliens is a sovereign power, and the fact of prior conviction, even under laws since repealed—the espionage and selective draft acts—may be made the basis for classification as an undesirable subject to deportation.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. In offering this amendment, I want to take the privilege of calling the attention of the House to the fact that this action is nonpartisan, since Democrats and Republicans support this urgent legislation.

My colleague the gentleman from Louisiana, the Honorable A. LEONARD ALLEN, is a comember of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and is the author of this bill. He is to be warmly commended by Democrats and Republicans alike for his stanch Americanism.

The intent of the Allen bill is without doubt one of the greatest contributions that an American can make in these trying days to the welfare of our country. This bill brings to the attention of the House that a democracy can function irrespective of any dilatory tactics on the part of high officials of the Government.

The people of Louisiana may point with pardonable pride to the courage, loyalty, love, and devotion to America that their Representative, the gentleman from Louisiana, A. LEONARD ALLEN, has so ably demonstrated in introducing this timely and patriotic measure. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am saddened and disappointed to think that with but an hour's debate we should contemplate passing such a far-reaching bill as this, particularly at a time like this. It has been said on this floor that more is at stake in this resolution than the deportation of Harry Bridges. With that I agree. I think there is a great deal at stake. I do not think it is necessary to preface my remarks by saying I am opposed to Communists and communism and to Nazis and nazi-ism. I do not question the desirability of deporting Harry Bridges. From all that I have heard, from all that I have read, I believe that he is an undesirable alien; but if our laws are not adequate to protect us from undesirable aliens then it is certainly the duty of this Congress to stay in session and enact such legislation as will give us the protection that we are entitled to, and we should not be asked to pass on bills of this kind with an hour's debate. I am not a lawyer. I cannot discuss the constitutional question involved, and I am inclined to be glad sometime that that ambition was never realized. It has been said that it is not punishment to deport an alien. Perhaps, legally, it is not; but if I happened to be an alien and I had a wife and two children here, and I was ordered deported, I would think that I was being punished by somebody.

The substitute, or amendment, that we are asked to pass now even deprives this alien of whatever rights he may have had under our laws, such as the right to a writ of habeas corpus. It deprives him of any rights that he may have under the Constitution.

If this bill is passed, I fear that we will have an epidemic of bills to deport this man or that man, this woman or that woman, and I fear, perhaps in a spirit of hysteria that may manifest itself if world conditions stay as they are, that some Member may even rise in the Well of this House and propose to deport his alien mother-in-law, or even suggest the deportation of aliens who happen to have red hair, if that color happens to become unpopular during the present war. The only evidence we have before us is in the report of the committee reporting out this bill that in the opinion of the sponsors Harry Bridges is a menace to the institutions of this country, and that he has had close association with known Communists. That is all the evidence we have. If a man can be deported without a hearing, without a trial, without the right of appeal because he has associated with Communists, and because the framer of a bill, regardless of whom he may be, thinks that he is a menace, then the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and all civil liberties have gone out of the window. I hope in the few minutes that now remain before we vote on this bill that we will consider its far-reaching effect and govern ourselves accordingly.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The bill is distinctly unconstitutional, and now by suspending the operation of the writ of habeas corpus, it is making the bill doubly unconstitutional.

Mr. MILLER. I leave that for the attorneys in the House to decide.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If we pass this bill this afternoon—and I have no word in defense of this man, I would not know him if I saw him—the precedent that we will establish will plague every Congress as long as there is a Congress held under the Constitution of the United States. This is a time when we must keep our feet on the ground. This bill as originally drawn might give a man a chance for a trial, because it says that he would be deported in the manner provided by sections 155 and 156 of the United States Code. As a matter of fact, the bill would really be ineffective as of itself to deport him.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. In a moment. The bill provided as originally drawn for deporting him in accordance with the provisions of those sections. Those provisions give the man a right to be tried, and find out whether or not he is guilty of the things that would cause him to be deported. Everything was a question of fact there. Section 156 provided for the contingency which is met by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] when he asked, Supposing Australia refuses to accept him? Section 156 would meet that, but that has been eliminated. If Australia does not accept him, you can keep him here in jail until he rots, by the amendment now proposed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. He needs to rot.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is not the question. We are dealing more with law than a man. It is not necessary for me to tell you that this is a government not of men, but a government of law, unless we have lost our heads and senses. Such legislation leads to a breaking down of the fundamental principles that the founders of our Constitution gave us. I fully realize that the word "alien" today seems of itself to bring to the surface emotions that tend to override our deliberate judgment. This should not be the case unless we are descendants of Indians as we are all descendants of, at one time, aliens. I do not believe we should be squeamish about the word "alien." Aliens have the same Constitutional rights and the same rights to due process of law as have citizens. It might be of interest to read United States Code of 1934, title 18, article 52.

We still have a government by law. I have gone through some of this in 1917. Yes, Mr. Chairman, among other things I have seen mobs take a man out on the street and make him kiss the flag or else be hanged. For what? Because he used more bread than the local committee thought he ought to have used. Those are the things that will live to plague us in the future.

We have got something at stake here today much bigger than Harry Bridges. Of course, I will agree with my friend; I think he ought to rot. The gentleman is right. But that is not the case. Do you want your Constitution to become punctured with holes like this, by reason of which it will gradually be broken down? My friends, this is a serious problem. I would not know Bridges if I met him in the road, branded, but I do know something about our Constitution. I do know that our Constitution and laws rise above men. This man will be gone in years to come; perhaps shortly. People will forget him. But the precedent we are establishing this afternoon will rise up to plague us in the future. It will plague the Congress in the future.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. My question is this: Certainly the gentleman does not take the position that Harry Bridges will be accorded any kind of a trial if the original bill is passed? That is the very thing the bill is to be passed for—to deny the right of trial.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I agree with the gentleman from Utah that that is the purpose of the bill; but, in my opinion, the one who drafted the bill slipped a cog, for if you read the language of the bill you will find it says that Bridges will be deported in the manner provided by sections 155 and 156. Now, section 155 goes into detail and sets forth the various acts for which an alien may be deported. Now, if we pass this bill, before such deportation could take effect he would have to be arrested and charged with a violation of section 155, and, when so charged, necessary proof would be required. Consequently it would mean a sort of a trial or, in other words, some evidence would be required to support the arrest. Section 156 deals with the port to which the alien may be deported, and costs of transportation, and so forth. I fully realize that no such procedure was contemplated by the author of this bill, but, as I said before, I think the bill is subject to such interpretation; and, as I said, I do not think the bill would accomplish his deportation without trial.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, during the past 2 hours of heated discussion on the pending bill to deport the radical Communist agitator, Harry Bridges, the burden of the argument of those Members who are so violently opposing this legislation is, first, that the bill is unconstitutional, and, second, that they fear the far-reaching effect of this legislation on the future of this country. I shall, therefore, confine my remarks primarily to an effort to answer these two arguments.

Answering the first argument, which has been stressed, as I recall, by every opposition speaker, let me say I yield to no man in my love and devotion to the Constitution of the United States. I believe sincerely that our forefathers were inspired by divine guidance when they wrote that great, sacred document. It is unquestionably the greatest and most profound document of its kind ever penned by mortal man. [Applause.]

During my several years' service in the Congress I have to the best of my ability endeavored to support the spirit as well as the letter of the Constitution of the United States. But I must confess that I am somewhat surprised to find gentlemen here who have never raised a constitutional question against any other bill during their sojourn in this Congress until this day. It is amusing to hear men stand in the Well of this House and plead for the Constitution of the United States who, during the past several years, never thought of raising the question against dozens of other important measures when the question of constitutionality had been seriously raised. It would seem that it depends altogether upon whose ox is being gored as to whether some Members of this body are really concerned as to the constitutionality of legislation under consideration.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], with a husky voice and almost with tears in his eyes, pleads for his fellow traveler, Harry Bridges, in the name of the Constitution of the United States. He has suddenly become very much exercised lest the Congress of the United States might pass an unconstitutional act. It is significant that the gentleman from New York has the distinction of being the only Member of this House who has consistently opposed all of the President's national-defense program.

The fact is that this House has been very charitable in permitting him to read into the RECORD a long, belabored address supposedly prepared by this ex-Communist leader, whose only excuse for not taking out naturalization papers in the 19 years that he has been an unwelcome guest from his native Australia is that he feels that the courts are all bad and prejudiced against him and would not give him a square deal. Frankly, my own feeling is, from a study of his record, that if he had received a square deal that Bridges would have been deported by this Government years ago. [Applause.]

That this body is willing to hear that long statement of defense of Bridges which begs the question and attempts to inject prejudices and side issues into the discussion is a compliment to our democratic form of government. I have repeatedly said that in my judgment we have been entirely too tolerant with the alien enemies within our midst. That is especially true of this particular undesirable alien.

Another distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] talked with a tearful voice about the Constitution of the United States. He, too, has suddenly become deeply concerned about the Constitution. He read into the record a case decided by the court in an effort to prove his contention that this Congress has no legal right under the Constitution to deport an undesirable alien. You will recall I asked the gentleman how he reached the conclusion that Congress is forbidden under the Constitution to deport an alien while at the same time he himself has introduced more bills than any other Member of Congress to import aliens into the United States and to keep them here after they have been imported. [Applause.]

I have noticed that a number of our learned legal lights of this body, most of whom freely admit that they are great constitutional lawyers, when a bill is presented here in which the public is particularly interested that does not suit them and they can find no other excuse for opposing it, some of them will rush to the Well of this House, get their voices down in their boots, and declare over and over that they are not against the purposes of the bill but their great legal training prevents them from giving their full support to a measure because they are so fearful that the Supreme Court of the United States might declare such legislation unconstitutional.

I have sometimes said that I can take a stick as long as my two fingers and write that one word, "unconstitutional," on the end of it and scare some of the so-called big lawyers on both sides of this aisle almost out of this Capitol.

Let me say in passing that I do not pretend to be a great constitutional lawyer, as so many here today profess to be. I have seriously studied that Constitution since I was a small child. I was taught to memorize not only the preamble but many of its provisions before I was old enough to go to school. I have studied constitutional law all of my life. I have read the constitution of many of the States of the Union and of many of the countries of the Old World. I have studied constitutional law, not only in our schools in America but in one of the best law schools in the Old World, and the more I study our own great Constitution of the United States, the more I am impressed with the necessity of carrying out not only the letter but the spirit of our Constitution. [Applause.] It occurs to me that if the framers of that great document could be listening in on this debate that they would be amazed and somewhat chagrined that Members of the Congress of the United States would actually have the gall to defend an alien enemy who has caused more disturbance in our laboring groups and done more to tear down the spirit of the Constitution of the United States than any other man in America during the past generation. I sincerely believe that the spirit of our beloved and heroic forefathers, if here today, would impel us to send not only alien agitators but all of his kind back to the country from which they came. [Applause.]

But I must not spend all of my time talking about the Constitution. The other point that so many have stressed as to the far-reaching effect of this legislation must not be overlooked. Yes; I agree that this bill, when passed and signed by the President of the United States, will have a far-reaching effect. There is no question about that. It will have the effect of saying to thousands of other alien agitators and racketeers to cease their activities or be prepared to be deported to their home lands. It will have the far-reaching effect of giving notice to the dictators and other enemies of democracy everywhere that there is no room for those who advocate the overthrow of our Government or preach any other ism than old-fashioned Americanism. [Applause.]

It will have the far-reaching effect of giving notice to that entirely too large army in the United States, which we now call the "fifth column," that the Trojan horses in America on which they ride, will not in the future, have such green pastures on which to graze. [Applause.]

Now just a word about the committee amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. As a matter of fact, this committee amendment merely clarifies what the original bill intended to do. It does not deny the right of habeas corpus to determine the question of the right of Congress to pass this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Undoubtedly the gentleman is correct. Let me say here that no Member of this House, so far as I know, would deny anyone their civil rights. And all this talk about denying a citizen or even an alien the right of habeas corpus is absurd and beside the issue. Of course the Congress has the right to pass a bill to deport an alien within our gates. They are here by the grace of our great benevolent Government. To those aliens who appreciate the protection of American institutions I have nothing but a most kindly feeling, but to that horde of undesirable aliens, who accept the protection of our Government and yet owe their allegiance to a foreign country are in a poor position to whine about their inalienable rights. [Applause.]

My own feeling is that Harry Bridges should count himself lucky to be only deported. In months to come enemy aliens will undoubtedly be dealt with more harshly than just being deported. But bear in mind that is the only thing this committee is now asking—just deport an un-American radical agitator; to send him back to the country that he really loves; send him back to the country that he undoubtedly owes his first and only allegiance. We do not need him and his kind here. Oh, yes; his deportation will have a far-reaching effect, all right. [Applause.]

The record is that Harry Bridges came here in 1921. It took him 7 years to decide that he wanted to take out his second papers, and then when the storm blew over he decided he did not want to become a citizen. Four times he has taken out his first papers and four times he decided he did not think enough of this country to become a citizen of the United States. He has been warned over and over. Again, I say he is fortunate, considering his shameful record, to be only deported back to his homeland. [Applause.]

A few years ago I visited most of the so-called Lowland Countries of Europe. For years all of them have tolerated "fifth column" agitators. Leaders in those countries actually thought such a policy was the liberal thing to do. It was the enemy within their gates that attributed most to their defeat. Surely we have learned a valuable lesson from what we have seen and heard in those little countries of Europe.

Let the word be flashed around the world that the American Congress has finally decided that our Nation will no longer tolerate alien enemies, parasites, or "fifth column" agitators, spies, saboteurs, and other enemies within our borders. They hate our American Constitution, yet when trouble befalls them would use it to protect their dastardly deeds. From henceforth let our motto be lifted high like a beacon light, so that all who run may read, "America for Americans." [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Is the amendment now pending in the form of a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now pending strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts other language.

Mr. MICHENER. If that is the case, if this amendment when voted upon is carried there will be no opportunity for further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Not if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. So that all debate must be had on this amendment. The motion to close debate was on this amendment and all amendments thereto. The result, as I understand it, is to close debate on the whole resolution unless the amendment should perchance be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that if the substitute is agreed to under the rule the committee would rise and report the bill to the House.

The Chair has a list of eight Members who have asked for time on this amendment. Sixteen minutes remain. Without objection, the Chair will recognize these gentlemen in the order in which their names appear on this list, for 2 minutes each.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is an amendment to the substitute in order? I have a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for the pending amendment would be in order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: Strike out lines 3, 4, and 5, and insert "That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to immediately institute proper proceedings in the proper court to deport Harry Bridges, an alien, in accordance with sections 155 and 156, title VIII, U. S. Code."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment permit me to call attention to the fact that only recently the President of the United States transferred from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice all matters dealing with immigration. This plan was approved by the Congress. Why? Because the Congress had confidence in the Department of Justice.

If this amendment is adopted, the Attorney General is directed—he would have no discretion—he is directed to institute proper proceedings for the deportation of this man in accordance with the laws of this country.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am heartily in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment and shall support it. I wish Bridges and many others like him were out of the country. We have laws and we have courts. If our laws are inadequate, let us make them adequate and then depend upon our courts to see that due process of law is carried on. Let us not do the right thing in the wrong way by passing an unconstitutional bill. It should be amended.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman. He is always right. I hope the other Members of the House will also vote for the amendment. Such proceedings would be in accord with our laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I have heard many men raise their voices here today in defense of Harry Bridges. But do you realize there are hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of people in this country whose rights have been violated? I have not heard these men raise their voices in their protection.

I want to say to you that Harry Bridges by his own handwriting, by documentary evidence, has perjured himself, according to the record I have read here today. He is guilty of perjury, he is guilty of moral turpitude, he is guilty of disturbing the peace, he is a lawbreaker, he is a "fifth columnist."

It is difficult to conceive that a man can go out on the Pacific coast and blockade that whole coast, all the ports on the Pacific coast, and that man still be allowed to remain in the country. I cannot understand this thing. I do not understand the attitude of you people who defend him.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. No; I have only a short time.

If this is a special bill I say to you that by his actions Harry Bridges has created a special lot of trouble for this country and should be taken out on that account. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee, rise?

Mr. MASON. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. Is the substitute motion before us now, or the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MASON. And all time for debate on the committee amendment and the substitute will expire at 5 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

If the Committee will indulge the Chair, the Chair will state that the Chair has a list of eight Members who were on their feet at the time the gentleman from Montana offered his substitute amendment. Without objection the Chair will recognize these gentlemen in the order in which they appear on this list.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri to the amendment: After the word "deport", in line 4, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert the following: "any undesirable alien who advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States."

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the amendment speaks for itself, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri) there were—ayes 66, noes 87.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri and Mr. LESINSKI to acts as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 76, noes 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] for one-half minute.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] very often, and again I do not agree with him. I want to read a telegram which shows that not all the people on the Pacific coast feel just exactly as my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

This telegram reads as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 5, 1940.

Hon. LEE GEYER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Understand House Immigration Committee has just sought to force H. R. 9766 to floor of House. Also understand Congressman KRAMER stated "7,000,000 people in California suffering from the activities of Bridges." We have wired Congressman KRAMER that 200,000 members of Labor's Nonpartisan League of California seriously disagree with him. Opposition to Bridges comes from employer group only. Millions of California workers have benefited directly and indirectly from organizational work of Bridges, who has acted in accordance with law and whose record is without a blemish. His deportation is attack on wages, working conditions, and civil liberties and is without legal or moral justification. Request you inform Congress of incorrectness KRAMER's statement and do all possible to defeat this bill.

E. E. WARD,
State Secretary, Labor's Nonpartisan League of California.

Mr. Chairman, oh, patriotism, what crimes are committed in thy name.

I cannot say that I know Harry Bridges personally as I have met him only casually on two occasions.

I do know this, that several thousand members of his union living in my district have implicit faith in him. They attribute to him the fact that working conditions and wages they receive are much better than before he took the leadership of their organization.

To this fact add that even now this union is negotiating a new contract and you will have the real reason why some deem him to be undesirable. Boiled down to the last analysis we do not hesitate to state that this is the old battle between the union and the employers. Is this Congress going to take sides in this controversy? Are we going to fail to face the issue squarely? Or will we, under the cloak of Americanism, violate those very principles of democracy that we claim to espouse?

I maintain that this body should be the last in the world to succumb to hysteria and establish such a precedent as this just because it is good politics in an election year.

I did not think things would come to such a pass that I should ever hear a member of the Rules Committee so flout the principles of democracy as to make such a statement as I heard in that committee the other day when this bill was being considered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated, "The Congress needs no reason for deporting a man. It is enough if we do not like the color of his eyes."

This coming from a high-ranking minority member of that powerful committee. If this is an indication of the stabilizing effect of keeping the Congress in session during these critical days then I say the sooner we go home the better.

Much has been said against this man and the labor organization he heads. He has been proved by a judicial procedure not to be guilty as charged. In the United States I thought only the guilty were punished and then after due process of law. We are importing Hitler methods. Can we protect democracy by destroying it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], neither one of whom can be accused of being sympathizers with subversive activities. They have ascended to the heights of true statesmanship today, rising above passion, and voting their convictions to maintain the Constitution, which they swore to uphold and defend against enemies from within and without. They are great statesmen and they voted their constitutional convictions. [Applause.]

A few days ago I was one of those who blocked unanimous consent for the House passage, without debate or study, of the Allen bill to deport Harry Bridges. My reason for doing so was that the measure was highly controversial and that I wanted ample time to be accorded to the proponents and opponents to discuss it. Personally, I was and am convinced that the proposed bill is unconstitutional and that the Members should know the course they were pursuing in this connection. For that reason I voted today in favor of the rule on the bill. I hoped that full and fair discussion would be given to the merits and demerits of the measure and that it might be amended so as to make it apply to general classes rather than to individuals; and, failing that, that we might get the bill recommitted with specific instructions to improve it.

Mr. Chairman, we are again approaching the hysteria days of 1916–17, when rational people seem to be inspired by hatred and intolerance, when emotions often dethrone reason, and when normally sober citizens in their excitement favor legislation which they ordinarily would quickly condemn. I am not on this floor today in the capacity of a champion of Harry Bridges. I hold no brief for or against him. It may be that he is guilty of all of the charges of misconduct and subversive activities directed against him. For the sake of argument it might even be assumed that he was a Communist, though Dean James M. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School, after protracted hearings and listening to full evidence, exonerated him of that charge. The fate of Harry Bridges is not the point. He is but an incident. I personally condemn individuals and organizations who plot to overthrow our form of government by force and violence. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, our Constitution guarantees to every resident of our land full civil rights and the democratic process. Some of the leading newspapers in America, in their editorial columns, have condemned this measure on the ground that it is unprecedented; that it would establish a dangerous precedent; that it violates the Constitution in that it is a bill of attainder, prohibited by section 9, article I, of the Constitution of the United States. By permission of the House I am including a few pertinent extracts from these editorials. It will be noted that these editorials are taken from some of the most conservative Republican newspapers in the United States.

One of our main difficulties is to divorce cold logic from sentiment. It has often been said that no person is eligible for a judgeship who is incapable of hearing testimony and making decisions without emotional bias. A man is said to possess a judicial temperament when he can view a situation objectively, dispassionately, and realistically. One of the foibles of mankind, however, is that too many of us decide questions from our subjective reactions rather than from our objective reactions. In the trial of a criminal case opposing counsel and the judge sedulously endeavor to secure a jury which will decide the facts of the case impartially. We do not go into a criminal case with our minds made up against the criminal beforehand.

Even to the most despicable criminal, palpably guilty of the most revolting crime, we who are lawyers, and who under oath have sworn to uphold the Constitution, should and would insist there be given every protection guaranteed under the law—that is the principle for which our remote Anglo-Saxon ancestors fought through the centuries and which was graven in the Magna Carta at Runnymede in 1215. Are we going to proclaim here today that the Constitution be suspended in periods of excitement, when we are worried about a war in Europe, though this country itself is not engaged in war? Are we going to take an action which will be tantamount to a blackout of civil liberties for those with whom we disagree? Are we going to deny the soundness of the immortal statement ascribed to the French novelist, Voltaire, when he said substantially in these words: "I wholly disagree with what you say, but I will fight to the death to uphold your right to say it"? Does this Congress repudiate the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, who drafted, sponsored, and guided through to enactment our Bill of Rights, the first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States? Are we going to be intimidated here today into failing to do our sworn duty and into flouting the Constitution because of fear of political repercussions?

I deny that a no vote on the pending bill proves, or even indicates, a sympathy for Harry Bridges personally, or approval of the course he has pursued as a labor leader or as a resident of our country. I emphatically deny such a conclusion. I denounce those who visit upon us condemnation for doing our constitutional duty. Every criminal should be accorded his day in court. Even a murderer has a right to a trial by jury; the right to be confronted by his accusers; the right to be represented throughout his trial by counsel; the right to help in the selection of the jury; and other kindred privileges. These we have denied the prisoner at the bar here today.

O, Mr. Chairman, this Congress is about to embark upon an unprecedented course. We are going to pass a bill which has no parallel in American history. This bill denies due process guaranteed under the fifth amendment. The committee reporting out this bill refused to accord Bridges even a hearing. If the bill is valid, why has no similar bill ever passed Congress?

I am including herein a brief which I contend overwhelmingly establishes the invalidity of this measure. The Van Zandt amendment makes the measure even more unconstitutional in that it attempts to deny the right of securing a writ of habeas corpus to the person affected. I have heard some peculiar law discussed on this floor today. It has been said that because Congress passes private bills permitting certain designated aliens to remain in the country, or granting them rights under the immigration laws, Congress ergo has the corresponding right in a private bill directed against one named individual to deport an alien.

With all the vehemence and emphasis at my command I deny the logic of such an argument. It is not recognized in the courts. It is elementary law, that in the former case we are granting a privilege, while in the latter case we are imposing a penalty. In Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence these categories have been clearly distinguished through the centuries.

The truth of the matter is there are some here who unconsciously would deny civil liberties to aliens, or who sincerely believe that the Constitution was not intended to be a bulwark of protection to those with whom we disagree on economic or political matters.

Senators Norris, of Nebraska, La Follette, of Wisconsin, and the late Senator Borah, of Idaho, have frequently insisted that the most distinguishing characteristic of a democracy is its guarantee of civil rights to all within the borders of that democracy. One of Senator Borah's last speeches was a warning that under the impact of a war hysteria, amid the jitters generated by fears and hatreds springing from the problems of a war-torn world, there would be a crack-down upon liberal groups and individuals, upon labor leaders and organizations, upon religious leaders and sects, upon racial groups and dissident minorities in general.

Germany went through that process. We want no Hitlerism here. No matter in what beguiling dress tendencies toward fascism may be cloaked, I warn this House we must resist them. I affirm my patriotism and loyalty to the United States—no one need question that. I repudiate extremisms. It is because I love my country and its institutions that I want no law passed here which aims at its vitals. My colleague the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], a jurist of distinction and wide and varied experience, has given us his considered opinion to the effect that this bill was clearly unconstitutional. When such a high-minded statesman as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] indicates by his vote his conclusions that this bill is invalid, it should be reassuring to many. It will be noted that among those voting "no" on this measure are some of the most conservative Members of this House, men who despite their hearty disagreement with the philosophy and activities of Harry Bridges nevertheless cannot stomach this method of attack upon him.

Of course, this Congress has the right to deport aliens—not by directing a bill against an individual without providing that that individual be accorded every right under the law, but by passing a bill dealing with aliens in categories. I shall discuss that matter more fully in the brief.

In my home city of Tacoma there is published the Tacoma Labor Advocate, the official organ of the central labor council of that city. This is the federation of unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. There has been friction between Bridges and these unions for some time, as he has been an officer of a rival labor organization. Nevertheless, despite the bitter anger of the A. F. of L. unions at Bridges and their condemnation of him personally and as a labor leader, these unions, speaking through their official organ, the Tacoma Labor Advocate, denounced the Allen bill as "an absurd proposal." The editorial clearly sets forth the strong feelings of these A. F. of L. unionists in antipathy to everything about Bridges, but they warmly declare in this editorial that the Allen bill is a "disgraceful move" and that it is an "ungodly measure."

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Tacoma Labor Advocate of May 24, 1940]

AN ABSURD PROPOSAL

Just about the time that Harry Bridges is losing prestige among the workers, someone, somewhere, devises a way of galvanizing his reputation, however faded as a labor leader, back into life.

The latest effort in this direction is to pass a special law to deport him. No excuse is offered for such summary legislation. It is just a means of getting rid of one that is presumed to be objectionable.

Now no labor or other paper has indulged in strictures to the extent of the Tacoma Labor Advocate against Harry Bridges, and from first to last we have frankly regarded him as a fakir of the first degree. But in spite of that we may say that we are definitely opposed to any such legislation as that now pending in the Congress to get rid of the Australian.

Bridges, as a British subject, has as much right here as any American, under treaties with Great Britain. As long as he is not shown to be violating the law, his presence here is condoned by treaty which precedes any law that Congress may enact. And because that is the case, we suspect that back of this legislation there is a sinister effort to popularize and to rehabilitate Bridges in the public mind.

He can pose as a martyr for the working-class doctrines that he pretends to hold. And just as the trial or hearing by Dean Landis proved such a mint to the cause, so this new statute which it is proposed to enact to deport him is so well calculated to restore Bridges to popular good will, we regard it with a good deal of suspicion.

The workers cannot at the present stage of things regard Bridges as anything else but a phoney fourflusher. And his scheme stolen, according to Faisie, from the bosses, of a 5-year peace, should have the effect of weaning the last vestige of favor from this man who betrays them.

We don't know who has been backing Bridges. We don't know what form of support has been forthcoming to supply him with a martyr's garb every time that his stock gets below par. We do know that that is exactly what has happened, and we are very suspicious of these efforts to deport Bridges, whose actions in our estimation show that he is not the friend of the longshoremen but the friend of the groups definitely opposing the longshoremen.

Whether this group is the Railroad Trust, as some suspect, or not, we cannot pretend to know; nor can we say that they have any hidden or open alliance with Bridges.

We do know that as a result of Bridges' operation and administration of the Pacific coast water-front union business, general business has sunk and sunk until it reached so low a minimum that its revival is impossible to figure. We note that the perishable trade, the citrus trade, the lumber trade, the many and various kinds of freight that once were brought and shipped hither and yon by the shipping on the Pacific coast, now goes that way no more. Instead the freight finds its way by truck or by railroad car, while, bit by bit, the coastal shipping trade languishes.

That trade languishes because they couldn't depend upon the operation of the docks and the movement of freight, what with strikes of one kind or another sponsored or authorized under Bridges' administration, and things have reached such a pass that it seems to many that freight movements by sea have been lost forever to coastal shipping, while railways and trucks enjoy it instead—and Bridges organizes his inland warehousemen, or says he does.

The last act for which Bridges acquired fame was a proposal to sell the workers down the river for a 5-year peace pact, with arbitration thrown in, and the workers compelled to accept present conditions as if, even with war in Europe or in America, prices could be stabilized and wages with them. This notorious act has scandalized even some of Bridges' most loyal followers. He may explain that he desires this peace so that he can march inland to secure into his organization the warehousemen far beyond the Cascades, the Sierras, and the Rockies, and for which organization the longshoremen must pay.

Naturally, Bridges needs some sort of a restorative to a waning reputation, and naturally the bill to deport him—to deport him personally as a special order of Government business—is just what is calculated to make the people believe that he is still the matchless leader, still the militant chief, still the undaunted hero that won all his strikes, and all that sort of "hooey" which his "Commy" colleagues built up for him must be true.

We wonder what stooge of the party line, posing as an opponent of subversive doctrines, suggested that ungodly measure to deport Bridges—to deport him just now when his stock has sunk below the zero mark.

I have been much influenced in my course on this bill by the conclusions of this editorial. There is no question but what the passage of this measure will have a tendency to martyrize Bridges in the eyes of extremists. There are legal and illegal ways of accomplishing one's objective. I consider this Allen bill ultra vires of Congress under the Constitution. I denominate this measure by a term commonly found in the parlance of lawyers, "sui generis"—a kind unto itself. I defy the bill's proponents to find any justification in the writings of legal scholars, in the decisions handed down by jurists, to justify their contention that this bill will survive in the Federal courts.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against the instant measure, convinced as I am that the bill is unconstitutional.

From the New York Herald Tribune comes the following editorial:

DANGEROUS DEPARTURE

Very possibly Congress has the constitutional right to order the deportation of Harry Bridges. But, to pass a bill for the purpose aimed at an individual would be an unprecedented step which all Americans should view with grave misgivings.

The readers of this newspaper hardly need a reminder of its attitude toward the west coast labor leader and its demand that he be put through the mill of deportation proceedings. But though we found it difficult to agree with Dean Landis, who conducted the hearings in the case, that Bridges was not a Communist or otherwise a fit subject for deportation, his formal verdict, we felt, should end the controversy.

It should end it for the simple reason that, whether mistaken or not, it was arrived at after a full and fair consideration of the facts, and by that due process of law which is the bulwark of our liberties. Bridges is not a citizen of the United States. Technically, therefore, he may not be immune to congressional action of the sort contemplated. Nevertheless such action, if not a violation of the Constitution, would constitute a breach of the traditional policy of the country that aliens, as well as citizens, are entitled to the equal protection of its laws. We can far better afford to harbor Bridges than to permit Congress to single him out for punishment.

The Los Angeles Times has been famous in the past for its fights with labor unions and leaders. Yet it strongly questions the wisdom of this bill.

TO DEPORT BRIDGES

The House Immigration Committee took the unusual step yesterday of voting to approve, after only 1 day's consideration, a bill to deport Harry Bridges, alien radical labor leader. The bill was introduced by Representative ALLEN of Louisiana on Tuesday.

ALLEN declared Congress should act specifically when alien radicals escape through a technicality.

The technicality in this case is that James M. Landis chose not to believe the sworn testimony of American citizens and to believe Bridges and that Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins backed him up with an almost audible sigh of relief.

Congress would be justified in feeling considerable impatience under the circumstances, but such legislation sets a rather bad precedent. If the heavy artillery of a congressional enactment must be dragged out to demolish all the nuisances that need deportation, it would seem simpler to revise the existing deportation machinery. Why not transfer immigration and deportation to the State Department? Secretary Hull would have Bridges out of the country in short order.

See also the editorial appearing in the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press:

DEPORTING BRIDGES

When Dean James M. Landis, of Harvard, decided in a special hearing for the Department of Labor that Harry Bridges, west-coast, Australian-born labor leader, was not a proven Communist and therefore not deportable, it was freely predicted that this was not the final word on the Bridges case. Now the House Immigration Committee has approved a bill aimed specifically at the deportation of this man.

Whether this measure would stand up in the courts may be doubted. Even if it would, it seems to establish a very bad precedent. The enactment of special legislation for the deportation of a specific individual would set up the possibility of many abuses. It would then be possible to frame measures to get rid of any person against whom popular prejudice might be directed by specific charges framed to fit the case.

It has been suggested that it might be wholly proper to enact regulations which would call for the deportation of aliens who have failed to take out citizenship papers after remaining in this country a certain number of years. Even legislation of this type would require careful exceptions so that injustices would not be done.

It seems quite logical, nevertheless, to insist that aliens who come into this country to make their homes should be required to accept citizenship after a specified period unless there is some good excuse for not doing so. Bridges has had ample opportunity to become a citizen but has failed to take advantage of it.

It would not be wise, however, to seek Bridges' ouster through a special measure aimed at him alone. Unless he is deportable under laws applicable to all aliens and under regulations that would apply impartially to all, it would be better that he remained. What the Immigration Committee is proposing is, in effect, the substitution of legislative for judicial procedure. It is an encroachment of the legislative on the judicial branch of the Government, which is a practice that has been roundly condemned.

The author of the bill, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], admits frankly that he is "striking out on a new and untried route." The Nashville (Tenn.) Banner, in an editorial summarizes the situation by saying that the proper way to get at the situation is not through the form of such a bill as is proposed.

In the Evening Post, of New York City, appears an editorial which speaks for itself:

IN CONTEMPT OF LAW

Congress has before it a bill which would deport Harry Bridges, leader of the C. I. O. on the West Coast. It is an extraordinary measure. It makes no attempt to establish a rule which would apply to all aliens or define some new class of offense which would be grounds for deportation. The bill simply says point blank, that Harry Bridges should be made to leave the United States.

Those responsible for drawing the legislation apparently forget the fundamental tradition in America that aliens as well as citizens are entitled to the equal protection of our laws.

Mr. Bridges has already gone through the proper process of deportation proceedings. After a careful and full consideration of the facts of his case it has been determined, by formal verdict, that he is not a fit subject for deportation.

Congress should not now attempt to short-circuit the due process of the deportation by passing a law directed at a single person. No individual could be as dangerous as the principle the bill contains.

The San Francisco Chronicle recently published an article by a leading conservative Republican, Chester Rowell, closely identified with Herbert Hoover, in which he denounces the bill as unconstitutional and a highly dangerous and unprecedented step. The Chronicle has editorially expressed opposition to the bill, likewise. As the Chronicle articles have appeared already in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I shall not include them again here.

Here is an interesting editorial from the News of Charlotte, N. C.:

KILLING CURE—A BILL WHICH ADOPTS NAZI PRINCIPLES TO GET A "RED"

The bill to deport Harry Bridges, west coast labor leader, reported out by the Immigration Committee of the House, is a cunning attempt to capitalize on the alarm in the country to accomplish an ulterior end.

There are few people left in the country who will deny that in the present case Bridges is dangerous. Whether he is a Communist or not, he is certainly taking the Communist line, and at his instigation his maritime unions are busily denouncing the Roosevelt arms program as a capitalist plot to betray the country into war.

He ought to be got rid of, and so ought the rest of the Communist agents in the unions, but by a law which shows some decent regard for the safety of the rights guaranteed under the Bill of Rights.

The present bill is in effect an effort to deal with the Trojan horse danger in the country by plopping whole hog for Nazi methods. It violates every American tradition in singling out an individual and making a law against him for what is not, under existing law, a crime in itself

One of the strongest of a series of editorials appearing in that great newspaper, the Washington Post, is the one which was printed in its issue of May 30, 1940, and which refers to the instant measure as "striking at democracy." This is the editorial:

STRIKING AT DEMOCRACY

A bill by Representative ALLEN of Louisiana, calls for the deportation of Harry R. Bridges, west coast labor leader. Naturally, protests have come from the defense committee formed when Bridges was facing deportation proceedings. But the larger issue raised by this proposal is whether a breach shall be made in the Constitution to strike at a leader of the C. I. O.

James M. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School, presided for many weeks at hearings to determine whether Mr. Bridges was deportable as an enemy of the established political order. Mr. Landis concluded that the tactics followed by the C. I. O. labor leader were not revolutionary but in accord with democratic principles. The case against Mr. Bridges was accordingly dropped, and there is no excuse for treating him as other than a law-abiding citizen.

The Allen bill is plainly unconstitutional, and it seems entirely unlikely that it will receive serious consideration. However, it is well to call attention to the extremes to which some Members of Congress are prepared to go to rid the country of aliens whom they regard as undesirable.

The framers of the Constitution were aware of the dangers of permitting the Legislature to punish individuals without benefit of trial. Hence they forbade Congress to pass bills of attainder—bills that are a species of extrajudicial procedure, for the direct punishment of political offenders.

It does not require a knowledge of constitutional law to realize the enormity of a proposal that would condemn a man to deportation by a mere legislative decree. Lightning thus invoked might strike anybody who happened to incur the displeasure of Congress. It would not be necessary to limit attacks to aliens whose radical views and union activities have made them objects of dislike and suspicion to influential groups.

Even Mr. Bridges' worst enemies would have cause to regret his departure if it were effected by ignoring constitutional prohibitions against the kind of legislation Representative ALLEN of Louisiana has proposed.

I call the attention of the Members that two veterans of the first World War who have as outstanding records for bravery and courage as any men in the United States, voted against this measure, along with some other veterans. These men are the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC], who is a holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], who lost both legs while serving in the aviation branch of the American Expeditionary Forces in France. I make this statement in praise of these two gentlemen without any invidious reflection upon the other veterans who are Members of this House.

I now come to the legal argument from the constitutional angle which I have prepared and which I suggest be read carefully by those lawyers in the House who have an open mind.

THE BILL (H. R. 9766) TO DEPORT HARRY BRIDGES IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

H. R. 9766 would authorize and direct the Secretary of Labor to take into custody and deport to Australia the alien, Harry Bridges. This bill is an unprecedented attempt to have Congress depart entirely from its legislative function and pass judgment upon a single individual. The sponsors of the bill undoubtedly rely upon the fact that the power of Congress over the admission and deportation of aliens has been upheld by the courts in very broad terms. They have apparently assumed that the broad power of Congress over this subject permits it to disregard the Constitution entirely in dealing with aliens. There is no basis for this assumption. On the contrary, the Constitution does apply, and it does set certain limits upon the action of Congress, limits which are exceeded by the present bill.

Two provisions of the Constitution are pertinent, the prohibition against bills of attainder in article I, section 9, and the due-process clause of the fifth amendment. Persuasive analogy condemns the bill under the first of these clauses; precedents clearly in point establish its invalidity under the second. Since the case is so strong under the due-process clause, and there are no decisions directly in point under article I, section 9, it is unnecessary to venture the prediction that the bill would be held a bill of attainder. The few authorities which have discussed bills of attainder do show, however, the radical conflict between the present bill and the basic constitutional concepts which the courts have read into the due-process clause. They thus strengthen the argument that the proposed bill violates the fifth amendment. For this reason, consideration will be given first to the clause prohibiting bills of attainder, and then to the authorities establishing the invalidity of the bill under the fifth amendment.

I. BILLS OF ATTAINDER

Article I, section 9, imposes upon Congress the restriction that, "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." That provision, and the like prohibition upon the States imposed by article I, section 10, have been extensively discussed by the Supreme Court only in the test oath cases that arose immediately after the Civil War (Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333). The legislation there before the Court prohibited the holding of office and the practice of the professions by persons who failed to take an oath that they had not adhered to the cause of the enemies of the United States. The Missouri statute had been applied to prevent Cummings from practicing as a priest. The Federal statute had been applied to prevent Garland from appearing as an attorney in the courts of the United States. Both acts were held invalid as bills of attainder. In the Cummings case, the Court wrote (4 Wall. at 323):

> A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.
> If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the textbooks, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party, without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or oherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense.

Since it will undoubtedly be argued that the present bill is not a bill of attainder because deportation is not a criminal proceeding, it is significant that the acts held invalid by the Supreme Court in the test oath cases did not unconditionally impose criminal penalties.

It has been held that the prohibition against bills of attainder bars legislative acts confiscating property no less than those which impose punishment upon the individual (Gaines v. Buford, 31 Ky. 481, 509–510).

See also a statement to the same effect by Chief Justice Marshall in Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch 87, 138). And in the only case that has been found in which this clause of the Constitution has been considered in relation to a deportation law, the Court wrote:

> A legislative act which undertakes to inflict the punishment of banishment or exile from the United States on a citizen thereof, and thereby deprive him of the right to live in the country, for any cause or no cause, or because of his race or color, is a bill of attainder within the clause of the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the passage of such bills and is therefore void (In re Yung Sing Hee, 36 Fed. 437, 439).

The case for the present bill is not aided by the authorities (e. g. Mahler v. Eby, 264 U. S. 32) holding that the prohibition against ex post facto laws does not apply to statutes specifying the grounds for deportation. It is firmly established that that prohibition relates only to criminal laws (Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 390; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 242).

The authorities which have been cited show that bills of attainder are not so limited. Since they include acts confiscating property and those depriving persons of the liberty to engage in a profession, there is every reason why the law imposing the much more drastic penalty of deportation should be held within the constitutional ban. For the essential vice of a bill of attainder is the corruption of the legislative process that it represents. The case against them was put by Mr. Justice Story in the following words:

> Bills of attainder, as they are technically called, are such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a bill of pains and penalties. But in the sense of the Constitution, it seems that bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties; for the Supreme Court has said, "A bill of attainder may affect the life of an individual, or may confiscate his property, or both." In such cases, the legislature assumes judicial magistracy, pronouncing upon the guilt of the party without any of the common forms and guards of trial, and satisfying itself with proofs, when such proofs are within its reach, whether they are conformable to the rules of evidence or not. In short, in all such cases the legislature exercises the highest power of sovereignty, and what may be properly deemed an irresponsible despotic discretion, being governed solely by what it deems political necessity or expediency, and too often under the influence of unreasonable fears, or unfounded suspicions. * * * The punishment has often been inflicted without calling upon the party accused to answer, or without even the formality of proof; and sometimes, because the law, in its ordinary course of proceedings, would acquit the offender. The injustice and iniquity of such acts, in general, constitute an irresistible argument against the existence of the power. In a free government it would be intolerable; and in the hands of a reigning faction it might be, and probably would be, abused to the ruin and death of the most virtuous citizens. Bills of this sort have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or of gross subserviency to the crown, or of violent political excitements; periods in which all nations are most liable (as well the free as the enslaved) to forget their duties, and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others. (Story on the Constitution, 4th edition, vol. 2, sec. 1344).

The relevance of Justice Story's comments to the present proposal need not be elaborated. It is sufficient to note that this bill has been advanced not, as Story put it, "because the law, in its ordinary course of proceedings, would acquit the offender," but after he has been acquitted in the ordinary proceeding.

II. THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE

As has been stated, if the present bill were attacked in the courts, it would be unnecessary to decide whether or not it is a bill of attainder because the case against it is so clear under the due process clause of the fifth amendment. Regardless of the nature of the proceeding, that clause affords to every person threatened with the loss of life, liberty, or property a certain safeguard regarding the procedure by which the threatened deprivation may be effected. It applies as fully to the entry of a money judgment without notice and opportunity for hearing as to a conviction for crime without opportunity for defense. (Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714; Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45). Its guaranties protect not only citizens but also aliens who are within the borders of the United States (Yong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228, 230; The Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 100–101; Russian Volunteer Fleet v. United States, 282 U. S. 481, 492).

The case in support of the present bill is necessarily based upon the extremely broad power of Congress over the deportation of aliens, a power which has been characterized by the Supreme Court as "political," not one which punishes for crime (Mahler v. Eby, 264 U. S. 32, 39, 40; see also Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538).

The effect of those and the many other decisions on the point is well summarized in Zakonaite v. Wolf (226 U. S. 272), where the Court wrote, at page 275:

> It is entirely settled that the authority of Congress to prohibit aliens from coming within the United States, and to regulate their coming, includes authority to impose conditions upon the performance of which the continued liberty of the alien to reside within the bounds of this country may be made to depend; that a proceeding to enforce such regulations is not a criminal prosecution within the meaning of the fifth and sixth amendments; that such an inquiry may be properly devolved upon an executive department or subordinate officials thereof; and that the findings of fact reached by such officials, after a fair, though summary, hearing, may constitutionally be made conclusive. * * *

In this very case, however, the Court considered on the merits the claim advanced by the alien as a matter of constitutional right that there was no adequate evidence to support the deportation order. In spite of the validity of the statute making final the determination of the Secretary of Labor, that question—and all other contentions going to the unfairness of the procedure followed by the Secretary—may be reviewed on habeas corpus. (See Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279; Bilokumsky v. Tod, 263 U. S. 149; Vajtauer v. Commissioner, 273, U. S. 103.)

This use of habeas corpus is not expressly provided for by statute. It is permitted because of the constitutional right of the alien to a degree of fairness in the proceeding, the minimum essential element of due process of law. As the Court stated in the Vajtauer case, supra (273 U. S. at 106):

> Deportation without a fair hearing or on charges unsupported by any evidence is a denial of due process which may be corrected on habeas corpus.

See also Kwock Jan Fat v. White (253 U. S. 454, 464), where the Court wrote, at page 464:

> The acts of Congress give great power to the Secretary of Labor over Chinese immigrants and persons of Chinese descent. It is a power to be administered, not arbitrarily and secretly but fairly and openly, under the restraints of the tradition and principles of free government applicable where the fundamental rights of men are involved, regardless of their origin or race. It is the province of the courts, in proceedings for review, within the limits amply defined in the cases cited, to prevent abuse of this extraordinary power, and this is possible only when a full record is preserved of the essentials on which the executive officers proceed to judgment. For failure to preserve such a record for the information, not less of the Commissioner of Immigration and of the Secretary of Labor than for the courts, the judgment in this case must be reversed.

The invalidity of a deportation order based on the direction of Congress, with no semblance of a hearing or proceeding of any kind to which the alien is a party, is established beyond a doubt by those cases in which orders have been annulled on habeas corpus. In Kwock Jan Fat against White, supra, the vice in the procedure followed by the officer who heard the case was that no record was kept of important testimony, which was thus not placed before the Secretary of Labor or made available for the consideration of the courts on habeas corpus. In Chin Low v. United States (208 U. S. 8) a writ was issued because the petitioner had been denied an opportunity to obtain witnesses in support of his right to enter the country.

The attempt to support the present bill by argument from the admitted power to entrust the function of adjudication to administrative officers proves too much. For, at least in the case of one arriving at our borders and seeking admission to the country, administrative power may finally determine the rights not only of aliens, but also of citizens (United States v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253).

In that case it was held that where admission is denied by the administrative official to whom the power of final decision was conferred, a claim of citizenship—without a showing that the administrative procedure had been unfair—did not authorize the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. To hold, therefore, that the power to commit adjudication to an administrative officer establishes the power of Congress to make the adjudication itself would require the conclusion that Congress could, by special act, bar admission to this country to an American citizen who had temporarily gone abroad. This shocking conclusion would not be countenanced by any court.

Of far greater importance than the treatment to be accorded to the single individual against whom this bill is directed is the effect of this proposed legislation on the maintenance of our constitutional form of government. For the first time in our history Congress proposes to depart from its traditional function of prescribing the rule by which adjudication, whether in the courts or by administrative officers, is to proceed, and to make the adjudication itself. By this invasion of the field which the Constitution marks out for the other branches of the Government, Congress would do a wrong not only to Harry Bridges but to the very system which it seeks to protect against Harry Bridges. The wrong to Bridges is a denial of due process of law, which the courts would correct by writ of habeas corpus. The wrong caused by an ill-considered attempt to usurp unconstitutional power is one which Congress alone can prevent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] for one-half minute.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I cannot vote in favor of this bill providing specifically for the immediate deportation of Harry Bridges. I do not believe that anyone who listened to the very profound speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] can have any doubt that the bill violates some of the most basic provisions of the Constitution of the United States and is, in fact, a usurpation of judicial functions which properly belong to the administrative and judicial branches.

The practical effect of the passage of this bill is obvious to me. It will bring about an entirely disproportionate magnification of the importance of Harry Bridges in the eyes of many people. I will not be surprised if effort will be made to get up a national movement for the protection of Bridges' rights. Money will be raised from all sorts of people for this purpose. The Senate will be bombarded with appeals of every sort. Should the bill pass that body, the President will then be confronted with the problem of either signing a bill which has been clearly shown to violate the Constitution, or to veto a bill aimed at the deportation of a man who has been for many years in this country without becoming a citizen and whose influence within the labor movement has been, to state the matter conservatively, by no means always constructive. Should the bill become law, there will then be started by interested groups a process of litigation in the courts of the country which undoubtedly will be carried to the highest court in the land, where, in the opinion of far abler students of constitutional law than I, there is hardly a chance that it will be upheld. The net effect of a process of this kind on the apparent importance of Mr. Bridges in the country is too obvious to require any expansion on my part.

For the information of the House, I may say that I know that there are a great many solid leaders within the ranks of labor on the Pacific coast, including the C. I. O., who believe that the labor movement would be much better off if Mr. Bridges were not in this country. Nor can I substantially disagree with many of the things that have been said on the floor today about his altogether probable past connections with the Communist Party. The fact remains, however, that through the use of the due process set-up for dealing with cases of this kind, the Government has so far not succeeded in proving charges against Mr. Bridges which would give ground for his deportation. What Congress is really doing here is saying that, although a deportation trial has been held, and although the decision was rendered against the deportation of Bridges, nevertheless the House just does not like him, and although it is not able to charge him with any deportable offense which has been proved, it proposes to deport him on general principles and without any further hearing, although even as an alien he is unquestionably entitled to due process under the fifth amendment to the Constitution. Such a bill as this has never in all the history of the Republic been passed by the Congress; nor, so far as I know, has such a bill ever been introduced. Those who have urged so vigorously that an object lesson be provided through the case of Mr. Bridges can, it seems to me, feel that this has been done by these facts alone. The possible consequences, however, of having Congress embark upon a procedure of this kind at a time like this, when there is so much tendency throughout the country already to short-circuit the law and our democratic procedure, are perfectly tremendous.

Many Members have already stated that this would be but the first of a series of similar actions. In other words, we are to have bills introduced against many specific individuals who have offended some Member of Congress or other and calling for the deportation of those persons.

I could name a dozen aliens in the country, one of them at the head of a great foreign-propaganda organization which pours out literature in defense of a foreign dictatorship by the ton, that I personally would like to see out of the country.

Once we start on this process, however, with regard to any human being, the very human rights which our national-defense program aims to protect are likely to be worth very little. Then there is the further question as to whether we would have this bill before us if Bridges had not been an aggressive labor leader.

Finally, let me point out that only recently we have transferred the Bureau of Immigration to the Department of Justice, that there is an orderly and established process whereby deportation proceedings can be carried on and that this is the process which should be used. Along this line, I voted in favor of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] which would have directed the Attorney General to proceed in this manner, and I would have voted for the bill had that amendment replaced its present language. I also voted in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON], since it would have made the bill a matter of general law without reference to a particular individual and would have thus removed its unconstitutional features. In this and all similar cases, if the law contains loopholes which render it impossible to take orderly action in cases of real subversive activity, then it is the law which should be changed rather than to try to circumvent it by legislative monstrosities of this sort. Furthermore, do any Members of the House doubt for a moment that constant surveillance is being maintained by interested groups to catch Mr. Bridges in some action which would offer substantial and provable grounds for his deportation under the provisions of existing law?

I wish to include herewith with my remarks portions of two editorials appearing on this subject, one from the San Francisco Chronicle, an outstanding conservative California newspaper, and the other from the Washington post.

San Francisco Chronicle:

Congress is still playing with the idea of deporting Harry Bridges by bill of attainder, regardless of the constitutional prohibition of such a process. It is a curious paradox that those who shout most loudly for the Constitution are often those least familiar with its provisions and least concerned for granting to others the rights it guarantees to themselves. In this case, since the effort to deport Bridges by due process of law failed on a finding of want of proof, it is proposed to substitute undue process of attainder. For surely, these objectors conclude, Bridges is an undesirable alien, since they do not desire him. And if it is pointed out that there is no general law for the deportation of aliens merely because they are undesirable, what could be simpler than a special law for the deportation of this particular undesired one?

The Washington Post:

The framers of the Constitution were aware of the dangers of permitting the legislature to punish individuals without benefit of trial. Hence they forbade Congress to pass bills of attainder—bills that are a species of extrajudicial procedure, for the direct punishment of political offenders.

It does not require a knowledge of constitutional law to realize the enormity of a proposal that would condemn a man to deportation by a mere legislative decree. Lightning thus invoked might strike anybody who happened to incur the displeasure of Congress. It would not be necessary to limit attacks to aliens whose radical views and union activities have made them objects of dislike and suspicion to influential groups.

Even Mr. Bridges' worst enemies would have cause to regret his departure if it were effected by ignoring constitutional prohibitions against the kind of legislation Representative ALLEN has proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDOWELL].

Mr. MCDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have been gathering material for 2 years to write a speech about Harry Bridges, and now I get a half minute to make it in. I shall vote for the Van Zandt amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about this bill becoming a precedent. Let it be a precedent and let those who should, take warning.

Today happens to be the day when, I understand, the Bureau of Immigration goes over to the Department of Justice. Let it also be the day when America takes charge of her own destiny and says that we have the right to combat the "fifth column" according to the means that we find necessary in order to preserve the integrity and the life of the United States. [Applause.]

We have been told by the chairman of the Dies committee that the "fifth column," so-called, presents a new problem in the life of nations; that Norway was unable to meet it successfully; that other nations have found it difficult to meet.

I do not maintain that the passage of a bill that singles out one solitary individual for deportation is the answer to the problem—far from it, yet it is the only opportunity that has been given this body to speak what America thinks of this thing—the insidious penetration of our institutions by aliens who seek to undermine the country whose guests they are. They come here as guests; they should not pull down the pillars of the house.

There is only one reason that legislation of this kind is here before us today. It is that the American people have the overwhelming conviction that someone whose job it was to administer certain immigration and naturalization laws has fallen down on the job in the face of a threatening situation.

It is a similar conviction that finally reached the head of the present administration that resulted in the reorganization order that transferred the Bureau of Immigration from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice, which is effective today. Four-sevenths of the personnel of the Labor Department will be transferred under that order, I am told. It is a shocking thing, that such a step is taken as a means to correct that situation.

This is a shocking thing—the passage of a bill to deport one alien, but it represents the determination of Americans to do something about a situation they do not approve.

They are tired of sit-down strikes fomented by self-styled leaders who disregard the rights and desires of a vast majority of the workers. They are tired of aliens who seem glad to come here to reap what they can, but who avoid the vows and the responsibilities of citizenship. We have been told here today that this man Bridges four times took out his first papers, but as many times went no further.

This bill may be unconstitutional; the lawyers here seem divided on that question; the balance of us can only register the heart and mind of America on the broad question involved.

Can an alien come to this country, engage in I. W. W. activities when the country is at war, as Bridges did in 1918; file false statements regarding his marital relationships, as Bridges did; work himself into control of destructive radical labor groups and lead them into sit-down strikes, taking possession of the property of other persons, violating the rights and desires of other workmen to work, disrupting the country's ability to produce and to carry its produce even in a time of national emergency—can a man, an alien, do these things and retain the welcome of the country where he is a guest?

Cannot the Congress which passes laws, both general and individual, that permit an alien's entry, also pass a law to deport the alien who outrages the hospitality he accepts?

That, as far as the American public is concerned, is the principle involved. And in this time when America is looking to her defenses, there is only one answer. We have been told that the passage of this bill would be a blot on our history. The blot in history will be of those democracies that fail to assert the inherent rights in sovereignty of keeping out or kicking out those aliens who are or who become enemies of national security. Let this be known as the day when America takes charge of her own destiny. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAGNUSON: Strike out all after enacting clause and insert "That any alien who, at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time or entry, or to have become thereafter, a member of the Nazi, Fascist, or Communist Party, or who advises, advocates, or teaches the doctrines of nazi-ism, fascism, or communism, or who is a member of, or affiliated with, any organization, association, society, or group, that advises, advocates, or teaches the doctrines of nazi-ism, fascism, or communism, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917."

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I doubt that that amendment should be voted on, as it is general legislation, and we have before us a private bill, not general legislation. The amendment is not germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. LESINSKI. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is why I have submitted the amendment. I think there should be general legislation on this subject rather than specific legislation.

Mr. LESINSKI. I agree with the gentleman that there should be general legislation, but it is a private bill we are discussing today, and the amendment is not germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] was in the nature of general legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order was made against that amendment. If one had been made, it would have been sustained.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be reported so the Members may know what it provides.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the O'Connor amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALDWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9766) to authorize the deportation of Harry Renton Bridges, pursuant to House Resolution 511, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the Van Zandt amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know who has the privilege of offering a motion to recommit. If a gentleman on the minority side is ready to offer a motion to recommit, is he not entitled to recognition for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The rule is that a minority Member who qualifies as being opposed to the bill is entitled to recognition if that point is raised. Does the gentleman raise that question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; I certainly do.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Connecticut opposed to the bill?

Mr. MILLER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MILLER moves to recommit the bill H. R. 9766 to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 330, nays 42, answered "present" 1, not voting 58, as follows:

MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY ERADICATION

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (S. Con. Res. 40), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 40

Whereas pursuant to Senate Joint Resolution 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims of the Senate has held a hearing with respect to the losses sustained by certain persons in the State of Florida as a result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication and quarantine campaign conducted in the State of Florida by the United States Government; and

Whereas in the opinion of such subcommittee a satisfactory showing has been made to justify and require an accurate and dependable determination of the actual losses sustained as a result of such campaign, the nature and character of such losses, and the persons by whom such losses were sustained: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a special joint congressional committee to be composed of three members of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, to be appointed by the chairman thereof, and three members of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the chairman of such committee. It shall be the duty of such special committee to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the losses sustained as a result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication and quarantine campaign conducted in the State of Florida in 1929 and 1930 by the United States Government, with a view to determining, among other things, the nature, character, and amount of such losses, the circumstances under which such losses occurred, and the persons by whom such losses were sustained. The committee shall report to the Congress at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the

Mr. Speaker, in this great program of national defense, the problem of the training of our young men becomes of paramount importance, not only training in war, but industrial training. In talking with some of my colleagues I find that we are not yet certain about educational plans which we think ought to be completed. It has been suggested to me that as many as are interested in vocational or industrial education as a background for national defense should meet in the caucus room in the House Office Building tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock and discuss ways, means, and methods of assuming this vital part of our defense program.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 28, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who knowest our every changing thought, who alone canst fill our life with holy purpose: Help us in these troublous days by discipline, industry, and prayer so to purify our hearts and minds that the sense of our intimacy with Thee may beget in us an ever-increasing self-respect which comes only to those who scorn to give less than their all in the service of their country.

On this day of national import help us to realize that our flag is the sacrament and sign of our affection, patriotism, and devotion to duty and stands for those noblest qualities that represent the spirit of America, qualities that must rest upon the conscience and the morality of our people. O'ershadow us with Thy discernment, that we may grow in knowledge of Thy will, until we shall rise into the rest which it is Thine alone to give. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, a few days ago I introduced a bill, at the request of the Investment Bankers Association, to amend the Securities Act of 1933. I ask unanimous consent that a short statement upon the subject, made by me, and an additional one from Mr. Starkweather, chairman of the legislative committee of the Investment Bankers Association of America, be printed in the RECORD before the consideration of the relief measure is resumed today.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BROWN

By request of the Investment Bankers Association of America, whose president is Mr. Emmett F. Connely, of Detroit, Mich., I recently introduced certain amendments which the association proposes to the Securities Act of 1933. I do so for the purpose of having these amendments examined in an official way by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. It is my hope that these amendments will be submitted to the Commission and other departments of the Government involved and that their enactment, with such changes as may be desirable, will provide a means by which some differences now existing between the Commission and the investment bankers can be eliminated.

For the purpose of explanation, I have asked Mr. John K. Starkweather, chairman of the legislative committee of the association, to prepare a statement of these amendments, which is now set forth.

(See accompanying papers written by Mr. Starkweather.)

STATEMENT BY MR. STARKWEATHER

The theory of the Securities Act of 1933 is that before securities can be sold there must be complete and adequate disclosures made to the public, with liability imposed upon those responsible for the misstatements.

With this underlying theory we are in complete accord, and our one and only desire is to improve the act so that, without sacrificing the information available to the public, it will be much easier and much less expensive for issuers to raise capital under it.

To this end, the Securities Act of 1933 provides that no securities, unless specifically exempted, can be publicly offered in interstate or foreign commerce or through the mails (whether interstate or intrastate) until they have been registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. This body is appointed to supervise the act and to make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out its provisions. A person in control (which does not necessarily mean 51 per cent of the voting stock of an issuer, but means some undefined influence sufficient in the opinion of the Commissioner to be actual or "factual" control) cannot sell securities owned in the issuer through an underwriter (which includes an agent) unless the securities are registered under the 1933 act.

At the present time much of the information required to register a security under the 1933 act and the information required to register a security under the 1934 act in order that it may be listed on the national securities exchange is substantially the same. By recent regulations of the Commission, the form of financial statements is the same. But, as you know, registration of securities under the 1933 act and registration of securities under the 1934 act are quite different things, and even though practically the same information is on file under the 1934 act, an issuer may not sell additional securities and a controlling person may not publicly offer his securities to or through an underwriter, as stated, unless a separate registration statement is effective under the 1933 act.

Securities may be offered "privately," that is, to a limited number of persons who state they are buying for investment and not with a view to distribution, without the securities being registered.

In the case of domestic securities a minimum period of 20 days must elapse between the date of filing a registration statement and its effective date. In the case of the refunding of obligations of foreign governments who have not defaulted on such outstanding obligations a period of 7 days must elapse. The filing of amendments starts a new 20-day waiting period running unless the Commission "accelerates" such amendments. During this waiting period sales or offers of sale or offers to sell cannot be made without incurring civil or criminal penalties. Since markets may change rapidly within a 20-day waiting period, issuers are not certain when they file whether they will be able to carry their issue through to conclusion at the end of the 20-day waiting period. Consequently this period produces great uncertainty and is a serious impediment in the flow of capital to industry.

Under the Public Utility Act of 1935, a registered holding company or a subsidiary thereof desiring to issue securities must file declarations pursuant to sections 6 and 7 of that act, and this information largely duplicates or triplicates, as the case may be, the information which must be filed under the 1933 act. Despite this fact, any company which previously registered under the 1933 act, or any company which has securities registered under the 1934 act and listed on a national securities exchange, or any company which must get the Securities and Exchange Commission's approval under the 1935 act, or any company which has had its accounts audited for years and furnished appropriate information to stockholders, must wait the 20-day period along with a brand-new corporation formed to sell speculative securities.

It is our theory that where adequate information is already available to the public that no public interest is served by requiring issuers to wait 20 days. In fact, the 20-day waiting period is a distinct menace to issuers desiring to raise new capital or to refund outstanding securities.

Hence our first proposal is to abolish the 20-day waiting period with respect to securities where there is already adequate information. This would take away from the Commission with respect to this type of security the right to examine the statements during the 20-day waiting period, issue deficiency letters, and require that corrections be made. The objection heretofore to abolition of the 20-day waiting period is that, even though the liabilities under the 1933 act are retained so that a purchaser would have the right to sue the person making the misstatement, the issuer might not be financially responsible. This argument does not hold if a distinction is made between responsible companies where there is adequate information and new companies. With respect to newly organized companies or companies where there has not been adequate information, we suggest that the 20-day waiting period and the Commission's power over the registration statements of such issuers be retained. (See point 1 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

2. With respect to those issuers which would still have to go through the 20-day waiting period, the act is rather inflexible in that there is no way of scheduling a public offering where an amendment with respect to price and terms relating to price is filed after the initial filing date. Our second amendment is an endeavor to introduce a semblance of flexibility into the act so that if the registration statement complies to the satisfaction of the Securities and Exchange Commission in all other respects price amendments can be filed and an immediate offering can be made. (See point 2 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

3. At the present time a plaintiff is not required to prove that a misstatement or omission sued on caused his loss. However, he is required to do this under section 18 (a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and section 16 (a) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. It is suggested that the liability section of the 1933 act be brought into conformity. (See point 4 (a) (ii) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

4. No recommendation is made with respect to changing the standard of care required in order to avoid liability on registration statements with respect to new issues of securities under section 11 except as stated above with respect to causation of damage (despite the fact that there is a lesser standard in the 1934 and 1935 acts). At the present time, even though a misstatement would have caused a security to have been priced 1 or 2 points below its actual offering price at the time it was originally offered a long period after the offering when the security may have declined many points in value by reason of changes in market conditions, having nothing to do with the original misstatement, a purchaser may, nevertheless, recover the full purchase price. Since securities are not objects having intrinsic merit in and of themselves but each security in the same class is like every other security, all liability under the act should be limited to damages caused by the misstatement with respect to which there is no adequate defense. Rescission actions should be abolished as unfair. The above does not refer to those cases where securities are sold in violation of the provisions requiring registration and delivery prospectuses conforming to the act. As to these sections, the only change is to permit the defendant to avoid liability if he can prove that he did not act wilfully or was not grossly negligent. (See point 4 (a) (iii) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

5. Under the Securities Act of 1933 a plaintiff does not have to prove reliance on a registration statement or prospectus in order to recover. No changes are recommended on this score in the case of registration statements or prospectuses with respect to new securities although reliance is required under section 18 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and section 16 (a) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. In the case of outstanding securities, however, where the sale is probably directly influenced by a memorandum or prospectus it seems fair to require that a plaintiff prove that he relied on the memorandum or offering prospectus. In the case of new securities, information in the registration statement and prospectus may influence the market or may influence rating agencies and while many people think it is fair to require that the plaintiff prove reliance, we have not thought it advisable to go that far at this time in the case of new securities. It is seldom, however, that the general market price of a security is affected very much by a particular memorandum with respect to outstanding securities. Consequently, it was thought fair to make this differentiation. (See point 4 (a) (i) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

6. At the present time if an issuer offers its securities to its own security holders and wishes to be assured of having its money at the end of the offer, it pays an underwriter to underwrite the securities. To the extent that securities are purchased by the existing security holders or their assignees, they are purchased directly from the company and the underwriter has nothing to do with selling such securities to them other than the fact that his name appears on the prospectus as being willing to purchase at the end of the offering all securities not subscribed for. The underwriter therefore only sells to the public the unsubscribed balance. Under the existing law, however, he is liable under section 11 as an underwriter on the entire issue. It is suggested that this liability be confined to the portion actually taken up and distributed to the public. (See point 4 (d) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

7. At the present time liability may be avoided by directors, officers, and underwriters with respect to portions of the registration statement certified to by experts if they can prove they had no reasonable ground to believe such portions were untrue. The Commission has been materially limiting the matters which can be so certified by experts. It is suggested that this be clarified by amendments. (See point 4 (f) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

8. At the present time a prospectus must be delivered by dealers or brokers on all sales of the security for 1 year after the public offering. Prospectuses are frequently long—in some cases being 100 pages. They are expensive to print and to mail. Experts are generally agreed that most public distributions of securities are concluded in a few weeks. Consequently it is suggested that the period for the delivery of the prospectuses be changed from 1 year to 3 months. (See point 5 (a) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

9. The present definition of a prospectus is very limited. Previously on high-grade securities investment bankers were able to inform universities, institutions, trustees, and savings banks on offering sheets listing securities of private obligors, railroads, municipal and Government securities the extent to which they were eligible for investment, listed on national securities exchanges, tax-exempt in certain States, the yield to maturity, yield to nearest redemption date, etc. Today this is forbidden with respect to issues registered within 1 year under the 1933 act, unless a long-form prospectus is also furnished, which is too expensive. The information can be given, however, with respect to outstanding securities, railroad securities, municipals and governments. This is a serious limitation on the information available to buyers and a severe handicap to private obligors. It is suggested that the definition of a prospectus be amended so as to permit such information to be given without delivery of a long-form prospectus. Also, at the present time, no matter how many prospectuses a buyer may already have received with respect to a particular security, a person desiring to sell that security to him must deliver him another prospectus unless he himself has delivered the prior prospectuses. Even if the buyer advises the seller he already has a prospectus, the seller (except as noted) must nevertheless deliver him another. This is anomalous and expensive and should be corrected. (See point 5 (b) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

10. At the present time prospectuses must be delivered on sales occurring on national securities exchanges although, as a practical matter, there is no way to enforce this since sellers deal through brokers, brokers deal with each other, and the seller or his broker have no way of being sure that the buyer's broker will deliver the prospectus to the buyer. The Commission has adopted a rule with respect to this but it is unsatisfactory. Consequently it is suggested that no prospectus need be delivered on sales on a national securities exchange. (See point 5 (c) of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

11. No amendments are suggested with respect to sections 9 (a) (2) and 9 (a) (6) of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, but this is a very important subject in connection with the sale of securities and it would be well if it could be given careful consideration. (See point 6 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

12. Under the existing act, if securities are offered as convertible securities, the issuer may deliver common stock upon the conversion of a bond several years later without delivering a prospectus. If, on the other hand, an issuer offers a security with a warrant to subscribe to stock attached, when the stock is delivered several years later upon the exercise of the warrant an up-to-date prospectus must be delivered. This is purely fortuitous and should be corrected. (See point 8 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

13. Under the existing act, securities exchanged by an issuer with its own security holders where no fees are paid for the solicitation are exempt. In the case of defaulted foreign obligations which have been issued by a subdivision of a foreign government where the taxing system of the subdivision has been taken over by the foreign government, the foreign government has sometimes offered to issue its securities in exchange or to guarantee the securities offered in exchange. The guaranty under the act is an additional security. Consequently, if the guaranty is added, the exemption is lost. No such limitations exist under the securities acts of foreign countries and, consequently, Americans are under a disadvantage in such negotiations. It is suggested that this disadvantage be removed. (See point 9 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

14. Under the existing act, the Commission is of the opinion, because of the wording of the last sentence of section 6 (a), that it cannot permit securities to be registered unless there is an immediate intention to offer them. In certain instances this involves the Commission in a rather anomalous position, namely, that it believes certain sales by persons in control to be in violation of the Securities Act of 1933, but that such offerings from time to time may not be registered under that act unless the controlling person binds himself to sell all of his securities. It is suggested that this be corrected. (See point 10 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

15. Due to the peculiar definition of an "underwriter" in the Securities Act of 1933, anyone, whether a dealer in securities or not, who turns in securities to an issuer in exchange for outstanding securities and who plans to sell the new securities may be technically an underwriter. Securities exchanged by an issuer with its own security holders where no fees are paid for the solicitation are exempt. Transactions by underwriters, however, are not exempt. Consequently, although the issuer may be permitted to issue the securities initially free from registration, persons taking them for exchange with a view to distributing them may be "underwriters" and hence required to register them. This restriction on the right of resale has been emphasized in section 264 of the bankruptcy laws. This constitutes a serious burden upon the right to exchange securities without registration. It is suggested that this can be amended. (See point 11 of the detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940.)

The foregoing is a succinct statement of what our amendments propose to do. In our more detailed memorandum dated February 10, 1940, we have endeavored to make a very careful presentation of the pros and cons of the amendments. You may perhaps wish to refer to it for greater detail.

It has, of course, not been possible to do that in this letter, and if I have omitted the substance of any of the amendments it has not been intentional, and I hope you will permit me to explain these amendments or the memorandum to you in greater detail.

We did not think that the Congress would wish to undertake a wholesale revision of the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 at this session, and we have therefore not attempted to integrate these three laws, badly as that needs to be done in order to help industry. We do not believe that the amendments we have outlined fundamentally change the purpose back of the Securities Act of 1933 or the protection which should be granted to the public. We, of course, recognize that these amendments will not accomplish very much unless they are received in a cooperative spirit by the Commission, since the manner in which the act is regulated still makes all the difference in the world as to whether it is feasible for issuers to register and sell securities under it or whether it isn't. Many issuers have chosen the private placement route for securities because of the delays, expense, and uncertainties of registration. The uncertainty is a great nervous strain on businessmen.

We believe that the abolition of the 20-day waiting period on high-grade securities will be a great help. It is interesting to note in passing that there is no waiting period under the English Companies Act of 1929, which is self-executing.

Very truly yours,

JOHN K. STARKWEATHER,
Chairman, Federal Legislation Committee.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] had the floor, and declined to yield. The Chair wonders whether he wishes to continue to debate the pending amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I did not have the floor with the intention of keeping it. I simply wanted to have the Senate go into executive session, and declined to yield any further so that we might do so; but I have no desire to address the Senate now.

THE FINNISH DEBT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the distinguished representative of the Finnish Republic yesterday announced that in spite of the desperate condition in which his courageous country finds itself in respect to its needs for cash resources, it proposes as usual to maintain its magnificent credit record and make its debt payment on June 15.

At this point I ask that the statement issued by Minister Procope and published in the Washington Times-Herald be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

War-torn Finland will again come through with its semiannual debt payment to the United States tomorrow, Hjalmar J. Procope, Minister from Finland, announced yesterday.

Finland has never missed a debt payment, even meeting its obligation last December.

STILL FREE, DEMOCRATIC

In announcing that his Government would make the payment, Minister Procope said:

"Finland, still an independent, free, and democratic country, in spite of the sufferings and the ordeals of the war, will always, to the utmost of her power, fulfill her obligations. On Saturday, June 15, we shall again make to the United States Treasury regular payment of our debt, not only in fulfillment of our obligations but as a symbol of the friendly relations which exist between the two Governments and the people. The ties that bind the two independent republics, Finland and the United States, have grown stronger since Finland in December made the last semiannual payment on her debt. The people of America, through their outpouring of aid to my country during the war, showed their friendship and sympathy for Finland.

FACES HEAVY BURDENS

"Finland's war was costly. Reconstruction, too, is costly. Hundreds of thousands of our people were left homeless when they moved from territory ceded to Russia. Our industries and economic life were demoralized. Thousands of orphans and widows became charges on the Government as a result of the casualties of the war.

"Faced with these heavy burdens of reconstruction, Finland is moving forward again with her own resources and the aid which she has received and continues to receive from her friends."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on May 28 I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 272, having for its purpose the extension to the Finnish Republic, of an option to refund its payments for the present year—namely, payments due on June 15 and December 15—if it wished so to do, the purpose and idea being to extend some small measure of voluntary recognition to the magnificent credit record which Finland has made. The joint resolution was referred to the Senate Finance Committee, which in turn referred it to the State Department and the Treasury Department. Both of those Departments have favorably reported on it.

I read a sentence or two from Secretary Hull's letter to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]:

I do not believe I need comment for the committee's information on the present distress and strain in Finland nor on the great effort of reconstruction and resettlement it must undertake amid all the existing difficulties. Neither need I dwell on the claims of the Finnish people to the regard of this Government and people. I will merely say that should the Congress be disposed at this time to propose to the Finnish Government a postponement of payments which will make substantial sums available to the Finnish Government during the present period of stress, I perceive no ground for objection from the point of view of the United States.

I also read a single sentence from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. Not only does the Secretary have no objection to the enactment of the joint resolution, but he adds:

If the Congress should desire to afford a more liberal measure of assistance to the Republic of Finland than is contemplated under the proposed joint resolution, this Department would be very pleased.

Mr. President, the Senate Finance Committee unanimously ordered a favorable report on the joint resolution this morning and instructed me to present it. From the Committee on Finance, I report the joint resolution without amendment, and at the request of the chairman of the committee, the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]—who is still in committee hearings—I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, inasmuch as obviously the time element requires it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 272) to authorize the postponement of payment of amounts payable to the United States by the Republic of Finland on its indebtedness under agreements between that Republic and the United States dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in full in the RECORD at this point the letters from which I have read brief extracts.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 10, 1940.

The Honorable PAT HARRISON,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: Pursuant to the request in your letter of June 5, I submit the following comment on Senate Joint Resolution 272. The joint resolution, if enacted, would authorize the postponement by the Republic of Finland of the payment of amounts payable to the United States during the calendar year 1940 under its debt agreements of May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932, and would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make, on behalf of the United States of America, an agreement with the Republic of Finland for the payment of the postponed amount with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum, in 10 annuities, to be paid during the calendar year beginning January 1, 1941, and in the 9 calendar years following.

I do not believe I need comment for the committee's information on the present distress and strain in Finland nor on the great effort of reconstruction and resettlement it must undertake amid all the existing difficulties. Neither need I dwell on the claims of the Finnish people to the high regard of this Government and people. I will merely say that should the Congress be disposed at this time to propose to the Finnish Government a postponement of payments which will make substantial sums available to the Finnish Government during the present period of stress I perceive no ground for objection from the point of view of the United States.

I do not wish to pass judgment upon the precise terms which such a proposal should include, although this would deserve the committee's careful consideration in drafting an unsolicited and unnegotiated tender of relief to an always punctual debtor government. Unless there is a postponement, Finland is to pay this year a $76,000 bond, $280,735 interest, and a Hoover moratorium annuity of $38,061, which represents one-tenth of the $55,000 bond and $257,295 interest originally due in the fiscal year 1932 plus additional interest on this bond and interest. The bonds themselves include a substantial percentage of funded interest accumulated between 1919 and 1923. Finland's payments are mostly for interest and only in small part for debt curtailment, as may appear from the fact that for relief supplies in the value of $8,281,926.17 received during the years 1919 and 1920, the Government of Finland has already paid the United States $5,891,291.77 and still owes the United States $8,142,890.21. The committee may wish to consider whether a further cumulation of interest on interest should be provided for in a postponement proposal to the Finnish Government, and also whether an adequate and wise measure of relief would be afforded by the brief term of postponement for which S. J. Res. 272 would provide. The effects sought by the resolution might not be produced by the terms in which it is at present drafted.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

JUNE 11, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of June 5, 1940, enclosing a copy of Senate Joint Resolution 272, introduced by Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, to authorize the postponement of payment of amounts payable to the United States by the Republic of Finland on its indebtedness under agreements between that Republic and the United States dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932.

The bill provides for the postponement at the option of Finland of payment of amounts payable to the United States during the period from January 1, 1940, to December 31, 1940. In the event of the exercise by Finland of the option to postpone such payments the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to make, on behalf of the United States, an agreement with Finland for the payment of the postponed amount, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum, beginning January 1, 1941, in 10 annuities, the first to be paid during the calendar year beginning January 1, 1941, and 1 during each of the 9 calendar years following.

The amounts payable to the United States by Finland during 1940 which would be subject to postponement under the proposed joint resolution are as follows:

Date payable	Funding agreement, May 1, 1923		Moratorium agreement, May 23, 1932	Total
	Principal	Interest
June 15, 1940		$140,367.50	$19,030.50	$159,398
Dec. 15, 1940	$76,000	140,367.50	19,030.50	235,398

The Treasury has no objections to the enactment of the proposed joint resolution if the Congress determines to grant a measure of assistance to the Republic of Finland. Finland was one of the first nations to come forward in 1922 to make arrangements for repaying to this Government amounts representing the cost to it of relief supplies which it had received. The people of Finland have steadfastly and scrupulously carried out their agreements with this Government. Notwithstanding the difficulties confronting that Government on December 15, 1939, it made a payment of $234,693 which was due to the United States. Previous to that date the President announced that the Treasury would be directed to hold this payment in suspense, and that he would recommend to the Congress that the funds be used for the benefit of the Finnish people. While the Export-Import Bank has granted credits to assist Finland, the payment of the amounts which will soon begin to mature on such credits, when added to the semiannual payments due from Finland on her relief indebtedness incurred in 1919 and 1920, constitute a drain on the limited resources of that government, resources which are sorely needed in the rehabilitation of the country.

Finland's indebtedness for relief supplies aggregated $8,281,926.17 and was represented by obligations of $3,289,276.98 dated June 30, 1919, and $4,992,649.19 dated July 1, 1920. As a result of the negotiations initiated in 1922 by the World War Foreign Debt Commission, the Congress, by an act approved March 12, 1924, authorized a refunding agreement with Finland under which interest on the original indebtedness at the rate of 4¼ percent per annum to December 15, 1922, amounting to $1,027,389.10, was added to the original debt, and after a cash payment of $309,315.27 by Finland, the balance of $9,000,000, with interest at 3 percent per annum from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, and thereafter at 3½ percent per annum, was to be repaid over a period of 62 years. Each semiannual installment has been promptly paid by Finland except the installments due in the fiscal year 1932, which were postponed under the moratorium proposed by President Hoover and authorized by the joint resolution of Congress approved December 23, 1931. The postponed installments are being repaid in 10 annuities with interest at 4 percent per annum from July 1, 1933. Since 1923, Finland has paid to the United States the sum of $5,891,291.77, of which $957,533.23 represented principal and $4,933,758.54 represented interest. This includes the payment of $234,693 by Finland on December 15, 1939.

It appears that the proposed joint resolution affords only limited assistance to Finland. It imposes a 3 percent interest rate, and includes interest on interest, which Finland must pay if that Government should desire to take advantage of this proposed offer. While the proposed interest of 3 percent is less than the 3½ percent rate which is now borne by Finland's indebtedness under the agreement of May 1, 1923, and the rate of 4 percent on the amounts postponed under the agreement of May 23, 1932, in the light of recent developments in Finland and the problems of reconstruction now confronting that Government, the requirement that the proposed postponed amounts be repaid within 10 years does not offer much except a temporary measure of assistance to Finland.

If the Congress should desire to afford a more liberal measure of assistance to the Republic of Finland than is contemplated under the proposed joint resolution, this Department would be very pleased.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Very truly yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I was compelled to leave the committee room before action was taken on the joint resolution. I realize, of course, the feelings of the Senate and the country toward Finland. As I stated the other day, I had received some representations from the representatives in Finland in the United States; and I got the impression—and I think it was an accurate impression—that they were not only willing to make their payment tomorrow, but they wanted to do it as a matter of pride on the part of the Finnish Government. They were not asking for a postponement or anything of the sort.

I should hate to do anything or to have the Senate do anything that would be regarded as contrary to the desire and wish of the Finnish Government to make its payment and to keep up its record, which is unique. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether the enactment of the joint resolution would be interpreted in any way as reflecting on the ability or the willingness or the desire of the Finnish Government to make its payment as it had contemplated and announced that it would make it, because I have a feeling that the people of Finland have more pride in keeping up their record of payments than they have in securing some extension on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very glad the Senator has asked the question. It is pertinent and should be specifically answered.

My information is precisely the same as that of the able Senator from Kentucky. The representatives of the Republic of Finland propose to maintain their payments, and are prepared to do so, regardless of the burden it represents to them at this difficult moment in Finnish history. There is nothing in the joint resolution which could remotely reflect upon their credit. On the contrary, the joint resolution simply extends an option which they may accept if they desire. In other words, we have simply put ourselves in the position of saying to them, "You have been a good debtor. Lonesomely, you have been a good debtor, and we offer you this tangible token of our acknowledgment." I am sure it is not only no reflection on their credit, but I should construe it as being the Senate's compliment to their credit. What really ought to be done—and I shall welcome any Treasury negotiations to this end—is to refund the entire Finnish debt on far more favorable terms, in view of Finland's debt record. Let us not forget that Finland originally got only $8,281,000 from us in 1919 and 1920; that Finland has actually paid us $5,891,000; but, thanks to the power of compound interest, Finland still owes us $8,142,000, although she has met every dollar of obligation when due. This resolution ought to be only the prelude to a rearrangement which would permit Finland to a receipt in full when it has paid the face of the principal. The pending resolution is no reflection on Finland. On the contrary, it is a compliment to Finland. The option may be rejected. But we can offer it as a matter of equity and fair play and as a demonstration of our constructive interest in good debtors.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the action of the committee and the instructions of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi, and in view of the fact that the two Senators from Michigan—both of whom are members of the committee—agree as to what happened, and I myself was not there, I do not feel that I am called upon to object. I insist, however, that nothing in the joint resolution or any action we may take here is in any way to be construed as indicating unwillingness or inability on the part of the Republic of Finland to make their payment as they planned to make it and have announced long in advance that they would make it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I really regret that the Senator from Michigan cannot definitely state the wishes of the representatives of the Finnish Government with reference to the payment, because, with him and with the Senator from Kentucky, I share the view that the representatives of this little Government should have the opportunity to maintain its record for the payment of its indebtedness. If the Senator would not demand action upon his joint resolution at this time, and should ascertain that the representatives of the Finnish Government prefer to make the payment, as I understand they are ready to do, I should like to suggest that the Senator from Michigan then move to amend the section of House Joint Resolution 544 which has been agreed to and which makes an appropriation of $50,000,000 to aid the refugees in the invaded sections of Europe, and specify that $10,000,000 shall be used for the assistance of refugees of the Finnish Government. In that way the Finnish Government would maintain its record; it would stand as an incentive not only to all governments but to all individuals throughout the world to pay their indebtedness when they are able to do so; and it would not deprive them of the remarkable record they have maintained to this time.

I wish the Senator would give consideration to adding $10,000,000 to the $50,000,000 and specify that it be spent for the aid and assistance of the Finns, and then let the Finnish Government maintain its record for paying its indebtedness.

Mr. JOHNSON of California rose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to comment on what the able Senator from South Carolina has suggested, and then I will yield to the Senator from California.

In the first place, I would not wish to make inquiry of the Finnish Minister whether or not he desired this action. I think that would be wholly out of harmony with the entire idea. This is a voluntary proposal on the part of the Government of the United States, a voluntary recognition of all the splendid attributes to which the Senator from South Carolina has referred. I think it would rob it of its entire value and sentiment if it were preceded by an inquiry as to whether or not it was wished.

So far as the other suggestion is concerned, I do not desire to confuse the refugee-appropriation question with this simple debt question, because the debt question is a very fundamental one in this country. Finland is the one nation which has maintained its record, yet which is under terrific pressure for cash at the present time. It is entitled to maintain its record and preference as a good debtor without the necessity of confronting this immediate burden, if it wishes to take the option. If it does not wish to take the option, it is in precisely the same position as if the resolution had not been passed, except that its appreciative creditor would have extended it the additional compliment of offering the option on the part of Congress.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I yield to no man, not even to the Senator from Michigan, in admiration for the Finns. When every other government on the face of the earth, at a time when they were amply able to pay, was defaulting in the payment of its just debts to the United States, the little Nation of Finland did its duty and kept the faith. I would go any length to show my appreciation of what they do and what they have done, but I want to be very certain before I do it that this is not to be taken as a precedent, and that there is no desire or design anywhere to take it as a precedent for the reduction or the omission or the remission of the amounts of money which are due from other nations of the world to the United States of America.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said of late about the so-called Johnson Act. The name of it is immaterial; the act itself has become immaterial; but against the endeavor which shall be made, either in this body or through the press, to repeal that act or to prevent nations which are indebted to us, even in this particular time, from paying the money they justly owe under the circumstances, I shall be in as firm opposition as I can be.

I do not want to afford a pretext for these nations to stand upon their contemptuous disregard of their plighted obligations. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether he has heard anything in any way, shape, form, or manner as to the effect the particular action he seeks might have upon any of the debts due from any other countries to the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think that is a very fair question—one which should be raised and one which should be answered.

The Senator is familiar with my fidelity to the so-called Johnson Act. I have no interest in its amendment or repeal. I see nothing in the proposed action which would remotely affect that question. I have heard of no purpose to invade the Johnson Act, so far as legislative action is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have heard the discussion outside, and I assume the Senator is asking me whether there is any relationship between this proposal of mine and the proposals which are heard for the repeal of the Johnson Act, and I say to him, "No." I wish to add that I do not see how this could be a precedent because, unfortunately, Finland is in a class by herself, and she creates no precedent for anyone else, either when she pays or when she is given the option of remission of payment for 1 year.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I quite agree with the Senator from Michigan, but I am very peculiarly suspicious of the attempts which are being made to undermine or repeal the Johnson Act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope the Senator will absolve me from that suspicion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course I do, but the Senator shows his knowledge of the efforts which are being made when he speaks of attempts being made outside this Chamber. They are being made. Every large newspaper in the land is saying to us that we must repeal that act, and there is pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations a resolution for the suspension of that act and the suspension of the neutrality law. So that the matter is now at a focus, and I want to be very certain that nothing we may do will in any degree afford comfort or sympathy to those who are seeking this peculiar action.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have given the Senator every assurance I can, and I give him the assurance wholeheartedly and with complete frankness.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it absolutely essential that this action be had today?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The joint resolution must be passed today, sent to the House, and passed by the House without reference to a committee, because the payment is to be made tomorrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have to leave the Chamber in a few moments, or I would not interrupt the Senator at this time.

I do not see anything in the joint resolution which hints at any suspicion that it could in any way be used as a precedent in favor of a resolution to repeal the Johnson Act. I am opposed to the repeal of that act.

Mr. President, in view of the record Finland has made, both as to the payment of the interest on her debt to us and later in the remarkable stand she made in defense of her freedom against the great octopus that was fighting her, knowing what that means in the way of finances to a government, knowing also the terrible distress visited upon her in a financial way as a result of the struggle, it seems to me the American Government, in view of those two considerations, should not only postpone the payment of interest but should remit the interest. I do not say that on behalf of the Finnish Government but I say it on behalf of our Government.

It is said here that Finland wants to keep up her record; that she wants to pay the money anyway. If that be true, let her pay it; but I think it is up to us to extend a gesture that will be fair and honorable—namely, to remit the payment of the interest entirely. If Finland pays it, if she feels that she wants to keep her record clear, it seems to me we should follow the payment by an immediate appropriation which would give the money we receive from Finland to the suffering people of Finland alone.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield again.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I came into the Chamber during the course of the Senator's speech. Has he a copy of the joint resolution?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am glad to hand a copy to the Senator. He will realize as he reads it that there is no provision for remission of the debt, there is nothing except provision for a refunding of two interest payments. There is nothing else involved, no other debtor involved, no precedent involved.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As I stated before, I yield to no man in admiration for Finland. I yield to no man in asserting that they did a magnificent job, that they are a brave and a bold people, who fought to the last against a great overpowering enemy. I yield to no man in saying, in every way I can say it, that Finland deserves well of this country because of her desire and anxiety to keep her obligation, as no other country has done. So I should like to do exactly as the Senator from Michigan suggests.

I take it, when a statement is made here that this is not intended or designed in any fashion, nor has anyone heard that in any fashion it is to be used as a precedent for the remitting of the debts of other nations, that that is so, and with that firm determination on the part of the Senate, I will not object, under the circumstances. Otherwise I should.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BROWN. I am in thorough sympathy with the joint resolution offered by my colleague. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that this is not the first time we have deferred payments due from the Finnish Government. In 1932, because of the financial condition of the country, we remitted payments which were then due, postponed them, and permitted them to be paid over a 10-year period, and $38,000 annually of the amount that is being paid by the Finnish Government is in pursuance of a congressional enactment, Public Law No. 5, which was adopted in 1931 to that effect.

As I heard the joint resolution read before the Finance Committee this morning, there is nothing to it more than that it permits the two payments due this year, 1940, to be deferred at the option of the Finnish Government. It does not go any further than that.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] referred to the payment due. My recollection is that the amount of the payment due is just under $150,000. The total amount of the indebtedness, according to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I placed in the RECORD while we were discussing the Finnish loan bill on February 7 of this year—that is, the principal amount of the debt, the balance due—is $8,042,000. The purpose of my colleague is merely to defer, if the Finnish Government desires it, the two interest payments which would be due this year.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not know the facts about the joint resolution. I am not a member of the committee, and I am not aware of the amount involved. I do not think, however, that that would really change my view. I made a suggestion simply in view of the hope expressed that the Finnish Government could preserve its record of debt payment. I should be willing to place in the section, making an appropriation for refugees in Europe which has already been agreed to as a part of House Joint Resolution 544, the unfinished business, a sum much larger than the amount indicated by the junior Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. The amendment adopted yesterday would include in its benefits the people of Finland. They, of course, as well as the people of all other European nations, have suffered in the wars. This interest payment is so small that I hardly think we should go to the trouble of changing the resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no intention of objecting. I do not know anything about the joint resolution. I could not help but express the hope that the Senator from Michigan would do nothing to keep the Finnish Government from preserving its record of debt payment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I hope the joint resolution will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 272) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Republic of Finland, at its option, may postpone the payment of amounts payable to the United States of America during the period from January 1, 1940, to December 31, 1940, inclusive, under the agreements between that Republic and the United States of America dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932; and, in the event of the exercise of the option herein granted, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make, on behalf of the United States of America, an agreement with the Republic of Finland for the payment of the postponed amount, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum beginning January 1, 1941, in 10 annuities, the first to be paid during the calendar year beginning January 1, 1941, and one during each of the 9 calendar years following, each annuity payment to be payable in one or more installments: Provided, however, That the amounts postponed shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum from the date payment of such amounts was postponed to January 1, 1941.

SEC. 2. The agreement authorized in the first section of this joint resolution shall be in such form that annuity payments thereunder shall, unless otherwise provided in such agreement, (1) be in accordance with the agreement with the Republic of Finland dated May 1, 1923, and (2) be subject to the same terms and conditions as payment under the agreement dated May 1, 1923.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with the action just taken I ask that the letters of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

MAY 24, 1940.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I wish to present a concurrent resolution in the Senate to preserve the favorable status of the Republic of Finland in respect to her war-debt record without the necessity of any payment by Finland on her approaching June obligation and her subsequent December obligation. In other words, I want Finland to have the full benefit of her debt-paying record and of whatever American advantages may accrue therefrom without the necessity of any payment of the next two installments. In view of the plight of Finland, it seems to me that it would be as embarrassing for us to accept these next payments as it might be difficult for Finland to make them—although I have no doubt that she would still persist in this heroic sacrifice. I do not see that any precedent is involved which might subsequently affect other war debtors because, of course, the record of Finland is unique and alone.

I am taking the liberty of writing you about it because I would not care to proceed with anything of this nature—at this particularly delicate moment—except as I might hope to be assured either of your approval or at least that the suggestion would not invite your disapproval.

If I may have a response by early mail, I shall appreciate it because if any action of this nature is to be taken it should be initiated at once.

With sentiments of great respect, and with warm personal regards, I beg to remain

Cordially and faithfully.

JUNE 3, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: Your letter of May 24 regarding payments due from Finland this year raises the same question the President had in mind last December when he directed the Secretary of the Treasury to place the December 15 payment in a separate account pending such action, if any, as the Congress might desire to take with respect to it.

The Congress has since authorized an increase in the lending power of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, under which a credit of $20,000,000 has been opened for Finland. However, the Congress has not directly dealt with the disposition to be made of the money received December 15 last from Finland.

I suggest that you may wish to discuss with Senator HARRISON the matter of the disposition both of the December 15 payment, which was duly received but has not yet been formally covered into the Treasury, and of the payment due June 15, and possibly other payments, during a reasonable time in the future. As the President said last January, the facts in regard to Finland are fully in possession of every Member of the Congress and the matter of credits to that Republic is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

In the meantime, the Department is proceeding with its usual routine handling of notification to Finland of the amount due and payable June 15, 1940.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is agreeing on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I desire to take my allotted time to discuss the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment proposes what, in my judgment, would be the most important item in the measure now under consideration. The Murray amendment provides for an increase in the appropriation for work relief from $975,000,000 to one and one-half billion dollars, which amount, as is the amount now contained in the measure, would be made available for the first 8 months of the next fiscal year.

I said the amendment proposes what would be the most important item in the joint resolution, and the proof of my statement is the universal acknowledgement of the fact that unemployment is the Nation's greatest problem, and that the Senator's proposal is a direct attack on the unemployment problem. Unemployment, our greatest problem, does not receive the consideration it merits from the legislators. It has yet to receive the energetic consideration that it merits from the country at large.

Unemployment, we are told, is the offspring, the child of democracy. Unemployment is prevalent only as a problem in the democratic nations of the world. Unemployment has destroyed many of the world's democracies. Unemployment is responsible for the debacle in Europe today.

Mr. President, unemployment never existed, nor does it exist today, in the primitive nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Unemployment is a direct result of the fostering, the encouragement of private enterprise in a capitalistic system. It is the result of a theory on the part of the Government that says to its citizens, "Go the limit in the expansion and the development of your private business. The sky is the limit." But while that development takes place, while this encouragement is given so freely and widely, very little attention is paid to the other side of the picture, to the human side, and the adversity which results from this highly mechanized age of speed in production in which we live.

As the result of the unemployment situation that burdened the inept democracies of the Old World, as the result of the unrest, the deprivation, and the desperation that gripped the hearts of men abroad, they yielded their loyalty to their democratic systems of government, and succumbed to this new and regimented ideology that today covers the earth like a dark ominous cloud. In their search for security they yielded their independence and their own enterprise. Today we find the primitive nations on the one hand and the totalitarian nations on the other condemning the democratic system for its burdening unemployment problem.

So I say, Mr. President, the amendment in question is the most important item in connection with the joint resolution. It is our opportunity in the closing hours of the session, and the only opportunity we will have, to make a marked contribution to the elimination of unemployment. We should grasp this opportunity while we still have time to provide that full and fair share which the Federal Government should assume in connection with private industry, and with local governments for the abolishment of poverty, privation, desperation, and unemployment in the United States.

Mr. President, since the coming of this problem as one of our major problems of government, we have made two national efforts to wipe it out. In 1930, with a conservative administration in power and with the natural tendency of a conservative administration guiding the legislative program, we began an offensive against unemployment by drastically reducing taxes, by adopting a program of economy, by reducing the wages of Federal employees, by cutting the compensation of veterans who had served in our wars. By reducing taxes and by eliminating costs of government, we found that we dried up the sources of the Government's revenue, and that our tax collections dropped from more than $6,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. We found as a result of that program that the national wealth of the United States dropped from an all-time high in 1929 of approximately $90,000,000,000 to a desperate low of $36,000,000,000. After 2 or 3 years of that futile effort we found an ever-growing army of unemployed, reaching the record high of 15,000,000 idle men and women. We found deflation taking a greater toll than the marching armies of any totalitarian dictatorship could take in this or any other country.

So, Mr. President, that great national effort, that attack on our unemployment problem by a conservative administration, failed miserably. Finally, to the lasting benefit of the country, in 1933, we yielded to a new program, another national effort, the effort and program of a progressive administration. As a result of the program inaugurated by President Roosevelt, as a result of the creation of a Federal Works program, we doubled the Government's revenues. We increased the national income until today it approximates $70,000,000,000. We added 10,000,000 jobless to the workers' rolls of America, until today, taking on an accumulation of 600,000 new workers every year, we have reduced the number of jobless from a total of 15,000,000 to a total today of 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 unemployed.

Above and beyond that, we restored confidence and hope. We provided time for this democracy to study the question, and to bring about a proper and just solution of it.

Since 1933, Mr. President, there have been many studies, many investigations, numerous forums, and a great many recommendations as to the solution of our unemployment program. If I were to list the most successful efforts in that direction, I should probably give first place to the committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and his associates on the Temporary National Economic Committee.

I should pay considerable praise to the efforts of a national magazine which time after time has devoted editorial space and has sacrificed considerable money and effort to bring this problem to the surface. I have before me, Mr. President, a copy of the magazine Forum dated October 1939. In that issue I find emphasized as the most prominent article an account of the Fourth Forum Round Table discussion and consideration of the unemployment problem.

This forum was made up of a number of the leaders of the Nation—leaders in industry, agriculture, and government; leaders in finance and labor; leaders who were selected after considerable care and investigation, leaders who have the confidence of the country in the various walks of life in which they are engaged. In that round-table forum the Senator who is chairman of the Temporary National Economic Committee was an active participant. The forum spent a week-end in delving into the problem of unemployment. It brought to the round-table forum all the knowledge and experience gained in many endeavors and studies of the problem, and arrived at an area of agreement. There were suggestions in which they all joined, giving their hearty approval. There was also an area of disagreement. However, Mr. President, it is interesting to note, particularly while we are discussing the pending amendment, which is an attack on the problem of unemployment, that the members of the forum came to an agreement on the very fundamental which we are now considering.

Mr. President, the Fourth Forum Round Table, whose report on unemployment is presented in the issue of Forum for October 1939, has reached an agreement on the following:

First. That the democratic system thrives only by the creation of individual opportunity. That verifies the statement which I made, that democracies go into decay with the growth of idleness.

Second. That unemployment is a denial of opportunity. This is the land of opportunity. It is our solemn obligation to protect our people in their right to opportunity. To adjourn this Congress with a full realization in our minds and hearts that we go home leaving 9,000,000 of our brethren without work and in desperation, is an un-American, unpatriotic, and disloyal thing to do.

Third. The round-table forum agreed that the greatest domestic problem with which the United States is now confronted is the problem of unemployment. That is a verification of the first statement I made. That statement has been made by every forum. It has been one of the results of every investigation. It is an undeniable truth. Unemployment is America's greatest problem. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, who is deeply interested and concerned in the welfare of his fellow countrymen, we have an opportunity to direct a frontal attack upon unemployment which will reduce it to a point where it will not, at least during the next fiscal year, prove to be the major and devastating problem which it has been in the past few years.

Fourth. The forum found that there is no conflict between employer and employee, capital and labor, or farm and city, that cannot be solved by peaceful democratic means. Mr. President, we have 9,000,000 people out of work. That is a conservative estimate. We have estimates from many sources ranging all the way from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000. If we can solve this problem by peaceful democratic means, and if it is a problem that we should solve by peaceful democratic means, this is a democratic body, functioning in the formalisms of a representative system of government.

It is a body that realizes all too well that the existence of 9,000,000 unemployed is a reality. In our own communities we are reminded of it day after day. Men with whom we live, neighbors with whom we associate, will eloquently tell us when we go home every time we step out of the house that unemployment is a devastating and desperate problem. Yet, Mr. President, this being a democratic body, with a full realization that this question can be solved in a democratic way, we must realize that the session is drawing to a close; that there will perhaps be no further opportunity to consider a work-relief program while this session lasts, and that this is our last opportunity while the Congress remains in session. We, therefore, know that we have the problem, that we are going home to face the problem and its effects. We must realize that we have the opportunity in our hands now to direct a devastating blow at the problem. Therefore I call upon my colleagues to consider well the meritorious amendment which is at the desk and which will put 3,000,000 of these idle men to work, leave 3,000,000 for private enterprise and all its categories, and 3,000,000 more of unemployables for the States, counties, and local governments to look after.

Mr. President, having made these pronouncements, the round table unanimously agreed, first that the social gains of the past few years must be kept.

It will be interesting, Mr. President, for you to note, and I am sure it will be interesting for some of the candidates for the Presidency who may now be within the range of my voice, to note that on this round-table forum, who agreed that all the social gains of the last 6 or 7 years should be kept, were men who are vieing with them for the nomination for the coveted office of President of the United States. I cannot speak for them all; I do not know, really, how many of them are candidates for the Presidency; but I find in that very imposing list, Mr. President, the name of the president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, who, as a former Democrat, has made a phenomenal gain in the Republican field for delegates to the Republican National Convention. A forum composed of men of that particular character; a forum composed of those who might take issue with this administration; a forum composed of individuals who are not a part of, and, in many cases, are altogether out of sympathy with this administration, comes to the conclusion that we must keep, not some, not a few, but all the social gains of the last few years. What do they mean?

Mr. President, our attack upon unemployment is a social gain. The enactment of regulatory legislation that prevents financial losses and waste is a social gain. The construction of new houses under the national housing program is a social gain, and the program we are considering today—the rehabilitation of our older workers, job opportunities for our youthful workers, a chance for our unemployed men and women to make a livelihood—is a social gain. When we are admonished by a forum of great national note that we must keep those gains, I really believe it is good advice from what might be considered an impartial source.

Mr. President, so much for the Fourth Forum Round Table. I believe we all agree with their findings; we all agree that unemployment is the all-important problem; we all agree that this is perhaps our last opportunity to go on record against privation and starvation and desperation before we go home to associate with our neighbors and our constituents again.

There is another item in which I believe there is general and unanimous agreement, and that is that we want jobs, not charity; we want work, not a dole for our people. I am sure every man and every woman within the hearing of my voice realizes that in work there is to be found initiative and ingenuity that build for stronger manhood, but that in idleness and in indolence there are decay and demoralization that will have a devastating effect upon our democracy. So we believe in jobs, not in idleness; and if we go home from here without making provision for jobs, we shall be giving lip service to the problem every time we mention our support of the cause of jobs and our denunciation of the devastation and desperation of the dole. Well, here is our last chance, Mr. President. We have never had a more favorable opportunity, a more commanding opportunity, to approach this question, to strike at its very heart, and to determine that we will reduce it to one of the minor problems of the country.

We agree that we have the jobless; we agree that it is work, not the dole, that we favor; we agree that it is our duty to make provision for work opportunities for those who are employable. We are admonished to keep all our social gains. Therefore this is our opportunity; it is our opportunity not only because it is our duty, not only because we have already started the program and we must not interrupt it now, but, above and beyond that, this is no time to tolerate idleness in America.

No man or woman realizing the situation that exists in Europe, and the ominous clouds that hang over us, should be permitted to remain idle in this period of our history. There is necessary work for everyone to do in order to provide for our national security and for their individual protection. We have a great national-defense program which, unfortunately, has been forced upon us, and, unwillingly, we must build instruments of destruction. In the building of our defenses there is much work that can be done by the 9,000,000 who are unemployed.

Mr. President, I will take 30 minutes on the bill if I have taken 30 minutes on the amendment, or vice versa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MEAD. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. KING. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Finance which has been conducting hearings for 2 days for the purpose of trying to ascertain from what sources we may raise $1,004,000,000 in order to aid in the development of national defense. Already we are imposing upon the American people enormous taxes, and in the bill which is under consideration, which has passed the House, there are imposed heavy taxes upon those in the lower brackets, upon the farmer, upon the tobacco grower, and upon those of small incomes. We have almost exhausted the resources in the high brackets, if I may use that expression, and so we are resorting to an increase of the taxes in the low brackets.

As I understand the able Senator from New York, he is asking for an additional $500,000,000. It is obvious that we will have a deficit, to say nothing of that which will be caused by preparation for national defense, of three or four billion dollars.

I should be glad if the Senator would indicate where we can get the additional revenue. Keep in mind the fact that only a few years ago our entire national expenditures were less than a billion dollars a year. Now those expenditures are from six to eight or nine billion dollars, and, notwithstanding very heavy taxes, we still have a deficit of three or four billion dollars. Unless we increase the taxes, in view of the preparations which are being made for national defense, the deficit for the coming year will be five or six or seven billion dollars. We cannot go on indefinitely creating such deficits without impairing the credit of the Nation.

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the interruption of my distinguished friend from Utah. I realize how intensely interested he is in the Nation's finances. I can assure him, however, that I appreciate the necessity of a balanced Budget, and while we may differ in our approach to the attainment of that splendid objective, I know he agrees with me when I say that under present circumstances the security of our country, the protection of our country from invasion, the desire of our country to remain at peace by having an invulnerable defense, takes precedence over the desirability of attaining a balanced Budget within the next 2 or 3 years.

I said just a moment ago that this is a most favorable opportunity for the Senate to provide work for at least 3,000,000 of the 9,000,000 unemployed. I said that not only because of the need to make provision for work, not only because of the need to make provision for our national defense, but because never in all the history of our country have we been in more fortunate and favorable circumstances from a wealth-producing standpoint than we are at the present time.

The oft-spoken phrase that the United States is the richest country in the world is a truism which can be brought forcefully to the attention of Senators by a brief review of our financial sheets.

Today, with the last geographical frontier of the Nation settled, we have achieved a greatness which challenges the imagination. The Nation is a giant in wealth, in power, and in strength. The real story of our prowess as a Nation defies description. From time to time its strength has been severely tested, but no challenge has gone unanswered, no problem left unsolved.

Today there are those who cry out that our people have grown flabby, and that our economy has gone to pot. Critics of the present administration and some candidates for high office rail against the legislative accomplishments of the past 7 years. Over and over again they charge that we are in the financial and industrial doldrums; that we have "killed the goose that laid the golden eggs." They seek to convince the citizens of the Republic that agriculture, industry, and financial institutions are prostrate and bankrupt, due to the restrictions and regulations advocated and instituted by this administration. They say that the restriction of speculation, the regulation of utility holding companies, the aid to farmers, the rights granted to labor to organize and to bargain collectively, and other administration measures, have shackled American industry until the last feeble gasp of profits and prosperity has been snuffed out.

The most conservative and authentic sources contradict with irrefutable evidence these unfounded claims. They prove that we are going in the right direction. They blast to oblivion the empty charge that the New Deal program has weakened the financial strength of America.

I have here several newspaper clippings, selected at random, which tell the true story of American progress under our present liberal leadership—certainly one that would encourage us to continue in the path we have chosen to take.

Reading from the Christian Science Monitor of Tuesday, January 2, the heading is as follows:

Industrial groups reach new production peaks in 1939—Some industries break all past records during 1939.

The article goes on to relate that—

A number of United States businesses and industries managed to break all past records in the year 1939, despite war and the lingering aftermath of depression.

* * * * * * *

Electric-power production for the year totaled around 128,300,000,000 kilowatts, highest in history, and compared with 114,600,000,000 in 1938.

Production of steel ingots in October and November at 5,394,000 and 5,463,000, respectively, set consecutive new record monthly.

* * * * * * *

Motor fuel * * * output in 1939, at 596,111,000 barrels, was also the biggest in history.

* * * * * * *

Consumption of chemicals in the final 1939 quarter was the fastest for any 3 months on record.

Leading mail-order houses reported the biggest autumn sales in history.

* * * * * * *

The miles of film used by camera enthusiasts exceeded all marks in the annals of photography.

I have here a copy of Barron's National Financial Weekly of April 1, 1940:

AUTO-PARTS MAKERS SHARE AIRCRAFT BOOM—FOUR LEADING COMPANIES REPORTED NET INCOME LAST YEAR

* * * * * *

Automobile-equipment companies which have branched out into the aircraft field are profiting from the current boom in that industry. All four of the leading companies last year reported the highest net income in their history.

Mr. President, I am not a piker. I am only picking out record breakers, all time-peaks, and they seem to cover almost every industry in the United States.

I have here an article from a trade journal dated April 4, 1940, which reads in part as follows:

I. P. & P. CO. REPORTS NET OF $4,893,590

* * * * * *

This compares with $124,075 in 1938, 27 percent in excess of 1938.

Tonnage sales for the year were the highest in its history.

Mr. President, I have here a trade journal which relates that a new $5,000,000 newsprint mill is being established in the South. Then it goes on further to say:

UNITED STATES PAPER EXPORTS SET NEW HIGH

* * * The United States exports of paper and its manufactures in January, valued at $4,164,065, set a new high, being the highest since February 1921, according to the Department of Commerce.

An all-time high since the depression.

I have here a copy of the New York Times which goes on to say that the profit of Gimbel Bros. is tripled:

One million four hundred and two thousand two hundred and ninety-five dollars cleared in year ended January 1931—sales up 4.8 percent.

Another article is headed:

Alcohol company turns loss to gain.

* * * * * * *

This is from the New York Times of March 1940:

Net income of United States Industrial, $77,525 in '39; $667,657 deficit in '38; * * * sales increased 25.5 percent.

NEW PROFIT PEAK FOR OIL COMPANY

The Tidewater Associated Oil Co. in its statement for the March quarter of 1940, issued for publication today, shows a net income of $3,780,220, the highest for any first quarter in the history of the concern.

Here is another copy of the New York Times indicating that the pay roll of General Motors was up 28.4 percent:

Pay rolls of General Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries throughout the world in 1939 amounted to $386,292,203, the third highest in the company's history, and a gain of * * * 28.4 percent over 1938.

* * * * * * *

FIVE MILLION TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINE DOLLARS CLEARED BY CURTISS-WRIGHT

1939 profit peak for concern is 45 percent above 1938.

AVIATION CONCERN TURNS LOSS TO GAIN

United Air Lines Transport had $322,121 profit in 1939; $997,221 deficit in '38.

Here is another clipping from the New York Times. It goes on to say:

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY CORPORATIONS RAISE PROFITS 50 PERCENT

First-quarter income up to $272,291,000 from $181,375,000 a year before.

Mr. President, realizing the untold wealth, the amazing volume of profit industry is piling up, realizing as we do the favorable situation that confronts industry, just imagine the situation we should face if we were to adjourn and go home with the knowledge that 9,000,000 of our people are without work. Our industry is piling up fabulous sums of money, while profits and dividends are breaking all-time records. Can those who represent the people, realizing the plight of democracy all over the world, adjourn while this situation exists in America with wealth an one side of the road, desperation and privation on the other?

Mr. President, not only while this international situation looms black and ominous for us, but after that when peace returns I believe it is our solemn duty to see to it that unemployment is banished from the land, that the dole is not the only opportunity for our fellow beings, and that we provide opportunity for the unemployed of our country, the opportunity to work which every man hopes for and lives for. We must solve the problem in the democratic way by preserving the liberties of our people while increasing their security.

Speaking of the Federal debt, coming more directly to the point raised by my distinguished friend the Senator from Utah, what has been the situation since the adoption by the present administration of the national work-relief program? What would be the situation if we abandoned it?

Mr. President, if we abandoned the 9,000,000 unemployed or the 10,000,000 unemployed, or that portion of the unemployed we might be able to abandon if we wiped out this appropriation entirely and balanced the Budget, what would happen to them? What would happen to our economy? What would happen to the community which carried the relief burden? Would our industries show the profits they are showing? Would the national wealth produced in America continue to rise? Would the revenues collected by the Federal Government remain at the point where they are? No one has learned so little as the result of the presence of this economic storm as to believe that balancing the Budget, bankrupting the municipalities back home, reducing the buying power of our people, forfeiting the great wealth-producing-enriching projects which have been or will be constructed, would in any way help the economy of the Nation.

Mr. President, I have here the figures of our national debt in June 1930 as compared with June 1939. During all that time, particularly since 1933, we have provided programs for our people far in excess of the amount included in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana. We must remember, we must not forget, that in this session of Congress we have made no provision to carry on the Public Works Administration. That is gone, and all of the skilled and unskilled workers, hundreds of thousands of them, directly and indirectly associated with that vast construction program, are being furloughed as rapidly as the projects are being completed.

Let us not forget that when we adjourn, unless the House Rules Committee takes expeditious action, and unless the House itself takes action on the bill to provide decent housing conditions for millions of our people who are living in hovels, the program which has provided untold opportunities for work will be stricken from the works program. Realizing that we are in the closing days of the session, and with a full appreciation that the enactment of that housing program is at best something which we cannot figure on, it is all the more necessary for us to adopt the Murray amendment, in order to fill the gap which will result from the failure of the Congress to continue the housing program, and from the failure of the Congress to provide for a continuation of the public-works program.

Mr. President, let me show what happened during all this time we have been providing work relief for our people, appropriating not millions, but billions, more than is contained in the Murray amendment. The public net debt on June 30, 1932, so far as the Federal Government was concerned, was $16,824,000,000. On June 30, 1939, the Federal debt was $32,044,000,000.

The State and local debt in 1932 was $16,000,000,000, but on June 30, 1939, it was only $14,000,000,000.

The total public debt in 1932, therefore, was $32,000,000,000, while the total public debt, Federal and State, in 1939, was $46,000,000,000. It rose something over $13,000,000,000.

The private debt in June 1932 was $108,000,000,000, but in June 1939 it had dropped to $92,000,000,000.

So that the gross public and private debts as a result of the so-called fabulous appropriations by the Federal Government for public works, were reduced in the Nation by $2,246,000,000.

I say to those who would interpose and suggest that we reduce appropriations and balance the Budget under these fearful conditions, under these terrifying circumstances, that experience proves that it is not the right thing to do. Waste is created by forcing men to remain idle, and wealth is created when our people are put to work on useful public or private projects.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that this is our chance, because experience proves the efficacy of the work relief program. Now is our chance, because we are all ready to adjourn in a few days, and adjourning, possibly, without the enactment of the wise housing program suggested and fostered by my colleague the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. It is our chance, because we believe that we need the help and cooperation and energy of every man and woman in the United States as we face the present national situation in all its precarious complications.

Mr. President, under the bill now being considered, and if enacted without the amendment, we will provide for only 1,900,000 of our unemployed. We will leave, therefore, two-thirds of the burden to the local governments. I claim that that is a disproportionate share; that we would not be doing our duty; that we would be giving only lip service to the unemployment problem.

We need national defenses, and we need them badly. The able Senator from Montana yesterday told us of the work which could be done in the building of airports, air ways, and runways, and the work which could be done on our Army and Navy bases and our military roads, and for military housing and mobilization centers and cantonments, as well as underground storage hangars.

Mr. President, there is a fabulous amount of work, which 9,000,000 people could not complete, in order that our defenses may be put in order; and I cannot think that we would adjourn without making provision for at least 3,000,000 of them; and I cannot think that we would not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana in the face of present-day circumstances.

Personally, I believe that it is not as necessary to have a navy and an army as it is to have a patriotic, loyal citizenry. I believe that our defenses, no matter how powerful they may be, will be vulnerable unless we successfully attack the problem of unemployment and bolster up the morale of our people. I believe that if we adjourn, with the realization that adjournment means unemployment, impoverishment, and idleness, we shall fail to perform our patriotic duty.

I know that the unemployed of America are among the finest of our citizenship. I know that if war should come to America—and I pray it will not—we shall find recruited from the ranks of the unemployed of today the flower of America's volunteer army. Yet, Mr. President, I know that in enforced idleness and in indolence is found the best opportunity for the work of those with malice in their hearts and sabotage in their minds, those whose work is now evidenced even in this country in the building up of so-called "fifth columns."

To protect our country, therefore, to insulate it against the invasion of those who are unwelcome here, I believe we ought to provide work for all our loyal, faithful, and patriotic people. That is the best protection on earth.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to inquire of the able Senator, who is making such a forceful argument in favor of the pending amendment, if it is not true that it is the total mobilization of the manpower of Germany that makes it in Europe the formidable threat it is today?

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the able Senator, whose amendment I hope will be adopted, that I have before me a very exhaustive account of the German public-works program, which in some degree compares favorably with the works program of our own W. P. A. This is part of the program which Germany prosecuted for years, until finally her preparedness was the most perfect of any nation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is entirely correct in his statement. It was the carrying out of a program similar to the program which we hope will receive the preferential consideration of the W. P. A. which helped to make Germany the military power it now is. Here we adopt such a program reluctantly, unfortunately, but because of world conditions our national peace and security demands it. I am in agreement with the Senator from Montana. We must put the unemployed to work. We must see to it that our defenses, our moral and our military defenses, are invulnerable. The W. P. A., with the aid of 3,000,000 workers, will make a——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment and on the bill has expired.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to explain some of the reasons why I shall support the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. I am not unmindful of the fact that there are many Members of the Senate and many persons outside who will consider this proposal tremendously unusual and extravagant. I would have some reluctance about supporting this great increase except for the fact that it impresses me as seriously important in connection with our national-defense program.

I was denied the pleasure and opportunity of hearing all the address of the distinguished junior Senator from New York, but I did hear it in part, and I find myself in accord at least with that portion of his address which I heard.

Mr. President, if the Members of the Senate and if the people of the country had a chance to know how much it would be possible to do with the additional appropriation here proposed, I think the proposal would meet with quite general approval.

During the last several days, as the result of the trying and terrifying situation in the Old World, we have come quite clearly to a realization that we must for the time being, for the sake of our country, set aside the immediate consideration of balancing of the Budget. A cry now for Budget balancing—much as we all desire a balanced Budget—raises a doubt that may do our country harm, and probably will react to the disadvantage of those in other places with whom we sympathize.

I regard the proposed additional appropriation completely as a defense measure, and I shall try, in the few minutes that I shall take, to show how it is important in that respect.

I should first like to say, however, that in connection with a national-defense program it is extremely important that our entire forces be united. I have long believed, and the belief is now intensified, that the true test of a nation is its care of the weak; and I have long believed—and I now believe to a greater extent—that we cannot expect the same patriotism, the same intense devotion to country, on the part of those who are neglected in part by their own neighbors, and by their countrymen, that we can expect from their more fortunate neighbors.

As we go forward with a program of national defense, it seems to me extremely important and necessary that we have a strong internal defense, that the feelings of all our people are in accord, that distressed people are removed from the susceptibility of the pagan and foreign influences which we all admit are to some degree and extent existent within our country.

If those who are without sufficient food and shelter and those who are suffering the economic sorrows of the times complain of what we do, they should not be too harshly criticized, for they see their governmental representatives appropriating billions of dollars for armament, while in some instances the armament so vital and necessary to their own homes and firesides is woefully weak.

Mr. President, if we should appropriate the additional money suggested by the junior Senator from Montana, and thereafter, as the result of the armament program now under way, there should not be the present existing crying need for jobs, the money would not need to be spent; but if Congress is to go home—and I doubt that it should now go home—there should be appropriated sufficient money to meet the economic and social needs, at least during the uncertain days which lie just ahead; and, more important than that, there should be a sufficient amount of money available to take care of and to provide for those national-defense items, the need for which is probably yet not too clearly seen.

Without any desire to burn incense to myself, let me say that I suggested an amendment several days ago which would make unnecessary a sponsor's contribution in connection with W. P. A. projects proposed for national-defense purposes. The idea came to my mind as the result of many hearings which I attended as a member of subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with Army and Navy matters and partially as a result of the tremendous program proposed in different places in connection with our need for a great air defense. The desire was expressed that we have, as soon as possible, an airplane production of 50,000 units a year. The suggestion was made, and the hope expressed, and in some places with confidence, that we could quickly train many thousands of flyers. Based upon my own limited knowledge of the situation, confined to my own neighborhood, and pretty much to the State in which I live, it became clear to me that there was much to do besides the manufacture of planes and getting enough young men to volunteer for air training. It seemed to me that if thousands of young men in all parts of the country were to volunteer for this uncertain and patriotic field of military service, appropriate and safe landing fields should be put at the disposal of the Government and of the young men and the agencies and forces which would train them.

In the progressive State in which I live, and in the forward-looking part of the country from which I come, it seemed to me that there was a number of very insufficient and incomplete air fields. I know that in my own State hundreds of thousands of dollars will be required properly to complete the existing air fields; and I seriously doubt that they will be completed without a more generous contribution on the part of the Federal Government.

Not only do we need adequate airfields in connection with the training of these young men, but if the darkest clouds should come, if we should suffer attack, and through no fault of our own we should become involved in the war, the air forces of our country would play an important part; and it seemed to me that we could best serve our Nation and people by strengthening our air forces in every possible way.

We know from the experience of the present war that centralizing and collecting airplanes and air forces in great numbers in any one field or in a few large fields is extremely dangerous. We know that to provide proper protection we need a great many airfields so that they may be widely separated in the event of attack.

With this thought in mind, I offered the amendment to which I have heretofore referred. The Appropriations Committee, in its usual wisdom, probably as a result of other thinking besides my own, adopted an amendment which provided that the sponsor's contribution might be waived in connection with projects approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as necessary for national defense.

But let me point out, Mr. President, that as I understand, the amendment was accepted without the appropriation of additional money. So it seems to me that if we are proceeding with the pending measure in accordance with our national-defense plans, we had better provide the money now to do that kind of work. If we are to do it well and properly, no one will deny that millions upon millions of dollars will be required all over the country. No one will deny that there may be innumerable other instances the importance of which cannot now be foreseen, in which our national defense needs strengthening. Such projects might be undertaken with the forces of the present unemployed if money were available and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy should approve the projects.

Let me cite one extremely important instance in my own State, which, I think, might be comparable to innumerable other instances elsewhere. Connecticut has suffered seriously from devastating floods in recent years. The largest and by far the most important airplane-engine plant, from the standpoint of contributing the greatest strength to our air defense, is located in my State. It is a great factory, which employs many thousands of men. It is now producing almost all the airplane engines manufactured in this country. During one of the recent devastating floods it became necessary to close that plant. Since that time I have been trying in one way or another to obtain sufficient money to provide a dike extension which would protect the community in which the plant is located and the plant itself against the possibility of future floods.

Appreciating the importance of the project and the proposal, the Senate passed a bill for that purpose, but it has not finally passed the Congress. Greatly disturbed about conditions, I had it included in the civil-functions bill of the War Department, but the item was rejected on the other side of the Capitol.

Is it not fair to assume, Mr. President, that the project for the protection of this great industry—in my judgment an industry more vital to our national defense than any other—might be developed and completed through funds provided by the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, which funds apparently are not elsewhere or otherwise provided? Who can say that other like projects might not be necessary in connection with needed protection for munitions plants or important industrial plants? At Hartford, Conn., there is another similar project which would protect other great munitions plants. Where is the money coming from if we are to go home? How are these national-defense projects to be undertaken without funds?

Mr. President, I have no desire longer to detain the Senate. In the emergency which confronts our country, I hope and pray that we shall not be lulled to sleep. I have an intense desire that our people shall not lessen the seriousness of their thinking. I hope that the effort started toward our national defense will be prosecuted to the end with continuing determination. I hope the additional money will be provided.

I am mindful, of course, of the terrific cost, and of the tax burden which will follow. But tax burdens are no longer of serious concern to the saddened and stricken people of Europe, who a little while ago at least saw by the light of a lamp, and now see only by the light of flashing guns and burning homes.

Mr. President, I am not unappreciative of the magnitude of the additional funds proposed to be appropriated. I know that in some places the suggestion will probably be regarded as fantastic. But the uncertainties of the times, the horrible examples that we face from day to day, and dark clouds all around us, make it ever so necessary that we set aside precedents, and that we be a bit more bold and courageous. Probably the time calls for a bit of recklessness.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment will prevail. The proposed appropriation could not under any circumstances be a total loss. If men are without employment and in dire need, and we neglect them, we shall be neglecting our national defense. If work is otherwise provided, we save the money. With what we spend under the W. P. A. we create everlasting social values. In my judgment, the waste and carelessness of the W. P. A. are things of the past. At long last I think we are convinced, as a result of the sufferings of other people who were careless of their own comfort and welfare and of their national security, as to what we must do. I am satisfied that we will do it, Mr. President.

Let me say once more that I am attracted to the proposed heavy additional expenditure only because of my intense desire that the national-defense program be completed in its entirety. Having started, we should go all the way; and, finally, after the indolence, carelessness, and neglect, which were, perhaps, natural in the old days, and for which no individual or group of individuals probably can be blamed, we should quickly take up the tools and finish the important national-defense work which remains undone.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in support of the committee's position and in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. I believe that those who are supporting the amendment of the Senator from Montana are overlooking two or three very vital considerations in the situation.

In the first place, this is a relief bill; its purpose is to take care of people who are in distress by giving them employment. It is not primarily a defense bill. It is perfectly proper that we should make use of the employees on the relief rolls in furtherance of defense work, keeping in mind the main purpose which is relief; but it is a mistake to invert the picture and assume that this is a defense bill first and that relief is merely incidental to that.

As to the figures, where do the figures in the bill come from? They come from those best informed as to unemployment and relief needs in the country. The bill represents that for which the President and which Colonel Harrington of the Relief Administration asked.

Senators will recall when the Budget was submitted by the President for relief purposes the President requested $975,000,000 for a 12-month period. That was what he regarded as adequate. Following the first of the year a somewhat less favorable economic situation developed. The President then asked that the amount of $975,000,000 be given a flexibility, so that it could be consumed, if needed, within an 8-month period rather than to be stretched over a 12-month period. In other words, there was an increase of 33⅓ percent in the amount of money available. The $975,000,000 will take care of an average of 2,032,000 a month.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I was obliged to leave the Chamber temporarily and did not hear the entire statement of the Senator from Colorado. I assume a vote will be taken very shortly on this question. I have taken the position in the case of all relief measures to vote for the amount the President requests. I assume he consults the agencies of the Government that are best informed as to the need of relief. I want to give every dollar that is requested for relief purposes by those who are familiar with relief problems. Now I ask the Senator does this bill contain the full amount of money requested by the President for relief?

Mr. ADAMS. It does up to the last cent.

Mr. WALSH. That statement will determine my vote.

Mr. ADAMS. I was explaining that originally the President requested $975,000,000 for a 12-month period, but a less-favorable economic situation developed, and he has now asked that the amount be made available for an 8-month period; and that has been done.

Congress has no source of information of its own as to the number of people in need; we have no machinery to gather information. The best source of information, necessarily, is the W. P. A., with their widespread organization. We all know that national agencies are not given to asking less than they need. So when we give to the W. P. A. the full amount it has asked for we may be quite sure that we are adequately taking care of the need.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Let me make on further statement. Then I will yield.

In the House hearings Colonel Harrington stated that the need for July was for 1,700,000 people; for August, 1,700,000; for September, 1,700,000; for October, 1,800,000; for November, 2,000,000. Those were his estimates, and those estimates furnished by Colonel Harrington were put in the bill in the House. We have recommended that those limitations be removed; and the amount of money provided by the pending measure, instead of taking care of 1,700,000 people, will take care of an average of over 2,000,000.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have been somewhat disturbed about the probable increase in the cost of living in the next few months. I anticipate that we are about to enter a period of rising prices because of the conditions in Europe and because of the very great industrial activity which I expect will soon start. Is any authority vested in the President or those who would administer this act to increase the wages of the W. P. A. workers in accordance with an increase which may come about in the cost of living? Is any provision at all made to cover that contingency, which I consider to be a probable one?

Mr. ADAMS. The W. P. A. Administration is absolutely free from any congressional limitations in fixing wages. In other words, in the joint resolution we do not fix the wages that shall be paid. We give the W. P. A. so much money for relief purposes. They may raise or lower the wages, providing they do not discriminate.

Mr. BROWN. What is all the controversy about the so-called prevailing-wage section, which, I think, is section 15 or 14 of the joint resolution? I supposed that we established a limit beyond which the W. P. A. Administrator could not go.

Mr. ADAMS. We did not.

Mr. BROWN. If there should be any considerable increase in the cost of living, has the committee supplied sufficient money to take care of that; or is it not desirable that an additional amount such as suggested by the Senator from Montana be added, so that that contingency will be cared for by way of appropriations?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the answer to the Senator's question is included in his statement of probable facts—that the increased cost of living which he thinks might come about would be due to increased employment. If we have increased employment, we shall have less men on the relief rolls.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. I believe the Senator from Colorado is assuming something that is not justified.

While we had considerable unemployment in 1937, we found that industry rapidly raised prices and brought on a great inflation for a period, notwithstanding the fact that unemployment still persisted, and people were finding it difficult to obtain the means of living in this country. We at that time had a situation in which we had high prices, excessive profits, and yet we had a recession coming on; and we shall experience the same thing again in the present situation. Industry will raise its prices under this defense program, and we shall have a period of inflation in this country. We shall continue to have unemployment, as we now have, in the midst of prosperity in a few industries.

We now have 9,000,000 unemployed in this country. They cannot possibly obtain employment under the national-defense program, because they constitute largely common labor, and will not be employed in connection with the defense program at all.

It seems to me the Senator is not justified in the statement he makes that the program submitted by the W. P. A. is sufficient to take care of the unemployment situation. We have never had such a program in the country. It is not, and the W. P. A. knows that it is not. Every person in the country who is familiar with the situation knows that the present program will not take care of the unemployment situation, and we shall have a very bad condition if it is not taken care of.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it would be a most amazing thing if great increase in labor, great increase in employment, and development of war industry which left less unemployed, should increase the number on relief. That, however, is the argument which the Senator from Montana makes—that the more men that are employed, the more men will have to be taken care of on relief.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. The facts are that the defense program will not bring about any great reemployment. According to the experts, it will employ only an additional 270,000 or 290,000 men in special industries. They are skilled workers. The program will not furnish employment for workers of the kind who are on the unemployment rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, that, of course, is a statement of the Senator's theory as to what is going to happen next month, or 6 months from now. I cannot say that the Senator is necessarily wrong, any more than he can say that it is a matter in which certainly he is right.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it not true that not more than 290,000 men can possibly be employed as a result of the national-defense program which is being inaugurated?

Mr. ADAMS. I should think not, most decidedly. Let me discuss that matter for a second.

How much money is Congress now appropriating for defense purposes? Five billion dollars—five billion dollars.

Mr. MURRAY. It goes chiefly into very expensive material, and not into common labor. It makes prosperity for the few but will have no material effect on unemployment.

Mr. ADAMS. It goes into steel, for instance; does it not? The ore for making the steel comes from the mines. It is necessary to get iron ore. To a large extent it is common labor that goes into the mines. Go up into the State of Wyoming, where the iron ore comes from that goes to the steel works in my city, and it will be found that the labor employed there is largely common labor. Part of the national-defense money will be spent on the railroads. In keeping up the railroads there is need for the employment of a large amount of now unemployed labor, common labor to a considerable extent. Part of the money goes into steel works. Three-fourths of the labor there employed is common labor. The Senator cannot think of any industry which employs exclusively skilled labor, with the exception of a very limited number of factories. The other industries are always the basis of employment of great armies of common labor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should not want the Senator to leave the impression that all of the $5,000,000,000 will be spent during the time this relief joint resolution will be in effect. My recollection of the figures is that in 8 months not more than one-fifth to one-sixth of it can possibly be expended.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course; and yet, at the same time, we are providing $5,000,000,000 which is going into employment just as rapidly as it is humanly possible to put it to work. It may not be expended just as the keel of a battleship is laid down, but it will provide for continued employment.

That is not all of the $5,000,000,000. A bill will come up following this measure in which the R. F. C. is to be given practically the equivalent of a billion dollars which will be expended, probably for defense purposes.

Mr. BROWN. That money is to be loaned.

Mr. ADAMS. That is true; but it does not make any difference. We are speaking of employment. It does not make any difference whether a manufacturer puts people to work with money that belongs to him or with money that he borrows. The same number of persons are employed in either event.

Mr. BROWN. But that is very likely a part of the same $5,000,000,000 to which the Senator has been referring.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; not at all. If we take the bills that we have passed, including the measure before us, there is $5,000,000,000 of Army and Navy appropriations, including the supplemental bill which is now on my desk, exclusive of the R. F. C.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will pardon me, the $1,000,000,000 that is provided in the bill which the Senator from New York will have taken up as soon as this measure is through is to be loaned to corporations which may engage in the business of producing munitions. That amount cannot be added to the $5,000,000,000, because the corporations will have to pay that money out of the receipts they get from this $5,000,000,000 munitions program. We cannot add one to the other.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator is in error, but I think it is an immaterial item so far as I am concerned. I am merely pointing out this fact: The Senator from Montana, in his argument, was disposed to base his contention for increase upon the theory that this money could be used for defense purposes. The Senator bases his argument upon the contention that we ought to increase the appropriation for defense purposes, and then says the W. P. A. employees are not suited for work on defense matters.

Mr. MURRAY. I suggested that the money could be used in the expansion of air fields and naval bases, military roads, and military bases, and work of that character which would employ common labor, not skilled labor.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator recognize that the money we are appropriating for those purposes will employ the same kind of persons?

Mr. MURRAY. No; it will not.

Mr. ADAMS. If we increase the amount carried in the defense measure, these persons will be employed on air bases or flying fields; but if we leave it to the Government, the Government will employ them on the same kind of projects. They are qualified to do this work if the money comes from the W. P. A., and they are not going to do it if it comes from a direct appropriation for the War Department.

Mr. MURRAY. In connection with the question of unemployment, does not the Senator recognize the fact that as a result of the dislocation of trade in the world we have lost a tremendous amount of foreign trade, and that we have brought on unemployment in certain industries that will offset to a substantial degree the new employment that will be brought about as a result of the defense program?

Mr. ADAMS. All I can say to the Senator is that the figures today show an increased employment, an increased production over what we had 2 or 3 months ago. There is an increase in the number of men at work today over the number that were at work a month ago and over the number that were at work 2 months ago. In other words, the figures that Colonel Harrington and the President had before them were based on a larger unemployment than the figures I have; but, in any event, the only reliable figures that we have come from the W. P. A. Administration. It is the only source we have from which to get the information. We are appropriating in the pending joint resolution all that they ask, clear down to the last dollar, and the Senator would increase the amount provided from enough to take care of 2,000,000 men to enough to take care of over 3,000,000 men.

That is, the Senator's figures would take care of an average of over 3,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY. And that would take care of only a small part of the total unemployed in the country.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator has made plain the difference between us. The Senator thinks that the Government should employ people, regardless of whether they are in need or not, while the pending measure is for the relief of people not merely because they are out of work, but because they are in need, and, as it stands, the joint resolution will do the job, if we can trust the President of the United States, and Colonel Harrington, who is in charge of the administration of the work. If the desire is to put the obligation upon the Government to give every one of the 9,000,000 people out of work a job, the Senator's amendment would be thoroughly inadequate.

Mr. MURRAY. I am not proposing anything of the kind. There are millions on the relief rolls who cannot get employment. The Senator knows that.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know that.

Mr. MURRAY. The W. P. A. has a record of them.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not the fact that there are millions on the rolls who cannot get work. There is always a waiting list, of course.

Mr. MURRAY. Let me read the statement of Colonel Harrington, in response to a question by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]:

> Now, Colonel, is your statement or opinion changed by our own policy of expanding in a rather large way our national-defense program? Is our national-defense program going to solve the problem of unemployment?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. Definitely not, because the defense program consists of expenditures largely for material which we badly need and that is going to be concentrated in industries which will not employ people to a degree that will be helpful to W. P. A.

Mr. ADAMS. That is very far from sustaining the assertion the Senator has made. The Senator quotes Colonel Harrington, and in the joint resolution we are giving just what the authority the Senator quotes says is what he should have. The Senator wishes to turn over to the W. P. A. a half billion dollars in an 8 months' period over and above what the Administrator says is needed. It seems to me that in these times some consideration should be given to putting money where there is need for it, and in saving it where it is not needed. The amendment simply goes out of bounds, disregards all those in authority, and all the information which came to the Committee on Appropriations.

Furthermore, in the relief measure there is constant recognition of the fact that the W. P. A. worker may be used for defense purposes. Colonel Harrington, in a recent interview, stated that perhaps half the labor under this measure might be used for defense purposes. We have made special provision. We have eliminated the requirement of sponsors' contributions in defense measures. We have provided in the joint resolution for a special fund of $25,000,000 which can be specifically used. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

So Mr. MURRAY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that, in view of the legislative situation, it will probably be necessary to hold a session tomorrow. The Finance Committee completed the hearing today on the tax bill, and will meet tomorrow for the purpose of attempting to vote on reporting the bill with the view of having it considered on the floor on Monday. There are at least two bills which it is certainly desirable that we dispose of before the tax bill is taken up, and in view of the probability that consideration of the pending measure will continue for some time longer this afternoon, I felt it my duty to announce to Senators that I shall ask the Senate to meet tomorrow to consider the bills referred to.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the joint resolution, and before offering some remarks on it I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. . There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year 1941, the sum of $100,000,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of effectuating the provisions of section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, as amended, such sum to be in addition to any funds appropriated by such section 32.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate more than a few minutes in explanation of the amendment. I am advised that all the farm organizations of the country have appealed to Senators to support the amendment.

I wish to call attention to a statement appearing in yesterday's Washington Post, made by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, as follows:

WALLACE CALLS FOR EMERGENCY FARM PROGRAM—URGES CONGRESS ACT THIS SESSION BECAUSE OF WAR SITUATION

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace called yesterday for a reexamination of the farm problem by Congress before adjournment because of the war situation.

"If the appropriate committees took another look at the farm situation now," said Wallace at a press conference, "they would probably find a need for action."

The Secretary refused to say whether he would ask Congress at this session to enact an emergency farm program. But some Agriculture Department officials said it was not unlikely that the President may ask Congress for emergency measures to help farmers meet the shock of spreading war abroad.

EXPLAINS MEANING OF "ACTION"

What Wallace meant by "action" was revealed in a formal statement he made to the press asking:

Expanded shipments of food to Europe to feed refugees. Wallace said "the opinion seems to be widespread in the United States that Europe in the coming months will see the most serious famine in the world's history."

Increased support for domestic programs to boost consumption of food products, such as the Triple-A program, food-stamp plan and removal of surpluses for direct distribution to the needy.

Wallace, without asking that Johnson Act bans on loans to defaulting European nations be removed, said, in response to a question, that if credits were made available to the British "they could take about $100,000,000 of our food products."

The farm task of the future, Wallace said, is to cope with surpluses of foods that will be backed up in the United States owing to the spread of war. Markets are "for all practical purposes eliminated," he said, in the Mediterraneon area, central Europe, Scandinavia, Holland, Belgium, and the Balkans.

PLANS FOR EMERGENCY

But while considering reduction or surpluses as the immediate problem, Wallace revealed that his Department had made preparations to begin "to the limit" farm production in case of a food emergency.

Machinery for unlimited farm production is at hand, Wallace said, through the county-by-county organizations of the A. A. A. and the Extension Service.

Mr. President, I wish I were able to impress upon Senators the serious situation which confronts the farmers of America as a result of the practically total elimination of export trade, involving forty-odd commodities which farmers have to sell.

The 10-year average of export trade from the farms of America has amounted, in round numbers, to $750,000,000. As a result of the war situation, the major part of that market has been eliminated. Therefore, the surpluses from the farms of America are now piling up and will continue to pile up. There is only one way in which we can bring relief to the farmers at this time, and that is by the passage of legislation to sustain prices by the absorption of surpluses through the Surplus Commodities Corporation, by increasing current domestic consumption, and by proper distribution of the surpluses.

Of course, I appreciate the fact that my good friend from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will tell us that yesterday we unanimously appropriated $50,000,000 for the Red Cross to buy up farm surpluses for the refugees in Europe. If we examine that appropriation, we find that it provides that the Red Cross is authorized to buy medicines, food products, and all other things necessary to bring relief to the refugees in Europe, and that out of the $50,000,000 all the expenses of the operation shall be borne. That means that the Red Cross may buy ambulances, medicine, clothing, blankets, or anything it desires to take care of the refugees.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wish to correct an error. The Red Cross does not do any of the buying. The buying is done by the President or by governmental agencies. The Red Cross is merely the distributing agency.

Mr. BILBO. Certainly. I understand that.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not what the Senator said. The Senator said the Red Cross would do the buying.

Mr. BILBO. I meant that the Red Cross would make the demand, and that these things would be bought and given to the Red Cross for distribution.

Mr. ADAMS. I assumed that the Senator wished to be corrected.

Mr. BILBO. I thought the Senator assumed that I knew what the law was.

Mr. ADAMS. I was not assuming anything.

Mr. BILBO. The President is to do the buying, but he is to buy what the Red Cross calls upon him to buy in order to take care of the situation in Europe. So, as a result, out of the $50,000,000 there will be some relief to the surplus situation in America, but very little.

In presenting this amendment I have the endorsement of all the farm organizations of America, because they realize the situation which confronts the farmer, which will become more acute before we have another session of Congress. If $100,000,000 is turned over to the Surplus Commodities Corporation it can carry on its program of relief to the farmers by purchasing, storing, and distributing between 40 and 50 farm commodities. Among those, of course, will be corn, cotton, wheat, and many others. This organization has been able to deal in about 40 or 50 commodities, and thereby relieve the farmers of the country.

For the information of the Senate, I should like to refer briefly to the situation which confronts the farmers of the country at the present time. I should like to put certain information in the RECORD so that the farmers of the country may know what Senators are voting on.

I have before me a table showing the production and stocks of grains and cotton. It shows the 5-year average from 1935 to 1939, the figures for the year 1939, and an estimate for the year 1940.

With respect to wheat, the 5-year average production from 1935 to 1939 was 763,000,000 bushels, with 172,000,000 bushels in stocks. For 1939 the production figure was 755,000,000 bushels, with 254,000,000 bushels in stocks. The estimated production for 1940 is 728,000,000 bushels, with 288,000,000 bushels in stocks.

With respect to corn, the 5-year average production is 2,329,000,000 bushels, with 249,000,000 bushels in stocks. The production figure for 1939 is 2,619,000,000 bushels, with 573,000,000 bushels in stocks. The estimated production for 1940 is 2,400,000,000 bushels, with 675,000,000 bushels in stocks.

With respect to oats, the 5-year average production figure is 1,030,000,000 bushels, with 168,000,000 bushels in stocks. For 1939 the production figure is 937,000,000 bushels, with 191,000,000 bushels in stocks. The estimated production figure for 1940 is 1,021,000,000 bushels, with 140,000,000 bushels in stocks.

The table also shows the same information for rice, soy beans, and cotton. Let us take cotton for illustration. The 5-year average production is 13,149,000 bales, with 8,336,000 bales in stocks. The production figure for 1939 is 11,817,000 bales, with 13,032,000 bales in stocks. The estimated production for 1940 is 11,800,000 bales, with 11,000,000 bales in stocks.

Those figures show the condition as to the major crops of the country. I have figures showing the storage holdings of fruits and vegetables, dairy and poultry products, meats and lard, condensed milk, and evaporated milk. Under the heading of fruits and vegetables the storage holding on May 1, for the 5-year average from 1935 to 1939, was 4,586,000 bushels. On May 1, 1939, the figure was 4,707,000 bushels; on May 1, 1940, 3,599,000 bushels.

For frozen fruits the amount in storage on May 1, for the 5-year average, was 61,507,000 pounds; on May 1, 1939, 76,180,000 pounds; and on May 1, 1940, 75,620,000 pounds.

For frozen vegetables the data are not available for the 5-year average. On May 1, 1939, there were in storage 47,427,000 pounds; and on May 1, 1940, 49,089,000 pounds.

With the increase in production throughout the country, great quantities of dairy and poultry products, meats and lard, condensed milk, and evaporated milk are in storage today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tables to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, let us see how we could relieve the farmers and absorb the surpluses by the expenditure of $100,000,000. Being more familiar with cotton than with anything else, I refer first to cotton.

Through the activities of the Surplus Commodities Corporation we have inaugurated what is known as the mattress plan. One bale of cotton will make ten mattresses.

Estimates show that in the United States there are two and a half million families whose income is less than $500 a year. There are 6,000,000 families in the United States whose income is between $500 and $1,000. In other words, there are eight and one-half million families in the United States whose income is less than $1,000.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has informed himself with respect to these facts; and I should like, as a matter of information, to know where these families principally reside. I do not mean in what particular section, but are they the families of men engaged in agriculture or industry?

Mr. BILBO. The information I am giving covers the entire United States. A great many of the families are found in rural sections of the country, as well as in some of the industrial sections. They are scattered all over the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator know whether or not the majority of them are engaged in agriculture?

Mr. BILBO. I do not know about the majority. I presume that is true. If we take the East Side of New York and the South Side of Chicago—the black belt—we find a great many of such families. There are eight and a half million of them.

The Surplus Commodities Corporation proposes to take the raw cotton. Out of each bale 10 mattresses can be produced. The proposal is to distribute the mattresses to the eight and a half million poor families with incomes of less than $1,000. The plan would not interfere with the manufacture of mattresses, because I care not how many mattresses industrial plants may manufacture, these families are not able to buy them. Therefore, there is no competition, and we are bringing relief to eight and a half million needy families throughout the United States.

I have statistics showing what has been recently done. As I understand, more than 100,000 bales of cotton have already been manufactured into mattresses. The process of manufacturing the mattresses carried out through cooperation by the extension forces of the Department of Agriculture and various other agencies in the States. The Surplus Commodities Corporation furnishes the raw cotton and ticking, the work is done in the field by the various agencies, and the mattresses are distributed to those who are eligible to receive them.

For the information of the Senate, I will say that a survey is made by the agencies of the Government to determine those eligible to receive free mattresses. I have often thought that one of the great tragedies of the cotton industry is that in the South, where we grow the cotton, there are millions of tenant laborers on the cotton farms who plant, hoe, and pick the cotton, and yet they spend their nights on mattresses of shucks or something worse. We have an opportunity through the Surplus Commodities Corporation to correct that situation.

The foodstuff plan is another way in which part of the $100,000,000 will be spent. More than a thousand cities in the United States are begging for this service of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. With the money we have already appropriated, relief funds are distributed through the stamp plan. Mr. Perkins, of the Surplus Commodities Corporation, estimates that about 150 cities scattered over the United States can be reached.

With this extra $100,000,000 we would be able to reach many more cities, and give greater service to the poor people of this country who will buy with their relief money, which is already provided for in the bill, these articles of food and clothing. I merely mention these items to show how this money will be spent.

Three million children in the United States are receiving lunches in school through supplies furnished to W. P. A. agencies by the Surplus Commodities Corporation, and there are 9,000,000 children who, by an investigation, are entitled to such free lunches. Another way in which this $100,000,000 could be used by the Surplus Commodities Corporation would be in furnishing surplus products bought up by it to the proper agencies, thus enabling 9,000,000 children to receive free lunches at school in order that they may have something to eat, and enjoy a proper diet.

Do you know, Mr. President, that only 4,000,000 unfortunates in this country are being benefited by the food-stamp plan? There are 20,000,000 who are entitled to this relief, and by the adoption of this amendment we will reach a greater number of those on relief.

Mr. President, since all the farmers of this country, together with the Secretary of Agriculture—I am not authorized to quote the President, but I am sure he would look with favor upon this kind of legislation, this kind of relief—and since all the farm organizations of the country are begging the Congress to give this relief because of the seriousness and tragic conditions which face the farmers I cannot understand how anyone can oppose it.

Yes, we voted $50,000,000 for refugees, for foreigners who live across the sea. Here we have a chance to vote money for the relief of people in this country who are in about as bad condition as are those to whom we are extending relief on the other side of the sea, or who are at least in a serious condition. How can we face our constituents and say "I voted for, and there was adopted unanimously, an appropriation of $50,000,000 to take care of the unfortunates of Europe, a responsibility which cannot be charged to us, and yet we failed to take care of 9,000,000 ill-fed children in America, many of whom throughout the United States are sleeping without mattresses, and of the farmers who will be destitute and in bankruptcy because of the loss of their market as the result of this damnable war in Europe." I insist that of all the appropriations we are making we can accomplish more good for the unfortunates of this country by such an appropriation as I propose, small as it is in comparison to the appropriation carried by the bill we are about to pass.

We have been voting billions of dollars—$5,000,000,000—for defense. This is the beginning of defense. If we want a strong, virile, red-blooded race of men to fight our wars, then we must give them the proper food and the proper attention in the homes throughout this land. That is the meaning of this amendment to the pending relief measure. It is to provide the ways and means by which the unfortunates, the neglected, the emaciated of this country may be given some of the surpluses which our farming lands can produce. In that way we will help not only the farmer but will help the unfortunate poor, and we will help the laboring man who works yonder in the industries of the country, because the industries must have somebody with purchasing power, and this will help give purchasing power to the farmers of the country.

I ask the Senate to give favorable consideration to the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a word of explanation. The Senator from Mississippi was good enough to present this matter to the Appropriations Committee, and the committee gave his suggestion consideration. It did not feel, however, that this appropriation should be added to this particular measure.

The amendment the Senator proposes is an addition to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Surplus Commodities Corporation in the Agricultural Appropriation Act, which has recently been passed by the Congress, has been given $185,000,000, which is a very substantial sum, for the very purposes the Senator has in mind. If he was dissatisfied with that appropriation, his amendment should have been addressed to that bill and not to the relief measure which comes up at this time.

The pending joint resolution provides an appropriation to the Agricultural Department for agricultural relief of $200,000,000. That appropriation is in this bill.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BILBO. At the time of the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill, it will be remembered, I sponsored an additional appropriation of $85,000,000, but at that time the farmers of America were not faced with the conditions which they face today as the result of the spread of the war in Europe, which has eliminated their export market. Furthermore, conditions are growing worse. If I had known then what I know now, I would have asked for the additional $100,000,000, and perhaps more, for I doubt whether $100,000,000 would be sufficient to take care of the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. Not a nickel of the funds appropriated in the Agricultural Appropriation Act has been spent. That money becomes available only on the 1st of July.

Mr. BILBO. I know that.

Mr. ADAMS. We may need more or we may not need more, but the Congress will have ample time to make additional provision should it develop to be necessary.

Mr. BILBO. In response to the Senator's statement, let me make this observation: We are working overtime trying to adjourn a week from tomorrow. No one knows——

Mr. ADAMS. I may state to the Senator that I do not think he need worry about adjournment.

Mr. BILBO. No one knows whether or not we will have another session between now and January, and it will be too late to come to the rescue of the farmer in January; he will then be in worse condition than are the refugees in Europe.

Mr. ADAMS. The $185,000,000 in the Agricultural Appropriation Act will be available on the 1st of July. There is $200,000,000 for farm relief in this bill. The Senator knows that we have provided a large sum for various agricultural purposes, including parity payments and other items.

Mr. BILBO. How much is there for agriculture in this bill?

Mr. ADAMS. There is $200,000,000 in this bill for agriculture.

Mr. BILBO. For what purpose?

Mr. ADAMS. For grants and loans to needy farmers.

Mr. BILBO. That is the point. I am glad the Senator mentioned that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I am always glad to yield.

Mr. BILBO. Loans have been provided for, that is true; but when we grant loans we build up the surplus and a loss will ensue. My amendment provides for the equitable, fair, just, and righteous distribution of a hundred million dollars' worth of surplus farm products which will be taken even if the farmers are given loans.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the Senator, in the first part of his remarks, was quoting the Agricultural Department and Secretary Wallace as his authority. What this measure does is in accordance with his request. We accepted, as I thought the Senator did, the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, who appeared before the committee in behalf of this $200,000,000 appropriation. We raised the amount the House provided from $115,000,000 to $200,000,000. The Appropriations Committee has not dealt harshly with the farmers.

Mr. BILBO. For the purpose the Senator refers to he is right, but this is a different purpose; it is along a different line, and I think I am justified in stating that the Secretary will favor it.

Mr. ADAMS. We even went $16,000,000 beyond the request of the Secretary of Agriculture.

As the Senator pointed out, the $50,000,000 appropriated for the relief of refugees must be spent in America, largely for the very products the Senator has in mind. I am sure he did not mean to object to the fact that a little of it would be spent for medicine. I am sure the Senator did not want that inference to be drawn from his remarks, because he commented on that fact.

Mr. BILBO. I took pleasure in voting for the $50,000,000; I am in favor of this kind of relief, and want to sustain the reputation of the United States as being the great humanitarian brother of the entire world.

Mr. ADAMS. I believe it would be a mistake for the Senate to add this amount to this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I have no desire to prevent the chairman of the committee from closing this debate, but I should like briefly to call the attention of the Senate to one or two matters which, to my mind, are outstanding reasons why this amendment should be adopted.

It is true we have provided $185,000,000 for the next year for loans or for administration under section 32 of the act of 1935. This amendment proposes $100,000,000 additional to be used by the Secretary for a certain distinct purpose, and that purpose is the purchase of agricultural commodities.

We must admit, if we stop for a moment to think, that such foreign markets for agricultural products as we may have had in the past have gone. It does little good to loan, as we have provided in the joint resolution, and to which the chairman of the subcommittee has called attention, the amount of $125,000,000 for rehabilitation purposes.

What is the purpose of a rehabilitation loan? It is to enable the farmer to make a crop. It is to enable the farmer to sustain himself. If he has not any market for his products, then we shall not only fail to get back the $125,000,000 which we loan, but we shall not be doing anything for the aid of the farmer.

As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] has said, we shall harvest these crops in the fall of this year. What are we going to do with them? That is a question which no one can answer except to say, "to supply the market"; that is all.

We are faced with this situation: Do we want to furnish that market, or do we want to go ahead and make these loans and let surpluses pile up more than we can consume? The surpluses will not be more than we can consume if properly distributed; but do we want to let those excess products pass into the surpluses, or do we want to put them out among the needy of this country? That is the question.

I think the Senate ought to take action now and adopt the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I realize that it is very difficult to get Members of the Senate to focus their attention upon questions relating to our domestic problems. Quite naturally, in the face of events occurring in Europe, the thoughts and attention of Senators, as well as other persons in this country, are focused upon that tragic development. But one thing does surprise me, and that is that in the light of the recent tragic lesson in Europe there should not be a full appreciation of the fact that national defense does not consist alone of battleships, airplanes, tanks, and other munitions and implements of war. That they are essential, that they are of vital importance, I should be the first to concede; but I do not see how any man or woman who has watched the developments in Europe since September 3, 1939, can fail to realize that a sound, dynamic, domestic economy of a nation is of equal importance with its preparations for and its ability to provide national defense.

In Norway, in Holland, in Denmark, and now in France, we have seen not only the tragic effects of a failure to provide adequate instrumentalities of national defense but likewise the catastrophic consequences resulting from failure to cope with the pressing problems which modern industrialism presents to society in every important nation in the world.

I pray to God, Mr. President, that the representatives of democracy in America will not repeat the tragic mistakes, the fatal mistakes, which have characterized democratic leadership in other nations in the period since the last World War.

Mr. President, we should take advantage of the opportunity presented to us. We should utilize the time which is given to this country, because of its geographic situation and its potential power, not only to adequately prepare our technical instrumentalities of national defense but likewise to bring to bear upon the problems confronting society in the United States the genius, the intelligence, and the courageous leadership which this Nation affords.

We should have learned by now that the type of unity produced at the last moment, in the face of threatened national peril, is a false type of unity. It crumbles at the impact of a dynamic, expanding, and functioning economy, no matter how much we may abhor the objectives of such a dynamic and functioning economy.

Since 1929 the problem of unemployment, the failure of the farmer to obtain his fair share of the national income, the resultant displacement of many people from their possession of the land, the threatened destruction of farming as a way of life, the insecurity of the aged, and the denial of opportunities to youth have been eating away at the foundations upon which a democratic society must ultimately rest.

Mr. President, I would not be misunderstood. I am not for one moment suggesting that there should be any slackening in our preparations for national defense, in the technical sense of the phrase. I have given my enthusiastic support to the staggering appropriations which have been provided at this session of Congress. I measure my words when I say that I am willing to support whatever may be needed and required to defend and to protect this hemisphere, from the Arctic Circle to Cape Horn, against any and all comers. But I would be less than frank with my colleagues did I not say that I am concerned, as I have never been concerned since I came to this body, with the evident concentration of democratic leadership in the United States upon these instrumentalities, implements, and techniques of national defense to the point of submerging our concentration and thought and action upon the domestic front, which is as important as our military and naval front.

No man in this Chamber has greater confidence in the potential capacity of the American people, in our vast resources, in our productive capacity both on the farm and in the factory. There is no task upon which the genius of the American people is brought to bear which cannot be solved. But I wish to utter a word of warning, at this critical juncture in the affairs of this Nation, that we not repeat the tragic mistakes which have been made by other democracies.

Mr. President, the pending amendment is only a small approach to one of the most important problems confronting the American people. No man doubts our capacity to produce. Our system has shown this fatal tendency to contract, with all the problems which that produces, because of our failure to distribute the products which we have the capacity to produce on the farm and in the factory.

This program calls for an appropriation of $100,000,000. We will have appropriated in excess of $5,000,000,000 for national defense if the Congress adjourns a week from Saturday. No man knows how much more will be appropriated in the next year. Is it too much to ask $100,000,000 in order that we may expand this device—the stamp plan—which has been worked out under the Surplus Commodities Corporation's leadership, and which all strata of society and all economic points of view approve and are enthusiastic to see carried forward?

Mr. President, the impact of the consequences of the catastrophic struggle now going on in Europe upon the American farmer has only begun to be appreciated in this country. The impact of the loss of our export markets for manufactured products has not yet fully revealed itself in the form of unemployment and increased misery in the United States. Here is a program which attacks those two problems simultaneously.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], in charge of the pending joint resolution, has indicated that this is not the time or the place for the consideration of this amendment. When the agricultural appropriation bill was before us, and when I attempted to incorporate into it an amendment for this same purpose, I was confronted with a point of order, and a statement that it did not belong in the agricultural appropriation bill. Legalistic, parliamentary hair-splitting at this critical juncture, in my opinion, is not contributing to that dynamic functioning of democratic processes essential to the preservation of this Republic.

Mr. President, there are 3,000,000 children in the United States getting lunches as the result of this program. There are 6,000,000 more school children in the United States on the same level of destitution, and who have been certified as eligible, but who are unable to receive this form of assistance because the funds are inadequate.

There are 4,000,000 persons in the United States receiving the benefit of adding 2½ cents a meal a person as the result of this program, but there are 16,000,000 additional persons who have been ground down through the cruel processes of pauperization, who have been certified to be equally deserving of 2½ cents a meal more each day, who are unable to get the benefits of this program because the appropriations are inadequate.

Mr. President, if this proposal were coming here initially, if it had not been tried, if it had not been proven to be a success, if it did not have the enthusiastic backing of all elements in the communities in which it is operating, there might be some validity to the suggestion that the amendment was not timely, but this program, under the leadership of Milo Perkins, has been developed carefully, it has been developed gradually, and it has been developed upon a sound basis. It utilizes the existing means of distribution, it is efficient, it produces results. There are 800 cities in the United States asking to come into the program which are denied because there are insufficient funds.

I do not wish to make any invidious comparisons. I supported with enthusiasm the $50,000,000 appropriation to provide assistance to the innocent victims of the juggernaut of war on the continent of Europe. I hope Senators with equal enthusiasm and with a feeling that they are in the last analysis contributing to national defense, will support an amendment to provide $100,000,000 to help the farmers and to help those who are destitute in America.

In conclusion, let me say that I realize full well that it is difficult to get Senators to consider our fundamental and important domestic problems. I hope that in this mad race to rearm America with the instrumentalities of national defense we shall not overlook the vital importance of mobilizing the intelligence of America for action, not talk, on those vital problems of domestic concern which in this critical hour are of equal importance with national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the request seconded? Apparently there is not a——

Mr. GUFFEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Pittman
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a second to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin for the yeas and nays?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my understanding that the present occupant of the Chair previously said the yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not correct. The Chair was about to say there was not a sufficient number, but before completing the statement the absence of a quorum was suggested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is an important matter. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is it in order at this time to offer an amendment to the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Would such an amendment be acted upon first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would.

Mr. DANAHER. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending amendment. My amendment is, in line 4, to strike out the word "effectuating" and insert in lieu thereof the words "extending the food-stamp plan of distributing surplus commodities pursuant to", so that the pending amendment would then read:

SEC. —. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year 1941, the sum of $100,000,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of extending the food-stamp plan of distributing surplus commodities pursuant to the provisions of section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, as amended, such sum to be in addition to any funds appropriated by such section 32.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Would the amendment then limit the expenditure of the money to foods?

Mr. DANAHER. It would limit the expenditure of the money to the food-stamp plan, as it has been designated.

Mr. HAYDEN. The food-stamp plan relates only to foods. How about clothing?

Mr. DANAHER. I am perfectly willing that the word "food" be stricken out, and that the plan shall include clothing. What I am opposed to is continuing an export subsidy under present conditions. I firmly believe that we can best preserve the best attributes of the stamp plan of distributing surplus commodities in the fashion which has been so eloquently argued by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I am in full accord with his objective in that particular. When the agricultural appropriation bill was before us, I attempted to extend the food-stamp plan in that fashion.

The Senator from Arizona makes a good point in the suggestion that the word "food" would create a limitation. I am perfectly willing, therefore, that my amendment be modified by eliminating the word "food" and that the amendment be limited to the extension of the distribution of surplus commodities under the stamp plan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What stamp plan is in force other than the food-stamp plan?

Mr. DANAHER. It has been extended to include cotton clothing in particular, and it is going forward with splendid results. I am very much in favor of it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, let me express the hope that the Senator will not insist upon his amendment. My amendment was submitted to the Surplus Commodities Corporation, and it has the full approval of that agency. As I understand, it permits the Surplus Commodities Corporation to do all the things it is now doing to handle surplus commodities. It may handle about 50 farm commodities, including cotton. I think the matter should be left to the discretion of the agency which is doing such a wonderful job for the Government in the interest of the people who are in need of these surpluses, and bringing relief to the American farmers.

I will say to the Senator that the purpose of the $100,000,000 is to carry on the food-stamp plan. That is why we want the extra $100,000,000. I do not think any of it should be used for an export subsidy. We already have money for that purpose. This amendment is designed only to enlarge the program of relief.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to join in urging the Senator from Connecticut, whose support of this program I wish to acknowledge, not to insist upon his amendment to the amendment, because many communities are not receiving the advantage of the stamp plan, and, for purposes of relief, are largely, if not entirely, dependent upon the disposition of surplus commodities in bulk form, so to speak. I know the Senator from Connecticut never desires to be unfair; but, in my opinion, it would be very unfair to the communities which have not yet obtained, and may not obtain, the benefits of the stamp plan to deny them the benefits of distribution of surplus commodities to needy persons on relief.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me point out to the Senator from Wisconsin that had the amendment been left the way it was originally offered by the Senator from Mississippi there would be no question on this subject. However, he has stricken out the words "of clause (2)", in line 5, and the net result now is that the $100,000,000 would be used for all the purposes stated in section 32 as the law now stands.

Only within the past few weeks we read about the Secretary of Agriculture spending 30 cents a bushel to export 300,000 bushels of wheat to Japan, furthering the efforts of Japan in her aggression against China. That is a condition, Mr. President, which it seems to me we should not support. It is a situation which we should not sustain.

This whole subject was thoroughly gone into when the agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration. I want to see the farmers distribute the surpluses. I am very much in favor of it. I want to see surplus commodities, whether they be cotton, clothing, or food, distributed and distress alleviated in that way, assisting the beneficiaries of the whole program. If we were to restore the language "of clause (2)", then beyond any doubt the operations of the proposed $100,000,000 program would be limited to the objectives stated by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Mississippi; but when we take out that language, we can see the handwriting on the wall. It amounts once again to a reintroduction in enhanced form of the export-subsidy program of the Secretary of Agriculture. I submit that with world conditions as they are today this is no time for an extension in that field. We can accomplish all the desirable results if we amend the pending amendment in the particular suggested.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not want to leave the impression that I am in any way favorable to the use of this money for paying an export subsidy, because I was in the thick of the fight when the question was before the Congress, and I even took to the radio in opposition to using the money to subsidize foreign buyers of cotton and other products upon the theory that if we are to grant a bounty to anyone we should grant it first to the American people and let them be the beneficiaries.

I can assure the Senator that not one cent of the $100,000,000 will be used to pay a subsidy, because we already have $185,000,000, two or three times more than anyone ever dreamed would be used to subsidize the disposition of surpluses. This money is to be used in the expansion of the food-stamp plan, the mattress plan, the lunchroom plan, and all such plans, to help the needy poor people of America, and, at the same time, help the farmer by getting rid of surpluses.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DANAHER. When the Senator first offered his amendment, it contained language which would cover all the objectives and purposes which he has just stated. However, for some reason or other he has modified his amendment by striking from line 5 the words "of clause (2)." If the Senator will restore to his amendment the language which he himself has stricken from his amendment, I shall be more than happy to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Surplus Commodities Corporation I made the change in the amendment as originally offered. However, if the Senator insists, I will restore that language and let the matter go to conference, because I am sure it will not interfere with what we are trying to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is clause (2) of section 32? I have not the section before me. I do not approve of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Connecticut trading the thing out. I know what the Senator from Connecticut wants. I know what he tried to do when the matter was under consideration before.

Mr. BILBO. The matter under discussion is the elimination in line 5 of the words "of clause (2)." I left out those words at the suggestion of the Surplus Commodities Corporation. As I understand, the modification would not interfere with the purposes we have in mind accomplishing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator read clause (2)?

Mr. BILBO. Has the Senator the clause before him?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I have not. I am trying to see the subject matter and the effect of taking it out.

Mr. BILBO. I am willing to let the matter go to conference. It must go to conference anyway. It can then be thrashed out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me I shall be glad to read clause (2) of section 32.

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Clause (2) of section 32 reads as follows:

(2) Encourage the domestic consumption of such commodities or products by diverting them, by the payment of benefits or indemnities or by other means, from the normal channels of trade and commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to have the Senator's idea about the effect of eliminating clause (2).

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a reference to the whole of section 32 will make it perfectly apparent. I do not happen to have the advantage at the moment of having it before me; but, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I shall be glad to read it to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand, the Senator wants the program limited to the provisions of clause (2), which was originally in the amendment and which was stricken out.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. When the agricultural bill was before us we appropriated $185,000,000, as I remember, for this very proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. DANAHER. Perhaps I am.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amount was $85,000,000.

Mr. DANAHER. It was $85,000,000. I thank the Senator. This sum, if added, would make the amount $185,000,000. That is how I inadvertently made the error, and I am sorry.

Section 32 reads:

SEC. 32. There is hereby appropriated for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, an amount equal to 30 percent of the gross receipts from duties collected under the customs laws during the period January 1 to December 31, both inclusive, preceding the beginning of each such fiscal year. Such sums shall be maintained in a separate fund and shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture only to (1) encourage the exportation of agricultural commodities and products thereof by the payment of benefits in connection with the exportation thereof or of indemnities for losses incurred in connection with such exportation or by payments to producers in connection with the production of that part of any agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption.

So, if we do not limit the amendment, Mr. President, clause 1 is restored.

(2) Encourage the domestic consumption of such commodities or products by diverting them, by the payment of benefits or indemnities or by other means, from the normal channels of trade and commerce.

Consequently, Mr. President, if we restore clause 2 the way the Senator from Mississippi offered the amendment originally, we would at least limit the $100,000,000 to encouraging domestic consumption of the particular surplus commodities.

The section reads further:

And (3) finance adjustments in the quantity planted or produced for market of agricultural commodities.

It is not necessary to read the remainder of the section, but if we strike out the words "clause 2" in the pending amendment of the Senator from Mississippi we have really undertaken to add the sum of $100,000,000 for unbridled exploitation, so to speak, under section 32 of the agricultural act; and, consequently, Mr. President, if we really want to afford relief, if we want to relieve the beneficiaries as well as the producers, if we wish to aid the farmer with his surplus commodities and anybody else who is involved—whether it be in the production of cotton or foodstuffs is immaterial—all we have to do is to restore the words "clause 2" in the Senator's amendment and we will accomplish that desirable result; and, with that result achieved and that language restored, I personally would be more than willing to vote for the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator intend to try to eliminate export subsidies? Is that what the Senator is trying to do?

Mr. DANAHER. No, indeed. Let me say to the Senator from Minnesota that insofar as section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act already provides for that, and insofar as we have already appropriated for it, there is no involvement here in any way; but this is a relief measure and the Senator from Mississippi is now asking that we appropriate an additional $100,000,000 without any restriction or limitation as to its use. Consequently, far from its becoming a relief bill, it becomes an appropriation of $100,000,000 to execute all the policies of the Department of Agriculture under section 32.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Including the subsidies.

Mr. DANAHER. Including export subsidies, and including any other powers granted by section 32.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The question which arises in my mind is if by so doing we are not subsidizing nations at war to prolong the war?

Mr. DANAHER. That would be one effect.

Mr. McNARY. With the kindness and courtesy of the able Senator from Connecticut I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he has changed the outline of his amendment as originally introduced with reference to section 32? I have been very much interested in that section for a number of years, and, as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations representing the agricultural bill, I have taken a very lively interest in increasing the 30 percent of import duties, a sum which is now $185,000,000, and which was $203,000,000 last year.

I am willing to go along and increase that fund as provided in section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which covers the exportation of products and the distribution domestically of products under the stamp plan, as suggested by the able Senator from Connecticut. I would not want to change that plan and vote for an amendment to increase the amount $100,000,000 merely for the exportation of surplus products. I think it ought to apply to all products and all purposes set out in section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, leaving it to the good judgment of the administrator of that act either to send abroad such surpluses as may be distributed there or to enlarge the operations of the stamp plan, as it may occur to him in his good judgment.

I hope the Senator will not curtail or modify his plan now, but let it go forward, put it into the bill, and leave it to the judgment of the administration either to buy surpluses and expand the stamp plan, which is working so beautifully, or, if need be, use some of it for the exportation of products.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama let me respond to the observations of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but that is what I myself wanted to do. Let the Senator proceed, however.

Mr. BILBO. I want to say that when the amendment was originally drawn it was drawn for the purpose of extending the food-stamp plan alone; then, upon further conferences with the Department, we thought it best to take that out and let the $100,000,000 be used at the discretion of the agency for all purposes under section 32 as set out. That is the amendment I am offering, and I hope the Senator from Connecticut will agree to withdraw his objection. I merely want to do what the Senator wants to do.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is my opinion, from the language employed by the able Senator in his modification, that it is limited to the exportation of surplus farm products. I do not think it should be so limited. I think if, in the good judgment of the Department, it should be used, or a major portion of it or a substantial amount or portion of it should be used, to expand the work now being done under the stamp plan that should be left to him. I want to ask the Senator, if I may, is it his interpretation that the modified amendment, as suggested by him, in any way restricts the Department in exercising its functions under the stamp plan?

Mr. BILBO. It does not.

Mr. McNARY. The Department would not, in the Senator's opinion, devote this sum of money to the exportation of agricultural products?

Mr. BILBO. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am greatly pleased to hear the statement of the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I am in full accord with the views expressed by him. He is not, however, in accord, as he apparently thought, with the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi as originally presented by him fixes a very definite limitation upon the use of the funds; it fixes that limitation in conflict with the statement of views of the Senator from Oregon and in conflict with my views. I think, in recognition of the fact that the limitation was not advisable, the Senator from Mississippi eliminated it from his amendment. Then the Senator from Connecticut, who has no interest, I think, in this program except the stamp part of it, insisted upon the Senator from Mississippi withdrawing the modification of his amendment and restoring the limitation which would confine the use of the money being appropriated to the domestic-use plan.

I think, Mr. President, that section 32 has been one of the most useful features of the agricultural program, and that it has served those who are intended to be served by the legislation. In the beginning the authors of section 32 and its supporters in the Committee on Agriculture, including the Senator from Oregon, who is always interested in the farmer, and its other advocates had primarily in mind aid to the farmers whose incomes were being adversely affected as the result of excessive surpluses of farm commodities which drove down the price of the entire crop. So this amendment was intended, in the beginning, to provide a fund with which the surpluses would be lifted from the market and, in that way, establish a price for the crop based upon the law of supply and demand. As the matter progressed and surpluses were bought, the question of the distribution of those surpluses developed. Large quantities of butter, particularly, and other perishable commodities, vegetables and fruits, have been bought under section 32, put in cold storage, and there they rested until a time came when they could be marketed without undue loss to the fund.

Then, as a result of the development of the need of these commodities in promoting the relief plan, this program was gradually shifted from one of primary benefits to the farmer to one involving primary benefits to those upon the relief rolls by reason of giving or granting the surplus commodities which first had been stored with the intention of disposing of them at a time when their disposition would not further depress the price of the commodities.

In that way the present system, which has developed into the food-stamp plan, was worked out. I am a strong advocate of that plan, because when we brought into the picture a distribution of the surplus commodities that were bought under the original plan to aid the farmer, we at the same time developed a plan to aid those on relief, the poor and the needy who were not able to buy the foodstuffs which had been bought as surplus commodities.

Mr. President, I submit, therefore, that it is not right to change this whole program now, and attempt to give it direction down one channel, that channel being the food-stamp plan. I favor that plan, as I said. I think it is a most worthy and helpful part of this program; but I submit that it is not right, it is not fair, and it is an abandonment of the original section 2 and of its purposes that have worked so well under a latitude of administration which has been given to, and exercised by, those in charge of the program.

I submit, therefore, that if the amendment is to be adopted it should be adopted as it now stands, without the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure the Senator from Alabama has already recognized that not only would the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut tie the hands of the administrator of the fund, but would constitute a rank discrimination between those who are on the relief rolls.

The last figures I had showed that there were in the United States approximately 150 cities in which the food-stamp plan was in effect. There are about 3,000 counties in the United States in which surplus foods are distributed to those who are on the rolls to receive direct relief. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut were adopted by the Senate, it would make a preferred class of those who are on relief in approximately 150 cities, which are able to finance the stamp plan of distribution, and would say to those in the other 3,000 counties of the United States that because, forsooth, those counties or towns are unable to make the initial deposit required of the communities which avail themselves of the stamp plan, the people on the relief rolls of those counties, who are perhaps the recipients of less relief than those in the larger cities, shall be absolutely denied any of the surplus commodities which might be distributed after having been purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

In other words, the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut is a proposal to segregate the entire $100,000,000 for the benefit of those on relief in 150 cities in the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statement of the Senator from Georgia is absolutely sound, and, in my judgment, unanswerable.

I say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] that when I took the floor he indicated that he would yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut. If so, I am here to protest against the adoption of the amendment at all with that provision in it. If he is ready to have a vote on it without yielding to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, I am ready to yield the floor.

Mr. BILBO. I will state to the Senator that I am standing pat. The only question which can be voted upon now is the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, because he offered it after the roll call was ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist on his amendment. If he is interested in this program, he certainly is endangering it by a limitation of that sort. He is acting in opposition to the judgment and statement of the leader on his side of the Chamber; and I hope he will not insist on complicating the matter in that way.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I withdraw the pending amendment, and offer in lieu thereof an amendment which will restore to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi the words originally in his printed amendment when he asked that it lie on the table. Those words are, in line 5, "of clause (2)."

As I have stated, I withdraw the amendment I previously sent to the desk, and send to the desk in lieu thereof this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr, President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that the Senator from Connecticut had proposed to restore the original language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BILBO. I did not so understand the Senator. We started to vote on the original language of my amendment as read by the clerk when I offered it, and before that was done I struck out these three words. That puts it all under section 32.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, may I make a statement to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi now is exactly in line with the statement made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I wanted to know. It does not modify the substance of section 32 of the A. A. A. Act?

Mr. BILBO. There is no limitation; it is all under section 32.

Mr. McNARY. What was the reason the Senator had for inserting the language which he now removes?

Mr. BILBO. I am not inserting anything.

Mr. McNARY. No; why did the Senator remove that language?

Mr. BILBO. I withdrew it at the request of the agents of the Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. McNARY. What was the purpose of doing that?

Mr. BILBO. There was no especial purpose, except to give them absolutely free latitude to handle the matter under section 32.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the Senator's opinion that with this language restored, section 32 could not be employed in its present form?

Mr. BILBO. Except subsection (2). It would limit it to subsection (2); and that is what I wanted to get away from, and put it all under the general section 32.

Mr. McNARY. The language as originally proposed would confine all the activities to section (2)?

Mr. BILBO. Yes, sir.

Mr. McNARY. But now the language the Senator strikes out permits both sections—section 1 and section 2—to be used, and permits all this money to be expended in the discretion of the Administrator?

Mr. BILBO. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in view of the very obvious sentiment of the Senate, I ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] if he will not accept the amendment as it is now drawn, so that without further debate we may now vote on it and have a chance to get through with the joint resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. I have not any authority to accept it. It is rather obvious that the sentiment in the Senate is for the amendment; and, of course, as a member of the committee, I shall follow the directions of the Senate. It is not necessary to have a roll call on the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator has no objection?

Mr. ADAMS. No; but I have my views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yea-and-nay vote be vacated, because it was agreed the amendment should be accepted and go in the joint resolution.

Mr. TAFT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the roll call will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who, I am informed, if present, would vote "yea," and I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is absent because of illness in his family.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who are necessarily absent, would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is detained on official business of the Senate.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is necessarily absent on official duties.

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 16, as follows:

EXPEDITION IN STRENGTHENING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted a report, which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That (a) in order to expedite the building up of the national defense, the Secretary of War is authorized, out of the moneys appropriated for the War Department for national-defense purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, with or without advertising, (1) to provide for the necessary construction, rehabilitation, conversion, and installation at military posts, depots, stations, or other localities, of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants, and the acquisition of such land and the purchase or lease of such structures as may be necessary), for the development, manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter; (2) to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary; and (3) to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders, and for the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other military equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage), and to amend or supplement such existing contracts, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes specified in this section: Provided, That the limitations contained in sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction, shall be suspended until and including June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by this Act: Provided further, That all contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under this section; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of War.

"(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when it deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

"(c) Whenever, prior to July 1, 1942, the Secretary of War deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, he is authorized, from appropriations available therefore, to advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction for the War Department in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price of such supplies or construction. Such advances shall be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. (a) During the fiscal year 1941 all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets in the Army Air Corps, and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps, shall be suspended.

"(b) The President may, during the fiscal year 1941, assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary, irrespective of the limitations on the strength of any particular branch of the Army set forth in the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

"SEC. 3. All existing limitations with respect to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained shall be suspended during the fiscal year 1941.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War is further authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, That until December 31, 1941, the Secretary of War may, if he finds it to be necessary for national-defense purposes, authorize the employment of supervising or construction engineers without regard to the requirements of civil-service laws, rules, or regulations: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), the Secretary of War may remove from the classified civil service of the United States any employee of the Military Establishment forthwith upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program of the United States and upon the giving of notice to such person of such charges: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal such person shall have an opportunity personally to answer such charges in writing and to submit affidavits in support of such answer.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provision of any other law, the regular working hours of employees of the War Department and its field services (except employees of the War Department engaged in nonmilitary activities) shall be 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President to exist: Provided, That, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, these hours may be exceeded, but compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek, computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate, shall be paid per annum, per hour, per diem, and piecework employees: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three hundred and sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries.

"SEC. 5. The President is authorized, with or without advertising, through the appropriate agencies of the Government (1) to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including all of the objects and purposes specified under any appropriation available or to be made available to the War Department for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, (2) to provide for the furnishing of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants, (3) to provide for the procurement and training of civilian personnel necessary in connection with the protection of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use or operation thereof, and (4) to provide for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the act of June 7, 1939, but the aggregate amount to be used by the President for all such purposes shall not exceed $66,000,000. The President is further authorized, through such agencies, to enter into contracts for such purposes in an aggregate amount not exceeding $66,000,000. An account shall be kept of all expenditures made or authorized under this section, and a report thereon shall be submitted to the Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress: Provided, That all contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45).

"SEC. 6. Whenever the President determines that it is necessary in the interest of national defense to prohibit or curtail the exportation of any military equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or material or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof, he may by proclamation prohibit or curtail such exportation, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Any such proclamation shall describe the articles or materials included in the prohibition or curtailment contained therein. In case of the violation of any provision of any proclamation, or of any rule or regulation, issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The authority granted in this section shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide."

And the Senate agree to the same.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which will eliminate what I think is an obvious inconsistency in the joint resolution. On page 38 appears section 34, which reads as follows:

SEC. 34. None of the funds appropriated by this joint resolution shall be used for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implement of war, for military or naval forces, and no funds herein appropriated or authorized shall be diverted or allocated to any other department or bureau for such purpose.

My amendment is to strike out section 34, and to change the numbering of the remaining sections of the bill.

This limitation was originally placed in the appropriation act when it was apparently the sentiment of Congress that we should not engage in any program of preparedness. That is obviously not the purpose of the Congress at the present time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will bear with me just a moment, I will yield.

It will be noted that on page 5, by an amendment already agreed to, the Senate has provided that—

Not to exceed $25,000,000 of funds herein appropriated * * * may be used * * * for other than labor costs * * * in connection with projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War or by the Secretary of the Navy as being important to the national defense.

On page 6 there is another amendment of the same tenor, which was also adopted by the Senate. This is to the effect that—

The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as being important to the national defense.

It seems to me, Mr. President, to be perfectly obvious that we should not allow to remain in the bill a provision which would have the effect of preventing the use of these funds for military or naval purposes, and particularly for the manufacture of munitions.

Mr. President, I think it is scarcely necessary to make any further allusions to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is under an entire misapprehension as to the purpose which led to the inclusion of the provision in the appropriation bill a year ago to which he refers. I myself offered the provision, and it was not offered by me, and I am sure was not adopted by the Senate, with any idea that a program of national defense was not to be adopted by the United States, or was not then under way. Quite the contrary was true at that time. It was adopted very shortly after we had entered upon a program of naval expansion and a very large expansion of aviation. It was adopted with the idea that the appropriations for national defense were to be earmarked so that we would know how much we were spending for national defense, and so that we would be able to determine whether we were spending enough for national defense or too much.

Nor is the provision on page 38 in the slightest degree inconsistent with the provisions of the amendments on pages 5 and 6, which have heretofore been adopted by the Senate, which to my mind are entirely proper provisions for insertion in the joint resolution, because they are specific provisions under which funds appropriated in this measure may be expended.

The purpose of section 34 is merely to assure that moneys appropriated for national defense may be spent in such a way that they may be recognized by the Congress and the public, and that we may be able to tell how much money we are spending for national defense.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to add that my thought is that since we have passed numerous measures within the last 2 weeks, all of which are designed to promote the national defense and make it easier for the War Department and the Navy Department to put the country in a proper degree of preparedness, and authorizations have been made under these various provisions, we should not retain in this measure a provision which would unquestionably have the effect of preventing the use of relief labor for those desirable purposes, if the opportunity arises. It seems to me that at this time, since the authorizations are being made, and rapidity of preparation is undoubtedly essential, the arguments which the Senator advanced at the time the measure was originally introduced no longer hold good.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. When the Senator from Missouri offered his amendment there was ground for doing so, because from the very large appropriations which had been made for relief, with no limitation of any kind, money had been allocated in a way which he sought to prohibit. The situation is quite different today. When the Senator from Missouri offered the amendment we were appropriating, if I remember correctly, $2,200,000,000 for relief. Now we are appropriating $975,000,000. The total amount available is less than one-half the amount previously made available. In the second place, we have placed a limitation in this measure, as the Senator will note if he will look on page 20, that not more than $20,000,000 can be transferred to any other Federal agency. There was no such limitation in the relief measure when the Senator offered his amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was no such provision either in the bill at that time. It was evidently inserted with the provisions of section 34 in mind, although I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee, and cannot say as to that. The Senator from Wyoming referred to the amendment on page 5, line 15—

Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000,000 of funds herein appropriated to the Work Projects Administration may be used by the Commissioner to supplement—

And so forth. The purpose of section 34, as I have said, is to assure that money appropriated for national defense will be spent in such a way as may be recognized by the Congress and the public, so we may know how much we are spending for national defense.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the point I want to make is that Congress has specifically set forth in two places in the measure, first, that not more than $20,000,000 can be transferred to any other Federal agency; and, second, that only $25,000,000 can be used for military purposes. So there is no need for section 34, which the Senator from Wyoming seeks to have stricken from the joint resolution and it might as well be stricken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator from Wyoming believe that it is desirable for the Congress to know how much it is appropriating for naval and military purposes? We have passed in the last few days a number of very large bills for military and naval purposes. We have carried out every recommendation the administration has made. In some instances we have gone beyond the administration's recommendations to a considerable extent. Those measures have passed both Houses of Congress by substantially a unanimous vote.

We have provided in this measure for $25,000,000 to be used for certain purposes—something that is written on the face of the measure and which we can see. Does not the Senator think that having done so, it is desirable that this money be spent for relief and not for military purposes?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, we do know how much can be spent for those purposes. In one place in the measure it is provided that $25,000,000 may be used for military and naval purposes approved by the War Department and the Navy Department, and in the latter part of the bill it is provided that no part of the money can be used for such purposes. That is inconsistent.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think the language of this section is rather too plain for any misunderstanding. I wonder if Senators understand it as I do?

None of the funds appropriated by this joint resolution shall be used for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implements of war. * * *

It is my understanding that it is the function of the Navy Department and the War Department to manufacture, purchase, or construct such things under the appropriations we have made. It is proposed that we shall appropriate some $975,000,000 in the pending measure, and the only thing section 34 forbids, as I understand, is the use of this money to purchase and construct naval vessels, and armament, and implements of war.

If we are going to divert any part of the money for that purpose it seems to me we ought to put the money in the proper appropriation bill, where all Senators can see for what purposes the money is being appropriated.

I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], because I do not believe there is enough money made available to W. P. A. to do the work it will be called upon to do. I see no harm in the language in question. If we are going to appropriate money to build warships, let us do it out in the open so we will know where it is being spent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the language which the Senator has read includes manufacture as well as purchase. The War Department has numerous arsenals in which munitions of war are manufactured. The point is that if it is possible to establish a works project in such an arsenal, to use unemployed persons to manufacture powder, for example, or guns, or to do any of that work, we should not have this prohibition in the measure.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me say to my good friend the Senator from Wyoming that yesterday in the Naval Affairs Committee we went over many aspects of that very problem. Those employed in the civilian activities of the Army and Navy are almost without exception under civil service. Everyone of them draws civil-service compensation. My mail is full of letters from contractors protesting against the use of W. P. A. labor in these normal civilian activities. If there is a Senator in this Chamber who has not had that type of mail I should like to hear from him.

I have received it, and I suspect all other Senators receive that kind of mail. I think business people and civil-service groups and normally employed individuals would raise the objection, whether it would be valid or not, that W. P. A. labor was being used in that competitive field where other men are drawing $5, $6, $7, and $8 a day. W. P. A. workers will feel that it is already occupied by those who are regularly employed in that sort of service.

I doubt if anyone thinks we are going to employ W. P. A. labor in building a battleship or in making munitions of war. Such operations are accomplished by the use of a trained personnel, drawing certainly infinitely more than W. P. A. labor draws.

That is the picture that has unfolded itself to me. I do not think I have misstated the facts and I believe every other Senator is aware of the situation. W. P. A. labor is employed in a rather narrowing field. I do not know whether it is good or bad, but certainly business groups and organized labor are demanding that W. P. A. be confined to a constantly narrowing field of activities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate adopted an amendment which made necessary the consideration of a second amendment. I offered the second amendment yesterday, and because it had not been checked by our secretary and by the Treasury officials, I withdrew it. I now desire to offer an amendment which has just been checked, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$3,225,000" and to insert "$3,400,000."

On the same page, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$1,724,516" and to insert "$1,954,516."

In line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$3,827,400" and to insert "$4,628,841."

In line 17, it is proposed to strike out "$9,429,916" and to insert "$10,636,357."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, yesterday I received permission to have those four items considered as one amendment. This amendment provides additional money with which to maintain the existing State agencies of the Treasury in the respective States of the Nation. The total additional amount represented is $1,200,000, to be apportioned as the Treasury officials say it shall be. It is provided as a supplement to the provision adopted yesterday, which provided that the agencies shall be retained in the separate States, and not be regionalized.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to his original amendment. I think some results would flow from his original amendment which he does not intend.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I may say in reply that the Senator is correct. I am having the Treasury redraft that amendment. When the bill goes to conference, if the chairman of the committee will be good enough, the redrafted amendment can be substituted for the original amendment, thus obviating the difficulty.

Mr. ADAMS. Under the restrictions provided by the amendment as originally drawn, an auditor in the General Accounting Office could not be sent from Washington to work any place else.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I realize that, and I am sure such procedure as I have suggested will obviate any difficulty in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have an amendment on the desk directed to section 1 of the measure, page 3, lines 17 and 18, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 17, after "public utilities", it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert "refrigerated cold-storage plants, and."

On page 3, line 18, after the word "systems", it is proposed to insert "together with offices and buildings."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me offer a word of explanation.

The language of the joint resolution authorizes W. P. A. work to be done in the creation of electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects fostered by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations. Under this language, of course, the R. E. A. and the cooperative organizations would utilize the services of W. P. A. workers, I think, to the satisfaction and advantage of everyone. It so happens that a proposal of this kind, if adopted, would not add a dollar of expense to the Government, because it is all a part of the W. P. A. operation; but it would permit the use of W. P. A. labor in building offices for the cooperative organizations in case labor were desirable in that direction.

Many of the farmer organizations have undertaken to set up small cold-storage units to save their meat, eggs, fruits, and vegetables. Millions of pounds of such commodities are being lost every year because in rural areas the farmers desiring to have the somewhat limited rural facilities for the preservation of their own farm products have found it somewhat difficult to accomplish that purpose. This amendment merely permits the little rural cooperatives and the R. E. A. organization to utilize W. P. A. labor in building not only their electric systems but necessary adjuncts, such as small office buildings and small cold-storage plants, to be owned by the farmers.

I think the amendment is a worth-while addition to the joint resolution. It would add nothing to the cost to the Government, and would merely broaden the program to a slight extent.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As I understand from the Senator's amendment, the funds would be available only to nonprofit and cooperative associations. Is that true?

Mr. BONE. That is true.

Mr. HILL. The associations are on a cooperative basis. They are cooperative organizations of farmers, and they derive no profit whatever from service to the farmers. Is that true?

Mr. BONE. The projects are purely rural, sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations. That limitation is set out in the joint resolution.

Mr. HILL. We know that many of such associations have no resources from which to obtain funds to construct cold-storage plants.

Mr. BONE. That is true.

Mr. HILL. Cold-storage plants are absolutely necessary for the farmers to preserve their eggs, meat, vegetables, fruits, and other products. Is not that true?

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

It might be noted that these operations are not commercial. I have examined the laws of a great many States, and I think they are somewhat like the laws of my own State of Washington. A cooperative, nonprofit organization in Washington, created under the laws of that State—which, as I say, are similar to the laws of most States—may not engage in business for profit. It is what the name implies—a purely cooperative venture, which may not, under the law, pay dividends. It may accumulate a little surplus, but it may not pay a dividend. It may not possess and exercise the attributes of the average private-business corporation. Therefore, anything we do in this direction is merely ar extension of the R. E. A. program and the cooperative idea on the farm. Certainly it can do no harm.

Mr. HILL. The beneficiary of the proposal would be the farmer.

Mr. BONE. The program is purely rural.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the statement that the amendment is consonant with the R. E. A. program is inaccurate. The R. E. A. program provides for lending Government funds in order that electricity may be extended into rural communities. The R. E. A. Act does not provide that the Government shall build, buy, or donate rural electrification projects for private purposes. A relief bill has a very definite purpose. Relief legislation started with the very definite and limited purpose of providing work for needy persons on useful public projects.

Projects proposed are not public projects. The question is whether or not we wish to divert the purpose of the appropriation so as to build refrigerating plants and office buildings for private groups. They are not public groups. They may be cooperative, but nevertheless they are still private groups. The associations are owned by individuals. Their purpose is very commendable; but this matter was presented to the committee, and the committee felt that it was not the function of the Government, and particularly not the function of a relief measure, to build refrigerator plants for groups of private citizens which they should own, or to build office buildings in which they should conduct their private business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have not surrendered the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the Senator had.

Mr. BONE. No.

Mr. ADAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BONE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Utah in a moment.

Let me call attention to the language of the joint resolution:

> Electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations.

The committee has approved that language. It is the House language. Of course, it sounds more elaborate and ornate for my good friend from Colorado to refer to office buildings and refrigerator plants; but anyone who knows anything about these little farm organizations knows that the only kind of an office building any of them ever had is perhaps a one-story building with a room or two in it. That is about all they require.

I have organized a number of rural cooperative-power organizations. As a labor of love, I contributed much time and energy to them. I have found pleasure and joy in doing so. I recall one little outfit which has 1,100 or 1,200 farm homes connected to its lines. It has perhaps 200 or 300 miles of main transmission lines. It has its headquarters in an office building. Do Senators know what that office building looks like? I will tell them. It is a little frame building with a room about 12 by 20, with a dinky little safe in one corner, and a battered old desk. That is the office building.

Cooperative associations could not have ornate office buildings. In the first place, they have not the money to pay for the material to go into them, even though some labor might be contributed through the W. P. A. operation. In the second place, if they had a large building, they could not use it. In the third place, Colonel Harrington and all his assistants would have suddenly to part company with their senses in order to authorize the building of anything beyond what a sane man would realize to be the normal need of one of these little cooperatives.

That is all there is to it. We are going to help them build their own power systems. I think that is a very fine idea. Lord knows, we have subsidized enough things in this country. I think we can readily do what is suggested by the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I realize that in the past W. P. A. projects have had to be sponsored by some governmental agency such as a State, city, or county. Of course, the people who live in a city or town have a governmental agency which can sponsor a project for them and for their town, whether it be a waterworks, a storage house, streets, pavements, or whatever it may be. However, farmers living in the rural sections of the country have no city; they have no town; they have no governmental corporation which can sponsor such projects. Is not that true?

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, under the present arrangement the nonprofit cooperative rural organizations would have to put up a sponsor's share, under the same requirements and conditions that apply to other applicants. Is that not true?

Mr. BONE. That is correct. As I understand, the W. P. A. would require every one of these little dinky farmers' organizations to have a sponsorship comparable to that required of a city.

Mr. HILL. As we know, frequently farm cooperatives cut across county lines; do they not?

Mr. BONE. Of necessity, they must do so.

Mr. HILL. When rural electric lines are laid out they are not run with any idea of county lines.

Mr. BONE. The cooperatives are organized under State corporate acts.

Mr. HILL. That is correct; and the only way in which we can give them any help from the W. P. A. along this line is by an amendment such as that offered by the Senator from Washington. Is that not true?

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Let me add one further suggestion. My good friend, JOHN RANKIN, a Member of the other House, has called my attention to the fact that Colonel Harrington has been made aware of this proposal and finds it not objectionable. I take it Colonel Harrington is quite prepared to cooperate with the program in every way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have before me the Senator's amendment. I cannot entirely make it out. Will the Senator explain the language of the amendment?

Mr. BONE. On page 3, line 17, after the words "public utilities", it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma and the words "refrigerated cold-storage plants, and," so as to read:

Refrigerated cold-storage plants, and electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations;

Mr. NORRIS. Then, after "systems," what would the Senator insert?

Mr. BONE. After the word "systems," in line 18, insert "together with offices and buildings."

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that the words "together with offices and buildings," as usually understood, are not intended here at all. There is no idea of building an office building.

Mr. BONE. Certainly not.

Mr. NORRIS. Senators ought not to get that idea at all; and, personally, I doubt whether it is necessary to say that, if we include the other language that is put in. I think "cold-storage plants" would cover the matter.

Mr. BONE. They might have an office building in a cold-storage plant.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BONE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. NORRIS. My own idea is that the amendment would be just as good if the expression "office buildings" were omitted. If it is feared by any Senators that the W. P. A. are going to go into the business of building 8- and 10-story office buildings and renting them out, that fear would be entirely relieved, and the amendment still would be effective, if that language were omitted.

I should like to hear what the Senator thinks about that. It seems to me that the erection of cold-storage plants would necessarily include with it sufficient office space to operate the plants. I should like to say to the Senator that it seems to me this amendment is entirely unobjectionable, and will bring about a very good addition to the benefits that may come to rural areas that are supplied with electrification.

I happen to know of one which was erected in my own State; and I know, from talking with the farmers who are participants in that nonprofit organization of cooperatives, that it is something of which they are very proud, and is very useful, and is used by practically all the farmers who are supplied with electricity on the line. I do not see any possible objection to it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it may be that we can find some language that will satisfy the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am satisfied with the language as it is.

Mr. BONE. Obviously, the great, insuperable barrier to the accomplishment of anything elaborate would be the W. P. A. officials themselves. They would drop dead at the suggestion of constructing an office building. They do not have to do it. It is a purely voluntary matter with the W. P. A.; and I think we can well leave it to the discretion of the W. P. A. officials. Whatever else they have done, I never found them doing any such thing as that. That would be a monstrous perversion of common sense, let alone ordinary business practice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The R. E. A. undoubtedly is doing very satisfactory work. It was created under a special act. It seems to me that commingling it with the Work Projects Administration would be like yoking two unequals.

The Work Projects Administration is to take care of the unemployed. It has its organizations where people are out of employment, on relief. To convert those organizations into adjuncts to the R. E. A. when we have given full opportunity for the development of the R. E. A., authorizing it to borrow money, and the Government is furnishing the money, it seems to me is not quite the proper thing. I concede that it might accomplish a great deal of good.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator's objection——

Mr. KING. I am not making an objection. I am merely making a suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. The suggestion reminds me of an objection which probably can be easily explained by saying that in a rural project covering hundreds of miles there may be several cooperative organizations of farmers in various parts of the project who will take the benefit of this language if it goes in. It does not mean that everybody on a rural line would have to become a member of this particular organization; so it would not be fair to leave it to the project itself. Some of the members would not want to utilize this kind of service, but those who do want to organize this kind of thing are given the opportunity to do it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. With reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, I wonder what the Senator from Washington would think of modifying his amendment so that instead of having it read as it now does, "together with offices and buildings," it would read "together with office quarters." I wonder what the Senator from Washington would think, and I also should like to know what the Senator from Nebraska would think, of the use of those words.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is asking me——

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should not have any objection. I have not any objection to the language just as it is. The reason why I have offered the suggestions I have offered is that other Senators may be alarmed at the use of the words "offices and buildings."

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that without that language they could accomplish the object it is desired to accomplish, because if we put in the words "cold-storage plants"—that is part of the language the Senator is putting in his amendment—that would mean, I take it, that if a small office or room were necessary in which to keep the records, or anything of that kind, it would be part of the plant, and I think all the office it would need would be covered by that language.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I shall send to the desk a modification of the amendment I tendered after the Senator from Nebraska looks at it. It merely says "office quarters." Of course, that might be a little dinky room 10 by 12 feet, or something of that sort; and it gets away from any question about constructing elaborate buildings.

I realize that a Member of Congress, looking at the amendment, might very justly question it. I certainly have not in my heart anything looking to the idea of operating a big building. I am perfectly satisfied to have that language in the amendment, because it implies nothing but a little building; and if the Senator will let it go to the desk and have the clerk state the amendment I should like to have a vote on it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 18, after the word "systems", it is proposed to insert "together with office quarters."

Mr. BONE. That satisfies me.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire again simply to call attention to what I think is an inconsistency between this amendment and the whole purpose of the act, in that it is constructing with public money buildings and plants for the benefit of private individuals. From the standpoint of providing work, if we put in a cold-storage plant, the bulk of the cost is in the purchase of equipment, and it will not provide work for persons on relief.

Mr. BONE. The Senator will admit that it will provide some work.

Mr. ADAMS. Some work, yes; but there are thousands of communities, cities, and small towns that would like cold-storage plants. They are missing in many places. If we provide for the construction of cold-storage plants which are available for public use and which are to be owned by public authority, it is perfectly proper; but I think it is very improper at any time, under a relief measure or any other, to build plants or institutions which are to be owned by private individuals and to be paid for by public funds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a division.

On a division, the ayes were 18 and the nays were 16; so the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk state the next amendment I have lying on the desk.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt for a moment, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to a matter which we took up the other day when the Senator from Maryland was not present, with reference to the expenditures for the Treasury Department. It may not be clear, but there was a roll call vote on an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator asked me to call his attention to the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was reported in some quarters that on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama I was in opposition to the economy side. I certainly was not in opposition to the economy side, and had I been present I would have voted against the proposal of the Senator from Alabama. My sole remark in the debate was one of a humorous nature, because the Senator from Alabama had twice, in the course of his remarks, referred to my State in a humorous vein. I should like to have the RECORD show that I did not speak in any sense at all for the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wonder if we might not at this time enter into a further limitation of debate on amendments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no desire to delay the consideration of the joint resolution, but I have two amendments which I desire to offer before the measure is disposed of, and while I do not think I shall require much time, I do desire to explain the amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was going to propose that during the further consideration of the joint resolution no Senator should speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would mean that on an amendment and the joint resolution a Senator would have 30 minutes?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should not object.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the joint resolution no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk state the amendment I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that what he proposes is an amendment to a committee amendment which has already been agreed to.

Mr. BONE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 25, in section 15 (a), was agreed to, be reconsidered, so that I may offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, the vote is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, line 16, after the words "and are American citizens", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That if the income of any such person from compensation, pension, or any other benefit payments from the Veterans' Administration is less than the amount to which he would be entitled per month if assigned to a Work Projects Administration work project for which he is qualified, then he shall be certified as in need of such employment, and shall be assigned to work at least so many hours of each month as will bring his total income up to the amount he would receive if he were assigned for full-time work to such a work project.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I shall take just a moment to explain the purpose of the amendment.

This is an amendment designed to touch one phase of veterans' preference. As I gather from the suggestions of those who are very much interested in the matter, it would have the result I shall state. I will give a specific instance of how the law would work if the amendment were enacted.

A veteran who otherwise is qualified to work on W. P. A. is found to be receiving, as in the case I mention, $20 a month from the Government in the way of compensation. Because he receives that compensation, he is disqualified from working on W. P. A. The amendment provides that if he received $20, or any amount less than what he might receive on W. P. A., he should not be disqualified thereby, but might work a requisite number of hours on W. P. A. so as to bring up the total of his earnings on W. P. A. to what he received in benefit payments from the Government, but not less than what he would otherwise receive on W. P. A. were he not a veteran receiving Government benefits.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter was given careful consideration by the committee. Colonel Harrington said to us that the provision would be almost impossible of administration; that it involved a gradation of every individual with the different amount he was to receive. It might result in one veteran being allowed to work only 2 hours in a month, another 20 hours, depending on the amount each was receiving, and it would involve investigating every individual's case.

Colonel Harrington, whose advice the committee followed, said that the present provision had been worked out, that they had established what they thought was a very satisfactory basis of operations, and, while there is always some complaint, he said that, so far as the veterans were concerned, 90 percent of those who applied for employment were actually put to work. Of those who applied, naturally not all of them can meet the requirement. There might be in a particular instance a Spanish-American War veteran receiving from the Government $50, and he would go in and make his case, and would find that in the neighborhood they were paying $52, so that they would grade him and say, "You are entitled to earn $2." Under the law as it now stands that veteran could be certified, if he met the requirements, and would, in addition, get his full month's pay. In the long run, the provision which the Senator from Washington seeks to have inserted would discriminate against the veterans. It would not be in their favor.

There are a few cases in which a veteran who is receiving a certain amount from Social Security, or has some minor income, is met with the test which the act applies, that in employing people relative need shall be considered, and that whenever the relative need is equal, veterans shall be employed. On the other hand, if a veteran has an income of $40 a month from outside sources, and there is a man or woman utterly destitute, with 4 or 5 or 8 or 10 children to be supported, that individual, I think, is entitled to some preference. Wherever there is an equality of need, the veteran has been given the preference, and when he is taken on, he gets the same full wage every other person on W. P. A. receives, while this amendment would result in veterans receiving less than the full wage while they were on the roll.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I listened to Colonel Harrington very carefully when he appeared before the committee, and what impressed me was that under the law as it now is, 90 percent of the veterans who have applied have been cared for. Any system which will take care of 9 out of every 10 is a pretty good one. On the other hand, as the chairman of the subcommittee has pointed out, if we attempt to apply this to a Government job, and have some veteran working 5 days a week, or 2 days a week, or 10 days a week we utterly disrupt the works. It is impossible to make out the little difference between the average of $55 a month paid all over the country and the forty or thirty or twenty dollars or whatever it may be a veteran would receive who would work a little while on a job and then be off. It would utterly disrupt the work. I think it is wholly impracticable.

The third objection I have to it is that if we should attempt to carry it out, in the end the number of veterans employed would not be so great as under the present arrangement.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion that this might be injurious to veterans, I wish to say that it was prepared and brought to my attention by the legislative representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Washington, and I assume they have sufficiently full contact with the problem in hand to know what they want and what they feel would be the most desirable solution. Most of the veterans are getting only $8 a month, instead of some other sum.

Mr. HAYDEN. That class of veteran is cared for now.

Mr. BONE. I merely want the RECORD to show that I am not electing to adjust this matter myself. I am merely taking the word of the leaders of the veterans, who thought this language would be just and helpful.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move on page 12, line 13, to strike out paragraph (f), as amended. This provision reads as follows:

> No loan or grant shall be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association.

Mr. President, in my judgment one of the most successful programs which has been carried on by the Department of Agriculture has been the program of rehabilitation under the Farm Security Administration. This program has been designed to take people who have no means of support, and set them upon farms of their own through the provisions of loans and grants to such families.

When the program was first suggested it was stated by some people that this was a group which could not be successfully rehabilitated. On the contrary this program has been a great success, and the clients of the Farm Security Administration have repaid their loans in large measure. They have become self-respecting, self-supporting families. They are once more being welcomed back into the economy of the United States. They feel that they have a successful place in such society.

Mr. ADAMS rose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to explain this situation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Proceed.

Mr. ADAMS. I will, perhaps, take more time than the Senator will, because the committee heard two sides to the argument. I wish to present those things in my own time. It is very good of the Senator from Wisconsin to be willing to yield to me at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, one of the means by which this program has been made successful and these clients of the Farm Security Administration have been able to rehabilitate themselves and to make such a splendid showing, insofar as repayment of these loans is concerned, has been the device of setting up small cooperatives whereby these farmers, who are operating on a small scale, are able to pool their meager resources, and thus enable them to utilize heavy farm machinery, more and better breeding stock. This amendment, in conjunction with one which I intend to offer so far as section 33 is concerned, is of vital importance to this program.

In this connection I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a communication directed to the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of Agriculture:

> DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: As you will recall, Mr. C. B. Baldwin, of the Farm Security Administration of this Department, indicated Monday morning before the subcommittee in connection with House Joint Resolution 544 that we would write you relative to section 2 (e) and section 33 of that bill.
> Section 2 (e) provides that: "No loan shall be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe or pay for stock of membership in any cooperative association." No such provision has appeared in earlier measures appropriating funds for the Farm Security Administration. The appropriation act of last year contained in section 34 a provision analogous to section 33 in House Joint Resolution 544. However, the wording of section 33 in the measure now under consideration by your committee imposes greatly increased limitations over the use of funds from that imposed by the analogous provision in last year's act.
> The provisions of these two sections strike at the very heart of an important phase of our rehabilitation program. We have found from experience that one of the soundest and most economical ways of bringing about rehabilitation of many thousands of low-income farmers is by local effort made possible through loans to small groups of such farmers.
> In further cooperative effort among low-income farmers, we have felt that we were carrying out a well-established policy of Congress which is actually of very long standing. That this is true is evidenced by various acts of Congress, such as the Capper-Volstead Act; the Agricultural Act of 1929; the United States Warehouse Act; the act of June 16, 1933, establishing the Farm Credit Administration, which includes a central bank for cooperatives and 12 district banks for cooperatives empowered to make loans to cooperative associations; the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, and similar legislation.
> The restrictions imposed by sections 2 (e) and 33 are inconsistent with this policy. Furthermore, they discriminate against the low-income farmers of the country. Through the facilities of the Farm Credit Administration the large and successful farmer will still be able to obtain credit to organize and participate in cooperative associations. The low-income farmers of the Nation need the benefits of sound, successful cooperative enterprises as much, or even more, than does the large successful operator. But these low-income farmers do not have the necessary capital to participate in these cooperatives. Moreover, there is no Government agency other than the Farm Security Administration which can assist them in purchasing a membership or a share of stock in sound cooperative enterprises.
> Unless the Congress intends to make a substantial change in national policy respecting farmers' cooperative activities, there is little ground for restrictions of the type embodied in sections 2 (e) and 33 of House Joint Resolution 544, the chief effects of which are to place low-income farmers at a distinct disadvantage to other farmers.
> Most of the loans we make to aid farmers to derive the benefits of cooperative efforts are to enable them to participate in small groups which provide purebred sires, heavy farm equipment, modest storage facilities for food and feed produced on the farm, and similar facilities. Since the inception of the Farm Security program, we have aided in the establishment of about 13,150 such services, participated in by more than 260,000 families. Of this number 32 percent have been for purebred sires; 53 percent for heavy farm equipment; 5 percent for purchasing and marketing services; and 10 percent for miscellaneous services such as feed, grist, and sirup mills, other small types of processing equipment, and roadside vegetable stands. About 20 farmers on an average participate in each of the group services. Many of the groups do not have more than 5 or 6 members.

Although most of our loans to low-income farmers to enable them to participate in cooperative organizations are of the simple-service type just mentioned, it is, nevertheless, true that there are thousands of individual farmers who can be aided in their rehabilitation process through becoming members of existing cooperative organizations, such as mutual insurance companies, mutual irrigation associations, and successful marketing and purchasing organizations.

Mr. President, I wish very briefly to point out the remarkable showing which has been made by this phase of the farm-security program. This refers to one State in the Union, but it is typical:

The average net income of these farm families the year before they secured these rehabilitation loans was $257.08, while in 1939 it was $490.05, or a gain of 91 percent.

Mr. President, this is the type of program which in my opinion, instead of being hamstrung, curtailed, or interfered with, ought to be expanded. Here is an attack upon a problem which is of major significance and importance so far as the future of America is concerned. Here is a program which is rehabilitating families on the land and restoring them to a position of security and usefulness in our economic system instead of maintaining them upon relief without rehabilitating them. Here are families the overwhelming majority of which under this program are placing themselves in a position where they will ultimately find it unnecessary to ask the Government for further assistance.

Mr. President, for nearly a year I have spent much time in studying the question of migratory agricultural labor, and the underlying economic causes which are constantly augmenting that portion of our farm population who are being dispossessed and who are finding themselves in a position in which they are migrating from one State to another in a vain search for a new opportunity to restore themselves to the land.

As I stated in my few remarks on the previous amendment, farming as a way of life in America is threatened, and we must attack the problem on all fronts if we are to preserve farming as a way of life in America. This program has demonstrated itself to be economically sound. It results in rehabilitation, new hope, and new opportunity, instead of the disintegrating process of great numbers of people in the United States finding themselves unwanted and unusable in our society, and forced to accept relief and other forms of public-welfare assistance.

It would be a tragic mistake to curtail this program. In this respect, of course, I am only expressing my own opinion. I accord recognition to the sincerity of purpose of those who disagree with me. All I am asking in connection with my amendment is that a provision which does not appear in any previous act shall be eliminated, and that the program be permitted to go on.

What could be less logical than for the Government on the one hand to make loans or grants to a farm family for rehabilitation on the land, and on the other hand to deny them the benefits of cooperative activity in order that they may be placed in a position to utilize heavy farm equipment, labor-saving devices, and a better breed of stock so as to continue their program of rehabilitation and ultimately repay their obligations to the Federal Government?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am very much interested in this activity of the Federal Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator is interested. He has evidenced his interest on many occasions.

Mr. AUSTIN. After the Senator from Wisconsin shall have concluded I shall take the floor for the purpose of briefly pointing out the wonderful service which this program has accomplished in my small State. However, before the Senator finishes, I wish to inquire just exactly what this particular amendment does. It is not clear to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amendment is to strike out the provision in the joint resolution which prohibits the use of any farm-security moneys from being used for the purpose of making loans or grants to farmers to enable them to subscribe to or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association. The Senator must remember that rehabilitation clients are people who have been at the bottom, or near the bottom, of the agricultural economic ladder. In order to give the cooperative associations capital stock and sufficient membership so that they may buy a purebred sire for their dairy cows, for example, or a corn binder, or a tractor, if there is a large enough group in the community to utilize it—things which have become a part of modern, scientific agricultural enterprise—farmers must be in a position to subscribe to the stock and set up a cooperative organization.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. In most cases are the services of grants and loans for the purpose of organizing a cooperative with one of those specific objectives in view?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Either that, or, if there is an existing cooperative, and if the client has not the money to subscribe for membership, under existing law and practice the Farm Security Administration may make the client a loan for that purpose.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the brief limitation of time which has been imposed, with my consent, upon the debate on the joint resolution, I merely wish to say that it is my deliberate and considered judgment that instead of curtailing this program we ought to be expanding our activity on this front as one of the means of preserving and restoring farming as a way of life in America so as to check the alarming trend to people being dispossessed from the land.

I am sure that Senators who are familiar with agricultural communities and with the contribution which such communities, based upon farming as a way of life, have made to the stability, the functioning, and the success of our democracy, must agree with me in principle. If I had the time, Mr. President, I could pile up evidence to demonstrate that I am making no alarmist statement. A trend has been going on in this country on a very significant and increasing scale, but like many other trends it has escaped our observation, because apparently it is a human characteristic to fail to recognize trends until they assume alarming proportions. I repeat, this is a sound program. It has demonstrated its usefulness. These people have demonstrated their capacity for rehabilitation. They are making a splendid record in the repayment of their loans and grants. Cooperative activity is the right arm of Farm Security Administration clients in their efforts to rehabilitate themselves. Do not cut it off. Strengthen and uphold it by adopting the amendment I have offered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I simply wish to explain the situation as it was submitted to the committee.

The committee has simply passed along the joint resolution as it came from the House in this particular. We had before the committee Secretary Wallace and Mr. Bain, I think, whose letter the Senator read, with the argument against this section. There were also submitted to the committee the hearings in the House.

The situation was to this effect: All of the matters that came to the Senate committee were in favor of the exclusion of this clause. The hearings in the House were all the other way. In other words, there was no meeting of the issue before either the Senate committee or the House committee. The House hearings took the following aspect: There were two men—I do not know who they were—who appeared with certain letters claiming that the provisions as they had been carried out resulted in loans being made to cooperatives to engage in competitive businesses with private industry. That was the complaint in the House committee—that cooperative organizations which were competitive were being financed with Government money.

In the Senate committee, the letter of Secretary Wallace pointed out the things the Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out, the lesser matters, in which the cooperative was endeavoring to improve his stock, buying good horses, and doing the minor things. The Senate committee merely let the matter stand so that it would be available for discussion. We were confronted with a letter which was in the House hearings, which I do not care to sponsor, but simply to note in the RECORD that on page 1052 of the House hearings there is printed a letter which had some influence on the committee in keeping their hands off the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am familiar with that situation. My understanding is that two men who have a chain of oil stations in North Dakota came before the House committee and objected to these loans on the ground that they constituted unfair competition. If the Senator will permit me, however, the point I should like to make is that it has been the established policy of Congress to foster farmer-producer and farmer-consumer cooperatives; and if we are to reverse that policy because two oil-station operators in North Dakota do not think it is fair, we ought to abolish the many statutes which are on the books designed to foster and assist farm-owned and farm-operated cooperatives.

With the Senator's permission I should like to make just one more point, and that is that larger cooperative associations, the more successful farmers, can today go to the banks of cooperatives, and get, in any one of 12 districts, loans for this purpose; but if this amendment stays in, and the amendments to section 33 stay in, then the lowest-income group of farmers who are being helped by the Federal Government will be denied the benefits of a policy which is being extended to other and more fortunate farmers.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am trying to give the Senator the picture of the Senate Appropriations Committee. We did not hear these two gentlemen. We were influenced by the fact that the House itself had taken certain action. We left the matter alone, it having been presented in one House from one standpoint and before us in the other, and we knew it would be presented here.

Personally, my sympathies were with Secretary Wallace and the other group.

The Senate, I think, has now indicated a desire to go quite a distance; that is, we are going to finance cold-storage plants, and construct buildings, and lend money to buy stock; and yet I have full sympathy with the cooperative movement. It is not only beneficial but it is essential in the lower economic farming areas.

I think criticism could be leveled if Government money were loaned to farmers upon a better level, so that they could go into competitive lines with Government money instead of using their own money, if it were possible to draw the line between aiding the farmer who is unable to help himself as distinguished from providing funds for the better-to-do farmer to engage in competitive mercantile business and manufacturing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to repeat that that is already the established policy. Through a long period of years the Federal Government has believed that it was economically sound for producers to engage in cooperation. We have even gone so far as to set up a bank of cooperatives in this country. It does seem to me that the same advantages and privileges which are extended to farmers who are in a comparatively better-income status, and have the opportunity to secure such credit from the bank of cooperatives should not be denied to clients of the Farm Security Administration when the farmers are making such a splendid showing and response to this aid and assistance from the Federal Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I desire to ask the Senator a question, though not about the pending matter. Did representatives of the Actors' Equity appear before the committee in behalf of theater projects?

Mr. ADAMS. They did. A number came before us—I think a legal representative and some others.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Was any inquiry made by the committee as to whether or not Communists were members of the Equity's executive council?

Mr. ADAMS. I think not. I have no recollection of that. Some gentlemen came to my office and said that there were certain Communist members; but, of course, in the joint resolution there is a provision forbidding granting relief to Communists when the fact of their being Communists is demonstrated. What we did with the theatrical projects was simply to restore them to a common level with all the other projects; that is, we took away the priority which they had had before, in that no contribution was required, and then we took out the discrimination against them which the House put in which forbade the use of Government money to foster theatrical projects, and simply left them on a par with all other types of projects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank my colleague.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long.

I have carefully studied the work of the Farm Security Administration in the State of Vermont, and the record is amazingly good. It is better, in fact, than the record referred to in the one specific case mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin.

I shall not read to the Senate all of the letter I have before me; but I shall point out some essential things which, if they are true all over the United States, justify Congress in having entire faith in the Farm Security Administration, and supporting it with all the vigor we can afford.

In Vermont, a survey was made which showed that the 800 standard stabilization borrowers had an average net income last year—that is, the year 1938, this letter having reference to the record of 1939—of $929.93 per family, as compared with $683.58 in the year before they came to the Farm Security Administration for help.

This represents an increase of 36 percent. These families increased their average net worth—that is, worth above all their debts—by 29 percent since taking advantage of the program. They added $438,880 to the wealth of their communities, and they also increased their annual incomes by a total of $197,078. Of course, such an expanding purchasing power benefited the entire community, merchants and businessmen generally, with whom farmers have to deal.

The survey showed another rather interesting fact—that these borrowers from my State repaid $357,776 into the Federal Treasury as installments on loans totaling $810,408. Of course, Vermont is a small State, and relatively this is a small amount of borrowings—less than a million dollars; but when we compare the total amount of the borrowings with the total amount of repayments, it is a splendid record and reflects not merely the integrity of the borrowers but the efficient operation of the Farm Security Administration by way of advice and help, which, in my opinion, is one of the finest elements of that particular service.

The typical rehabilitation family in Vermont has borrowed $1,013.01 and has already repaid $447.22.

In a limited number of cases, in order to get the family off to a sound start, small grants were made to supplement the loans. Uusually these grants were just large enough to tide the family over until it could make its first crop. They averaged $20.35 per family, or a total of $16,280, over a 4-year period.

Another fact to which I wish to call attention is that the Farm Security Administration has helped these poor people to work out a way of adjustment of their debt condition. Local farm debt adjustment committees were set up in Vermont for that purpose. They had no legal authority to compel adjustments, they could not under the law make a creditor reduce his debt, and so the transaction was purely a social transaction, in which the spirit of the whole State entered, in a desire to rehabilitate this fundamental activity of the State, because the State of Vermont recognizes that agriculture is a basic industry within its borders.

Adjustments have been made which are reflected in the figures given in the letter to which I am referring, although the figures alone do not represent the whole value. In other words, I think the higher value in these adjustments is the encouragement the farmers and their wives and children receive for the future. But this is what the figures show. Understand, this service is available to all farmers, whether or not they were rehabilitated borrowers. The service was spread out to include others than those who had become borrowers.

Altogether, debt reductions totaling $353,498 have been negotiated for the farmers in Vermont. This represents a scaling down of 22.3 percent. As a direct result of these adjustments $15,383 in back taxes have been paid to local governmental agencies.

In helping out new borrowers to get a new start, this Administration has made efforts to assist them in getting adequate sized farms, farms which would pay out. The figures will make some Senators smile, because of the relative smallness of the farms, but they are significant of the difference in methods of agriculture between the northeastern part of the United States and the great West. The borrowers in Vermont are now operating on an average of 183.10 acres, or an increase of 19.44 acres since they came under the program. This increased acreage has not added materially to the production of commercial crops, however, since virtually everything raised is consumed on the farm. It merely means a better diet and a better standard of living for the families involved.

I shall not weary the Senate with other details, which I think are equally interesting, but I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD this letter, dated March 19, 1940, signed by Will W. Anderson, Administrator of the Farm Security Administration, written to me at my request.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, March 19, 1940.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: In accordance with your telephone request, we are giving you the results of a survey of the progress being made by Farm Security Administration borrowers in the State of Vermont.

We are proud to report that F. S. A. borrowers not only have increased their net worth and annual income, but also are making satisfactory progress in the repayment of their loans.

The survey showed that the 800 standard rehabilitation borrowers in your State had an average net income last year of $929.93 per family, as compared with $683.58 in the year before they came to F. S. A. for help. This represents an increase of 36 percent.

Moreover, these families increased their average net worth—over and above all debts—by 29 percent since coming on the program.

In other words, these families not only have added $438,880 to the wealth of their communities, but they also have increased their annual incomes by a total of $197.078. This expanding purchasing power has, of course, been a considerable benefit to the merchants and other businessmen of the State.

At the same time, the survey showed that the borrowers in your State already have repaid $357,776 into the Federal Treasury as installments on loans totaling $810,408. The typical rehabilitation family in Vermont has borrowed $1,013.01, and already has repaid $447.22. Since much of the money loaned does not fall due for 4 or 5 years, there is every reason to expect that the great bulk of it will be repaid.

We feel that this collection record is particularly significant because, according to normal business standards, our borrowers would certainly not be considered good credit risks. Rehabilitation loans are made only to families which cannot get adequate credit anywhere else, and nearly all of them either had been on relief or were approaching the relief level.

Although the rehabilitation program is intended to meet long-range problems, which have been growing steadily worse for more than a generation, it is financed out of relief appropriations, and it takes the place of direct relief in rural areas. It is designed to help needy farm families to become permanently self-supporting, instead of remaining indefinitely dependent on relief.

It has succeeded largely because every loan is accompanied by advice and guidance in sound farming methods, to make sure that the money is put to the best possible use. There is ample evidence that this guidance and technical training is the most important part of the rehabilitation program. Without it, few of the families would have been able to make much progress or to repay their loans.

In a limited number of cases, in order to get the family off to a sound start, small grants have been made to supplement the loan. Usually these grants were just large enough to tide the family over until it could make its first crop. They have averaged $20.35 per family, or a total of $16,280 over a 4-year period.

Often it has been necessary to work out an adjustment of the family's old debts, before rehabilitation could be successful. Local farm debt adjustment committees have been set up for this purpose. They have no legal authority to compel adjustments, but by bringing the farmer and his creditors together for a friendly discussion, they usually are able to arrange a scale-down of the obligations, reduced interest rates, or extension of the payment period. Such adjustments frequently save the farmer from foreclosure, and at the same time enable the creditors to get substantial payments on what might otherwise have been bad debts.

This service is available to all farmers, whether or not they are rehabilitation borrowers. Altogether, debt reductions totaling $353,498 have been negotiated for the farmers in Vermont. This represents a scale-down of 22.3 percent. As a direct result of these adjustments, $15,383 in back taxes has been paid to local governmental agencies.

In helping rehabilitation borrowers to plan their farm operations, we always urge them to get away from one-crop farming, and to raise as much as possible of their food and feed supplies. The progress they are making is indicated by the fact that the borrowers in your State produced $128,128 worth of goods for home consumption last year, as compared with only $134,808 worth before they came into the F. S. A. program.

These families canned 160,864 quarts of fruits and vegetables last year, or an average of 201 quarts per family for home consumption. They also produced 308,864 gallons of milk, an average of 386 gallons, and 75,896 tons of forage, an average of approximately 95 tons. This kind of diversified farming has meant a higher standard of living, a better diet, and usually a marked improvement in health.

One of the most common reasons for past failure among the families which come to F. S. A. for help was that they had not farmed enough acreage to make a living. In helping our borrowers to get a new start, we have made every effort to assist them in getting adequate-size farms. Consequently, the borrowers in Vermont are now operating an average of 183.1 acres, or an increase of 19.44 acres, since they came on the program. This increased acreage has not added materially to the production of commercial crops, however, since virtually everything raised on it is consumed on the farm. It simply means a better diet and a better standard of living for these families.

Another main objective of F. S. A. is to help tenants and sharecroppers get more secure land-tenure arrangements so they can plan ahead for crop rotations, soil conservation, and other sound farming practices. The survey indicated that 96 tenants in Vermont have obtained written leases in place of verbal agreements.

In making the survey our field workers found that there are 6,251 families in Vermont which are eligible and in need of rehabilitation loans but have been unable to get them because of our limited funds.

Aside from the rehabilitation program, the Farm Security Administration's most important job is to make loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to tenants, sharecroppers, and farm laborers to enable them to purchase family-size farms of their own.

While it has been necessary to confine loans to certain counties because of the limited funds available, we had made four such loans in Vermont, totaling $31,750, up to the end of the last fiscal year. This year we are expecting to make about six Bankhead-Jones loans in Vermont, totaling approximately $37,000.

This has been a rather detailed report, but I felt that the information might be useful to you. If you would like to have any further details about our program I hope you will let me know.

Sincerely,

WILL W. ALEXANDER,
Administrator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the present interest charge the borrowers pay?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is less than the prevailing rate of interest.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was sure it was, and I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator from Vermont. This seems to have been a very fine and helpful influence to the farmers of his State. It also has been most helpful in the other States of the country. I wondered whether the Senator knew what the present interest rate is.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know what it is, but I know that I helped to get some loans which were carrying a high rate of interest changed to loans which would carry only a moderate rate of interest, and to induce the creditors to scale down their principal and to put the loans on such a basis that the farmers would have a living chance to pay them off. The way it works is psychological, as well as economical. It cheers up and encourages those who are on the farms to go ahead, and, besides that, it affords them very practical advice and help. If there is a reason why the farmers have been unable to pay off, other than the amount of the debt and the rate of interest, the adjustment committees find it out, and undertake to tell the farmers why it was they got into the shape in which they found themselves. It worked very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, is the Senator from Kentucky about to move a recess?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want a record vote on the amendment, so I should like to have it go over.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, persuade us that to know the duty of the hour is wisdom and to discharge our obligations is a great virtue. Enable us to live up to Thy rule of right and to have a growing faith in the God of our fathers, whose chivalry of soul and vision of a just government challenge the admiration of humankind. Today let a halo of Thy presence be thrown over our country; speak the eternal truths which change not. Almighty God, we thank Thee for our Republic and for its historic institutions. May they ever abide for their glory and perpetuity upon the inalienable and God-given rights of man; ever inspire us to keep the trust, revere the truth, and honor Thy decrees. We praise Thee for our glorious flag, for all it symbolizes and teaches us. In song and in story, may it be honored today in city, hamlet, and countryside, especially by the youth of our land; God guide and bless them. Grant that its beauteous folds may be seen in our broad, open skies, telling of the onward sweep of liberty, tolerance, and justice. In the spirit of the Prince of Peace, with its celestial white, its sacrificial crimson, and with the stars of Thy providence, may it pose like a rainbow in every storm cloud of strife and discontent, declaring the unity and faith of a free, Christian people. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3840) entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 17 to the bill (H. R. 8913) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On June 11, 1940:

TRANSFER OF CONSTRUCTION CORPS TO THE LINE OF THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 4027, to transfer the active list of the Construction Corps to the line of the Navy, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the object and purpose of this bill is to transfer to the line of the Navy what is known as the Construction Corps, which is a technical corps in the Navy that has to do with the construction of ships. Under a bill passed a few days ago we established what is known as the Bureau of Ships. Already in the line of the Navy are the two other engineering corps, the aeronautical engineers and the engineers known as the E. D. O. They are already in the line of the Navy, but the Construction Corps is in the staff of the Navy.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. It is really to carry out the consolidation of the two bureaus covered by a bill which the Congress passed recently? This is a consolidation of personnel?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is a necessary supplement to the other bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. There is nothing in this bill which permits the sale of warships to foreign countries?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all. Let me say in connection with that, I know of no law which permits the sale of any obsolete or reconditioned destroyers without an act of Congress.

Mr. FISH. I wanted to ask the gentleman if there is any such law.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I know of no such law.

Mr. FISH. What does it mean when we read newspaper reports that 35 of our destroyers are going to be sold abroad?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If any destroyers are going to be sold, Congress must give the permission to sell them, and I am unalterably opposed to the sale of any battleships, destroyers, or anything of that kind without an act of Congress.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, let me ask this question: The President has the right to do that?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As I said, no; as far as I am aware, I know of no law that permits anybody to sell Government property of that character without an act of Congress.

Mr. FISH. As a matter of fact, it is entirely contrary to our American tradition?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Why, of course, it is. We need all the ships we can get for ourselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Construction Corps of the Navy is hereby abolished, but nothing herein shall affect the status, rights, or obligations of any officer now on the retired list of the Construction Corps.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTORS TRANSFERRED TO THE LINE: STATUS UPON TRANSFER

SEC. 2. Officers now on the active list of the Construction Corps are hereby transferred to the line of the Navy, and shall be commissioned accordingly. Each officer so transferred shall—

(a) Be designated for engineering duty only.

(b) Occupy the rank and grade corresponding to those held by him in the Construction Corps.

(c) Continue amenable to disciplinary action to the same extent in all respects as if not transferred.

(d) Be an additional number in the grade to which transferred and in any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted.

(e) Have the lineal position and precedence in the line which a board of naval officers finds that he would have had if he had remained in the line or if his original appointment had been in the line, and the finding of such board when approved by the Secretary of the Navy shall be conclusive for all purposes: Provided, That the existing relative rank, precedence, or seniority among themselves of officers transferred by this act shall not be altered by such transfer.

(f) Except as herein otherwise provided, be governed by the provisions of existing laws and of laws hereafter enacted relating to line officers assigned to engineering duty only.

ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS

SEC. 3. For the purpose of adjusting the status in the line of the officers transferred thereto by this act, the following shall govern with respect to such officers:

(a) Each officer shall become eligible for consideration by a line selection board as of the date the next junior line officer becomes eligible therefor, subject to the provisions of section 7 (a) of this act, and the same eligibility rule shall apply to all other officers designated for engineering duty only.

(b) Each officer who at the time of transfer has been passed over one or more times in the rank in which transferred shall be regarded as having failed of selection as best fitted once only.

(c) Each captain whose date of commission in such rank is earlier than February 2, 1932, shall, if promoted pursuant to the recommendation of the first line selection board convened for his rank after the date of this act, have the date of commission and the precedence which the Secretary of the Navy finds that he would have had if he had remained in the line or if his original appointment had been in the line: Provided, That his existing relative rank, precedence, or seniority shall not be altered thereby with reference to other such officers advanced to the rank of rear admiral pursuant to the recommendation of the same or an earlier selection board.

(d) Commanders and lieutenant commanders who, while in the rank in which transferred, have been considered by staff selection boards shall, if promoted pursuant to the recommendation of the first line selection board convened for their rank after the date of approval of this act, have the date of commission and the precedence which the Secretary of the Navy finds that they would have had if such promotion had occurred prior to their transfer.

ADDITIONAL OFFICERS TO BE DESIGNATED FOR ENGINEERING DUTY ONLY: STATUS AND DUTIES

SEC. 4. (a) Officers heretofore appointed or designated for the performance of aeronautical-engineering duty only in accordance with the act of June 5, 1935 (49 Stat. 323; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 71a), are hereby designated for engineering duty only and no further appointments or designations shall be made under that act, which is hereby repealed.

(b) The provision of the act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 580; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 71), which authorizes the assignment of officers "not below the grade of lieutenant" to engineering duty only is hereby amended by deleting the word "lieutenant" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "lieutenant (junior grade)."

(c) Officers designated for engineering duty only shall be additional numbers in grade and shall not succeed to command except on shore and then only as authorized by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 5. (a) The number of rear admirals designated for engineering duty only shall be reduced to six, as provided in this section, and thereafter that number shall be the permanent authorized number of such officers. In the meantime, only the first and each alternate succeeding separation of such officers from the active list shall be deemed to create a vacancy, and if more than one vacancy should result in any fiscal year the excess shall not be filled, but the next succeeding separation from the active list shall be regarded as the alternate succeeding separation within the meaning of this section: Provided, That the line selection boards convened in the fiscal years 1941 and 1942 to recommend captains for promotion to the grade of rear admiral shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Navy with an estimated number of vacancies in that grade for officers designated for engineering duty only, which number shall be four and two, respectively, regardless of the number of officers separated from the active list.

(b) Officers transferred to the line of the Navy pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of this act who, at the time of transfer, have been recommended for advancement to the rank of rear admiral, and those who may be so recommended in the report of the selection board convened next subsequent to the date of approval of this act shall be eligible for promotion on January 2, 1941, upon which date there shall be deemed to have been created a number of vacancies equal to the number of such officers recommended for promotion. Except as above provided, each captain designated for engineering duty only on the promotion list for the grade of rear admiral shall be promoted to rank from the date stated in or in due course to be stated in, the commission in that grade of the next junior officer on the promotion list who is not designated for engineering duty only.

INFORMATION TO BE FURNISHED SELECTION BOARDS

SEC. 6. (a) The estimate furnished by the Secretary of the Navy to line selection boards convened for the consideration of captains, pursuant to section 8 (a) of the act approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 946; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 294), shall show separately the number of vacancies existing in the grade of rear admiral among officers designated for engineering duty only and among officers not so designated, and the number of such vacancies estimated to occur before the end of the next succeeding fiscal year, in excess of the number of officers of each group then on the promotion list.

(b) The statement furnished line selection boards pursuant to section 8 (a) of the act approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 946; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 294), shall include the percentage of engineering duty only officers adjudged fitted for promotion which shall be continued on the active list to meet the immediate requirements of the Navy.

(c) Each line selection board convened for the consideration of captains shall be furnished with the names of all captains eligible for consideration to be designated for retention or continuance on the active list pursuant to this act, in addition to the names of captains eligible for consideration for promotion required to be furnished such board by section 8 (a) of the act approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 946; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 294).

DUTIES OF SELECTION BOARD

SEC. 7. (a) The recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers who are now or may hereafter be designated for engineering duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law: Provided, That no captain designated for engineering duty only shall be eligible for consideration by a selection board for promotion unless the estimate of vacancies furnished that board by the Secretary of the Navy in compliance with section 6 (a) of this act shows one or more vacancies existing or estimated to occur in the grade of rear admiral among officers designated for engineering duty only, but any such captain who is promoted pursuant to the recommendation of the first selection board by which he was considered shall be given in his new commission the same date of rank which has been or in due course will be stated in the commission in such rank of the senior officer below him who was recommended for promotion by the approved report of a selection board which did not consider him because of this proviso: Provided further, That no captain so promoted shall be entitled to increased pay or allowances prior to the date of the vacancy to which promoted.

(b) Officers designated for engineering duty only may be recommended by a line selection board as best fitted for promotion to grades below rear admiral, pursuant to section 9 (a) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 947; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 297a), in addition to the number of estimated vacancies certified to the board by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 8. Each selection board considering captains designated for engineering duty only shall—

(a) From among such captains who have twice failed of selection as best fitted designate by name for retention on the active list in the grade of captain until not later than the end of the next succeeding fiscal year those officers whose fitness, in the opinion of at least six of the members, warrants their retention. Captains so retained shall be ineligible for consideration for recommendation for promotion by subsequent selection boards, but shall be eligible for consideration by such boards for retention on the active list. If not again designated for retention on the active list, they shall be placed on the retired list as provided in section 9 of this act.

(b) When the number of involuntary retirements in any fiscal year pursuant to section 9 (c) of this act would otherwise exceed four, designate by name such excess of officers for continuance on the active list until the end of the next fiscal year: Provided, That such officers shall be ineligible for consideration for recommendation for promotion by subsequent selection boards, but shall be eligible for consideration for continuance on the active list. If not again designated for continuance on the active list, they shall be placed on the retired list as provided in section 9 of this act.

RETIREMENT

SEC. 9. (a) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, each officer in the grade of captain designated for retention on the active list pursuant to section 8 (a) of this act shall be transferred to the retired list on June 30 of the next succeeding fiscal year or on the 1st day of the month following that in which he attains the age of 61 years, whichever shall occur first.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, each officer described in section 8 (a) of this act who is not designated pursuant thereto for retention on the active list shall be transferred to the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which he fails of such designation or on the 1st day of the month following that in which he attains the age of 61 years, whichever shall occur first.

(c) No officer transferred to the grade of captain by section 2 of this act shall be retired pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of this section earlier than 4 years after the date of approval of this act, nor shall more than four such captains thereafter be so retired in any one fiscal year. Such officers who are considered for retention or continuance on the active list pursuant to the provisions of section 8 of this act, and are not designated therefor, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they fail of such designation.

SEC. 10. Officers transferred by this act to the grade of commander of the line whose names are not placed upon the promotion list, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they fail of selection as best fitted the second time or in which they complete 28 years of commissioned service computed as provided in section 3 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 286a), whichever date shall be later: Provided, That any officer retained on the active list pursuant to this section shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by subsequent selection boards.

SEC. 11. Officers transferred by this act to the grade of lieutenant commander or lieutenant of the line shall, at their own request, in lieu of the honorable discharge provided in section 12 (c) of the act approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 948; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 404 (c)), be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they fail of selection as best fitted the second time or in which they complete 21 and 14 years, respectively, of commissioned service computed as provided in section 3 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 286a), whichever date shall be later: Provided, That any officer retained on the active list pursuant to this section shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by subsequent selection boards.

SEC. 12. No officer transferred by this act to the grade of commander or lieutenant commander of the line shall be retired pursuant to section 12 (f) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 950; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 40 (f)), prior to June 30 of the fiscal year in which he completes 30 or 25 years, respectively, of active commissioned service in the Navy.

SEC. 13. Officers transferred to the retired list in conformity with this act shall be entitled to retired pay computed as prescribed in section 12 (b) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 949; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 404 (b)).

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 14. Nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the promotion of officers who have been recommended for advancement on the effective date of this act, except that the provisions of section 11 (b) of the act approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 948; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 300 (b)) shall be applicable in the cases of such officers. When promoted, such officers shall have the date of commission and the precedence which the Secretary of the Navy finds they would have had if such promotion had occurred prior to their transfer.

SEC. 15. Nothing in this act shall operate to reduce the pay and allowances of officers hereby transferred to the line of the Navy below that now authorized for officers of Staff Corps with corresponding rank and service.

SEC. 16. All laws or parts of laws so far as they are inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAAS: On page 12, after line 18, add a new section to be known as section 17:

"SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of officers of the Navy to investigate and report upon all matters concerning the status of line officers designated for specialized duty. The board shall make specific recommendations as to the advisability of establishing a technical staff corps as an adjunct to the line of the Navy, but separate therefrom, such recommendations to include proposed permanent legislation deemed necessary to give effect thereto. The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to cause the report of the board herein authorized to be transmitted to the Congress within 10 days of the beginning of the session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, commencing on or about January 3, 1941."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF NAVAL AVIATORS IN NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10030) increasing the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill seeks to offer a greater inducement to the young men of the country to come into the naval aviation by offering as an inducement that when they come in as flying cadets a certain number of them can be put in the regular Naval Establishment. In addition thereto it offers them a bonus after they have served a certain number of years.

Mr. MAAS. If they do not go into the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If they do not become permanent officers in the Navy.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This would give a chance to the boys who do not graduate from Annapolis to get into naval aviation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right. This bill does not apply to Annapolis at all. This is seeking to take into the aviation personnel boys from the colleges of the country and to put them into the Navy as rapidly as possible.

Mr. RICH. Does this bill come with a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; with a unanimous report; but we have some committee amendments which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] will offer.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the bonus?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The bonus is $500 for each year of enlistment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How does that compare with other bonuses?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the law today he gets $500 under certain conditions and $1,000 under certain conditions. This bonus is a great deal more than the bonus under the law today, but we feel that it is necessary to have this bonus in order to get the personnel we are driving for, which is approximately 16,000 aviators for the Navy.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. IZAC. Will the gentleman state at whose discretion the number will be determined?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. At the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman tell us what academic requirements these cadets must meet? Must they be college graduates?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The requirements are rather high right now. A college course of at least 2 years is required.

Mr. HAWKS. Is that made a requirement in this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; that is done by rules and regulations.

Mr. HAWKS. This bill does not change that requirement?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Naval Aviation Personnel Act of 1940."

SEC. 2. The President of the United States is authorized to appoint to the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as many naval aviators of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserves as he may deem necessary and except as hereinafter provided the authorized number of commissioned officers of the Navy and Marine Corps is increased accordingly. Officers so appointed shall, upon appointment, occupy the same grade, with the same precedence therein, now occupied by them in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve, as the case may be: Provided, That they shall first establish their moral, physical, mental, and professional qualifications in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided further, That officers so appointed shall, on June 30 of the calendar year in which they are appointed, have completed not less than 2 years of continuous active service next following the completion of their duty as aviation cadets undergoing training and shall, on June 30 of the calendar year in which appointed, be less than 26 years of age: Provided further, That during a period of 6 months from the date of approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to waive the foregoing age requirement: And provided further, That during a period of 6 months from the date of approval of this act those naval aviators who have not undergone training as aviation cadets but who have completed 2 or more years of continuous active service in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve immediately preceding the date of approval of this act may also be so appointed regardless of their age. Officers appointed under the authority of this proviso shall, upon appointment, be additional numbers in the grade to which appointed and in any grade to which they may thereafter be promoted.

SEC. 3. Each officer appointed pursuant to this act in the grade of ensign and each officer so appointed in a grade above that of ensign shall, respectively, become eligible for promotion, or for consideration by a line selection board as of the date the line officer next junior to him at the date of appointment becomes so eligible. The qualification of sea service prescribed in section 11 (c) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 948), shall not apply to such officers while in the grade to which originally appointed.

SEC. 4. The increase in the number of commissioned officers herein authorized shall not be counted in any computation made to determine the authorized number of officers in the grades of rear admiral, captain, and commander.

SEC. 5. Sections 6 and 8 of the Naval Aviation Reserve Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 820; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, secs. 849d and 849f) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. When officers commissioned in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve pursuant to the Naval Aviation Reserve Act of 1939 are released from active duty that has been continuous for 1 or more years, they shall be paid a lump sum of $500 for each complete year of active service other than duty as aviation cadets undergoing training and if released from active duty otherwise than upon their own request or as a result of disciplinary action, this lump-sum payment shall be prorated for fractional parts of each year of such service. The lump-sum payments authorized herein shall be in addition to any pay, allowances, compensation, or benefits which they may otherwise be entitled to receive.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to distribute the enlisted personnel of the Marine Corps among the various grades in such numbers as he deems to be to the best interests of the naval service.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 10, strike out "2 years" and insert "18 months."

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I have some amendments to this bill which are at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MAAS: Page 5, line 11, insert, after the words "Title I", the words "by inserting after the words 'commissioned officers', in line 1, page 1177, the words 'exclusive of chief warrant officers.' "

Page 5, line 13, change the semicolon to a comma and add the following: "and by adding the following proviso: 'And provided further, That no chief warrant officer promoted to other commissioned grade or warrant officer promoted to chief warrant officer or other commissioned grade shall suffer any reduction of pay by reason of such promotion.' "

Pages 5 and 6, delete all of subsection 8 (c) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Section 312, title III, delete the second proviso beginning on line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'Provided further, That hereafter all officers of the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve who may be advanced to a higher grade or rank in time of peace or in time of war or national emergency under the provisions of this act, shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates of rank as stated in their commissions, as distinguished from the dates of commission or dates of acceptance of commission, and the dates of rank as stated in their commissions shall be conclusive for all purposes.' "

Page 6, insert, after line 7, a new subsection (e), as follows:

"SEC. 311. In time of peace officers of the Naval Reserve shall take precedence according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That when mobilized with the Regular Navy for war or a national emergency, each officer of the Naval Reserve shall take precedence next after that officer of the Regular Navy of the same rank or grade whose length of service in such rank or grade on the date of the declaration of such national emergency or war is one-half, or the nearest one-half, of that of the Reserve officer: Provided further, That a Naval Reserve officer appointed after the declaration of the war or national emergency shall take precedence, upon report for active duty, next after the officer of the Regular Navy of the same rank or grade whose length of service in such rank or grade on the date the Reserve officer reports for active duty, is one-half, or the nearest one-half, of that of the Reserve officer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMY BANDMASTERS' ACT

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. MAY. This is the bill commonly known as the bandmasters' bill. The House passed the bill, providing for the chief bandmaster of the Army and for bandmasters in different ranks below the chief bandmaster. The principal issue between the House and the Senate on the question was whether or not the chief bandmaster should be ranked as a major or as a captain. The House contended for the captaincy, which was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Is there any politics in this bill? Is the New Deal going to use the bands now? They had better use them now because they will not use them after November.

Mr. MAY. I think possibly they will play Yankee Doodle and Dixie for the gentleman whenever he wishes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell me how many bandmasterships are to be created?

Mr. MAY. The bandmasters are to be appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the approval of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You do not specify the number?

Mr. MAY. No; such number as may be necessary to have one for each of the bands of the Army. They are divided into grades according to length of service, 5 years and less, 5 to 10 years, and from 10 years up. They are ranked as captains for 10 years' service, as first lieutenants for from 5 to 10 years' service, and as second lieutenants for 5 years or less service.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What will be the additional cost to the Treasury?

Mr. MAY. I do not have the exact figures, but the cost will be very slight. It will simply be the increased pay due to the increased rank, where there is an increase.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how does this affect the band at West Point?

Mr. MAY. The bandmaster at West Point will be simply one of the bandmasters included in the number from the chief bandmaster down, and his pay will depend upon his rank, whatever it is. That will be determined by his length of service and his qualifications.

Mr. FISH. They will have the same promotions there as other bandmasters will have?

Mr. MAY. Exactly, and the same retirement pay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That section 6 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'After the date this paragraph takes effect, there shall be a number of commissioned officers, to be known as bandmasters, equal to the number of authorized bands of the Regular Army. Bandmasters shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and there shall be one bandmaster for each such band who shall be the leader thereof in lieu of a warrant officer band leader. The Secretary of War shall select a chief bandmaster from the bandmasters so appointed who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain while so serving, who shall be charged with the duty of administering uniformly the affairs of all authorized bands of the Regular Army, and who shall advise the Secretary of War on all matters relating to the musical organizations in the Regular Army. Bandmasters shall be selected from band leaders in the Regular Army who are found to be physically qualified, and, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe, from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least one year of service in a band of the Regular Army, and from officers in the National Guard of the United States or in the Officers' Reserve Corps. Any bandmaster with service of less than five years shall be entitled to the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement benefits of a second lieutenant; and any bandmaster with service of five years or more shall be entitled to the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement benefits of a first lieutenant: Provided, That in computing such service in the case of any person appointed as a bandmaster all his active service as a band leader in the Regular Army prior to his appointment shall be counted: Provided further, That no person appointed as a bandmaster shall suffer the loss of any pay by reason of the provisions of this paragraph. Any warrant officer band leader who fails to pass the prescribed physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service shall be placed upon the retired list of the Regular Army with 75 per centum of the pay to which he would have been entitled if he had been appointed as a bandmaster as hereinbefore provided.'

"SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, is hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of band leaders who receive commissions as bandmasters in pursuance of the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 3. This act may be cited as the 'Army Bandmasters' Act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill provided that for each United States Army and National Guard band there should be a commissioned officer to be known as the bandmaster, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who would take the place of the present warrant officer band leader. Bandmasters with less than 5 years service were to rank with second lieutenants and bandmasters with service of 5 years or more were to rank with first lieutenants. The bandmasters to be appointed were to be selected from band leaders in the service who were found to be physically qualified or from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians with at least 1 year of service in a Regular Army or National Guard band. Provision was also made that band leaders who fail to pass the physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service should be placed upon the Army retired list with 75 percent of the pay to which they would have been entitled if they had been appointed bandmasters. Bandmasters were to be entitled to the same benefits with respect to pay, allowances, and retirement as apply in the case of commissioned officers in the Army of equivalent rank. Provision was also made for reducing the number of warrant officers authorized by law by the number of band leaders who received commissions as bandmasters and for increasing the number of commissioned officers of the Army to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of the act.

The Senate amendment limited the appointment of bandmasters to the bands of the Regular Army and provided that the Secretary of War should select a chief bandmaster who would have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major while so serving and who would be charged with the duty of administering all authorized Regular Army bands and of advising the Adjutant General on all matters relating to musical organizations in the Regular Army. The Senate amendment also provided that bandmasters with service of from 5 to 10 years should rank with first lieutenants, and bandmasters with service of over 10 years should rank with captains.

The conference agreement retains the provisions of the House bill with respect to the rank of bandmasters, provides that the chief bandmaster shall have the rank of captain and shall advise the Secretary of War instead of the Adjutant General with respect to musical organizations in the Regular Army, and provides also that bandmasters may be appointed from officers in the National Guard or in the Officers' Reserve Corps as well as from warrant officer band leaders, and noncommissioned officers and enlisted men with at least a year's service in a Regular Army band. Clarifying changes have been made in the text.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, now that we have levied back-breaking taxes on the Nation for national defense, I hope this administration will not spend a lot of the money foolishly. I have heard men say 33⅓ percent of it will be wasted. I have here a newspaper clipping saying that the Secretary of Agriculture is going to survey 600,000,000 acres of land in order to analyze and classify it to see what its possibilities are, whether it is eroded, whether it should be tile drained, and so forth, so he can tell the farmers what they ought to plant in order to have everything lined up with our defense program. Now, the fact is the men who own this land know what it will produce and what they ought to plant and whether it is worth farming or not far better than anyone in Washington knows. All the administration needs to do for us farmers is to give us a green light or a go sign and a little assurance of a fair price and we will swamp the country with everything they need without squandering a lot of money. This survey will cost $24,000,000, and will not make the land any more productive; and then to classify it and to contact all of the owners and make recommendations, which, after all, will only be annoying to the farmer, will create thousands of new jobs and cost at least $50,000,000 more. I hope we are not going to penalize the taxpayers of the country by spending money like this. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, that flag has flown back of the Speaker for years and years and this is Flag Day. We ought to celebrate it. It represents peace, honor, and freedom, and has for years, but if we want it to continue to represent that we must do one thing, and that is look after the Treasury of the United States. We are $3,504,000,000 in the red up to June 7 for this year and if we continue on next year with this spending we are going to be close to $7,000,000,000 in the red. This is one of the greatest arms of national defense. A sound Treasury of the United States. That old flag will not fly back of the Speaker in the years to come unless we defend our Treasury and unless we have the Treasury of the United States in good shape. Sound and financially strong. What good will it do our country to have a great lot of battleships or what good will it do to have a lot of airplanes and a great Army unless our Treasury is in good shape. They must be financed. Mr. Speaker, we want to protect it. The American people will do it in November by electing a Republican Congress. They will protect all arms of our Government and make it strong and reliable. So the flag will always fly over the Capitol and on the Speaker's rostrum. [Laughter and applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a copy of a resolution adopted by the Illinois House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLAG DAY

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, today is Flag Day, and I think it no more fitting and proper that we who are charged with the safety and future of our Nation should pause for a moment to determine the present and future of our flag and the country for which it stands. Ours is a great heritage passed on to us by those who gave to the utmost in sacrifice, even to their very lives, so that you and I and the people of this great land might live in peace, prosperity, and security.

Since the war in 1917–18, unfortunately, it has been the will of the people of this country to allow our national defense to be second in consideration and with an idealistic pacifistic view deliberately acquiesced in the deterioration of our protective forces until we find ourselves on the eve of an emergency with our armaments in, to say the least, a very disappointing condition. However, be that as it may, we are now faced with the necessity in overnight attempting to raise our Army and Navy to a point of safety for the country and supply it with the necessary matériel to cope with modern-day methods.

I call upon every man, woman, and child in this great Nation to forget personal selfish desires and inconveniences, and for one and all to make a sacrifice now for the protection of our flag so that it may continue to wave freely over the country we love so much. [Applause.]

FORMER PRESIDENT HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of an editorial from the Los Angeles Daily News dated June 8, and to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I do this to call attention to the article to which I have referred, a reprint of an editorial by Herbert Hoover in a Democratic newspaper in Los Angeles. It is nonpolitical and nonpartisan. I think the article is well worth reading, and I commend it to the attention of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a radio address and also some editorials on national defense.

TOAST TO THE FLAG

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, this is Flag Day, and I have here a toast to the flag written by a newspaper friend of mine, Mr. John J. Daly. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that part of the request.

Mr. HAWKS. Then, Mr. Speaker, in the minute granted me I shall read the verses:

A TOAST TO THE FLAG

(By John Jay Daly)

Here's to the red of it—
There's not a thread of it,
No; nor a shred of it
In all the spread of it
From foot to head,
But heroes bled for it,
Faced steel and lead for it,
Precious blood shed for it,
Bathing it red!

Here's to the white of it—
Thrilled by the sight of it,
Who knows the right of it
But feels the might of it
Through day and night?
Womanhood's care for it
Made manhood dare for it;
Purity's pray'r for it
Keeps it so white!

Here's to the blue of it—
Beauteous view of it
Heavenly hue of it,
Star-spangled dew of it
Constant and true;
Diadems gleam for it,
States stand supreme for it,
Liberty's beam for it
Brightens the blue!

Here's to the whole of it—
Stars, stripes, and goal of it,
Body and soul of it,
O, and the roll of it,
Sun shining through;
Hearts in accord for it
Swear by the sword for it,
Thanking the Lord for it,
Red, white, and blue!

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address by Raymond J. Kelly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include some short editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

KEEP AMERICA OUT OF WAR

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this minute to read the following brief letter from the Reverend Harry Emerson Fosdick, perhaps the most distinguished Protestant clergyman in the United States:

THE RIVERSIDE CHURCH,
New York, N. Y., June 11, 1940.

The Honorable BRUCE BARTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BARTON: I have just finished 8 months of broadcasting over a weekly network of about a hundred stations. In response I have received since last October in the neighborhood of 140,000 letters. These letters come from every part of the United States, from city and town, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, churched and unchurched. I am writing simply to indicate that on the basis of this correspondence, which continued up through the invasion of the Low Countries by the Nazis, my impression is strong that the report of the recent Gallup poll is true, and that over 90 percent of the American people are determined to stay out of this war.

Amid the pressures that must be brought to bear upon you in Washington I sincerely hope that this prevalent sentiment of the great mass of the American people may never be lost sight of. Organized endeavors to get us entangled in the European war are now becoming vocal. They do not, however, I am sure, represent the overwhelming proportion of loyal American citizens, and I wish to bear my testimony to that fact on the basis of this correspondence I have had a large cross-section of the American public.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY E. FOSDICK.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the national-defense revenue bill for 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HAWLEY-SMOOT TARIFF BILL

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this is not only Flag Day, but it is the tenth anniversary of the final agreement on the conference report between the two Houses on the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. I think of this because the flag stands for a living country. Parties go up and down on issues. The tariff bill was one of the causes of the downfall of the Republican Party for the time being. I was one of 15 who voted against it. One hundred Republicans went out of the House that fall. The Hull Reciprocal Trade Treaty Act was passed in 1937 and in the next election about 80 Democrats went out of the House. I voted against it also. What this country needs is a happy medium between too far to the right and too far to the left on trade treaties. I might incidentally say that a year ago this week the charming Queen of England and her husband visited America, but I will not say any more.

AMERICAN CITIZENS FOR FOREIGN ARMIES

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I propose to introduce immediately legislation to do away with any restrictions which prohibit American citizens from fighting in foreign armies under penalty of losing their citizenship.

I feel that those who want to fight should be permitted to do so at their own risk. I want to make it easy and feasible for such prominent interventionists as President Conant of Harvard University, Walter Lippmann, other well-known columnists, newspaper editors, and international bankers to enlist in the French Foreign Legion in order to practice what they preach without involving the American people who are 90 percent in favor of keeping out of foreign wars.

I know of nothing in the existing law that would prevent Dorothy Thompson from driving an ambulance in the war zones as is now being done by many brave young Americans who have already volunteered.

It would be interesting to know what some of these warmongering columnists, editors, college professors, and international bankers did in the last war, and to observe how many interventionists who want us to go to war are beyond the draft age. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a short editorial from one of my newspapers and two comments thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a radio address made by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committee:

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Please consider this my resignation from the Appropriations Committee in order that a new member may be selected and start familiarizing himself with the work, without the 6 months' loss of time that would otherwise occur.

Sincerely yours,

DUDLEY A. WHITE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

TWENTY-FIFTH SESSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR CONFERENCE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 841)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The Congress, by a joint resolution approved June 19, 1934, authorized me to accept membership for the Government of the United States in the International Labor Organization. Pursuant to that authorization, I accepted such membership on behalf of the Government of the United States.

Representatives of this Government and of American employers and American labor attended the twenty-fifth session of the International Labor Conference held at Geneva June 8 to 28, 1939. That conference adopted 4 draft conventions and 10 recommendations, to wit:

The recommendation (No. 57) concerning vocational training;

The draft convention (No. 64) concerning the regulation of written contracts of employment of indigenous workers;

The recommendation (No. 58) concerning the maximum length of written contracts of employment of indigenous workers;

The draft convention (No. 65) concerning penal sanctions for breaches of contracts of employment by indigenous workers;

The recommendation (No. 59) concerning labor inspectorates for indigenous workers;

The recommendation (No. 60) concerning apprenticeship;

The draft convention (No. 66) concerning the recruitment, placing, and conditions of labor of migrants for employment;

The recommendation (No. 61) concerning the recruitment, placing, and conditions of labor of migrants for employment;

The recommendation (No. 62) concerning cooperation between States relating to the recruitment, placing, and conditions of labor of migrants for employment;

The draft convention (No. 67) concerning the regulation of hours of work and rest periods in road transport;

The recommendation (No. 63) concerning individual control books in road transport;

The recommendation (No. 64) concerning the regulation of night work in road transport;

The recommendation (No. 65) concerning the methods of regulating hours of work in road transport;

The recommendation (No. 66) concerning rest periods of professional drivers of private vehicles.

In becoming a member of the International Labor Organization, pursuant to a joint resolution of the Congress approved June 19, 1934, this Government assumed the following undertaking in regard to such draft conventions and recommendations:

Each of the members undertakes that it will, within the period of 1 year at most from the closing of the session of the conference, or if it is impossible owing to exceptional circumstances to do so within the period of 1 year, then at the earliest practicable moment, and in no case later than 18 months from the closing of the session of the conference, bring the recommendation or draft convention before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. (Art. 19 (405), par. 5, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In the case of a federal state, the power of which to enter into conventions on labor matters is subject to limitations, it shall be in the discretion of that government to treat a draft convention to which such limitations apply as a recommendation only, and the provisions of this article with respect to recommendations shall apply in such case. (Art 19 (405), par. 9, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In accordance with the foregoing undertaking, the above-named 4 draft conventions and 10 recommendations are herewith submitted to the Congress with the accompanying report of the Secretary of State and its enclosures, to which the attention of the Congress is invited.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1940.

REPORTS FROM DEPARTMENT OF STATE CONCERNING CONDITIONS IN WAR ZONES

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I present a privileged resolution (H. Con. Res. 76) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman will state it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understand this concurrent resolution brought up in this way is not debatable. I feel it is extremely important as a matter of protection to this country that the Committee on Foreign Affairs should receive the information requested regarding World War conditions in this great international crisis. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the rule be waived and that it may be debated.

The SPEAKER. The matter is debatable unless a motion is made to lay it on the table.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If such a motion is made to lay it on the table, then I would like to make that request before the motion is voted upon, or at least that I may be allowed to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 76

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the information of its Committee on Foreign Affairs, the essential substance of all reports and communications received by him or by the Department of State, from diplomatic sources or otherwise, concerning conditions in war zones in foreign countries and their repercussions upon neutral and nonbelligerent countries, including those within the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Secretary of State may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 13, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: I have received your letter of June 10, 1940, enclosing for my comment copies of House Concurrent Resolution 76 requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the information of its Committee on Foreign Affairs, the essential substance of all reports and communications received by him or by the Department of State, from diplomatic sources or otherwise, concerning conditions in war zones in foreign countries, and their repercussions upon neutral and nonbelligerent countries, including those within the Western Hemisphere."

I am always glad to cooperate with your committee and to provide it with all of the information which I properly can to assist in its work. It is therefore a matter of regret to me that the pending concurrent resolution covers such a wide range and involves research and editorial tasks of such enormousness that it would be practically a physical impossibility for the President to comply with it. In view of the foregoing, I see no reason for the enactment of this resolution.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts and Mr. FISH) there were ayes 85 and noes 55.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts objects to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 213, nays 147, not voting 71, as follows:

UNITED STATES DE SOTO EXPOSITION COMMISSION

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report, which was read, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered printed.

House Resolution 526 (Rept. No. 2558)

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill, H. R. 9751, with Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table to the end that all Senate amendments be, and the same are hereby, agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 517.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 517

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9958, a bill to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York desire any time in opposition to the rule?

Mr. FISH. I will need the time generally allotted to the minority, with the gentleman's kind permission.

Mr. SABATH. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am indeed gratified that today at least the gentlemen on the left, my Republican friends, will not be able to charge that this is a closed or harsh rule. This is a broad and liberal rule providing for 2 hours of general debate, after which the bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule.

The bill which this resolution makes in order gives the Reconstruction Finance Corporation certain additional powers and makes it possible for them to purchase from the Home Loan Bank Corporation, a corporation owned by the United States, certain of its stock, or certificates, or receipts; and in return with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to sell such stock to the Corporation.

Section 2 authorizes the Corporation to make payments from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury. I know of no one who will object to that. Under the bill the Federal Loan Administrator will have the right to act, again with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but cannot reduce the amount provided by law for its capital.

The Corporation shall retire its capital stock and pay dividends under the preceding paragraph, and shall purchase the stock of the Federal home-loan bank under section 304 in an amount not to exceed $300,000,000.

The third paragraph of section 5 is also amended by striking out the $350,000,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $500,000,000.

The main provision in this bill, however, is the authorization that is given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to organize new corporations. It reads as follows:

SEC. 5. Section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 15, sec. 606b), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"The Corporation is authorized to create or to organize a corporation or corporations with such powers as it may deem necessary to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program, when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President, and to subscribe for the nonassessable stock thereof, and to make loans to any such corporation or to any other corporation to assist in such program. Such loans may be made for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials and other raw materials, for plant construction, expansion, and equipment, and for working capital, and may be made on such terms and conditions and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine.

"Any corporation created or organized by the Corporation under the preceding paragraph is also authorized, with the approval of the President, to make payments against the purchase price to be paid for strategic and critical materials in advance of the delivery of such materials. Whenever practicable, the Corporation may require the payments so made to be used for purchases of raw or manufactured agricultural commodities to be exported from the United States."

It seems to me this is a power similar to that which was given to the War Finance Corporation during 1917. Everybody who is familiar with the activities of that corporation knows that the War Finance Corporation really had profits when it concluded its activities.

In my opinion this authorization to create corporations for the purpose of aiding the Government is justified and will be in the interest of our defense, and will, in addition thereto, help in many instances smaller manufacturers or corporations that are willing to aid the Government but which have not sufficient capital. I am satisfied, therefore, that this legislation is a step in the right direction. I know that within a short space of time the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency will more thoroughly explain the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Rules, unfortunately having so many bills and resolutions before that committee, is unable completely and thoroughly to digest each and every one of them. He must of necessity depend on members of the committees who have held hearings and devoted a great deal of time and study to the respective bills to explain them.

I hope in view of the fact that this is nearly a unanimous report of that hard-working committee that we will not needlessly use all of the time the special rule provides. I myself shall not use the 30 minutes, and I hope the gentleman from New York will at this time forego his usual pleasure in trying to find fault with the administration and everything the President is attempting and aiming to do in the interest of the country. I will say this, in the last few weeks especially, the Democratic leadership and the Democratic Members have desired to expedite the business of the House and have foregone answering many of the unjustifiable and unwarranted attacks that have been made on the administration and on the program of the President.

Every once in awhile it is stated by some gentlemen—I know they do not believe it—that the President desires to force us into war. I know that personally they feel that the President is performing his duty as a loyal American citizen who desires to keep us out of war. Unfortunately, however, in other respects, some of these gentlemen on the other side never lose an opportunity to inject politics. I had hoped that you gentlemen on the other side, in the interest of our Nation and in bringing about the early completion of the national defense, would desist from these unnecessary attacks and I hope that the few words I have said may help to bring that about.

I myself regret that I am obliged to call attention to this, but I am doing it with the feeling that we are nearly through with legislation for this session. As you know, we formerly adjourned around March 4 and we invariably completed all the needed legislation by that time. This is now the middle of June, and we have been at it now nearly every day. All of the legislation practically is out of the way, and I feel it is unnecessary for us to remain here the entire summer.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. The Secretary of the Treasury, before the Committee on Ways and Means, stated that on February 28, 1941, the borrowing capacity under the present limit would be completely exhausted and the working balance of the Treasury would be $600,000,000, provided there was recovered from Government corporations $700,000,000 of invested capital. This is the bill, is it not, which contemplates recovering that $700,000,000?

Mr. SABATH. I believe that is correct. That is the aim of this legislation.

Mr. McLEAN. If this $700,000,000 is recovered, the deficit of expenditures over normal receipts for the year will be approximately $1,876,000,000.

Mr. SABATH. It will be reduced by the $700,000,000 that is aimed to be recovered by receiving a refund from these corporations and I believe the amount will be as the gentleman has stated, because invariably he is well posted and I am one of those who are willing to rely on his statements.

Mr. McLEAN. These corporations that it is proposed to organize—are they to be incorporated under State law? If that is so, what State, and why?

Mr. SABATH. Personally, I cannot answer that question, but I presume they will be organized in the same manner as all the other organizations that have been organized have been incorporated heretofore. I think the matter is in the hands of a splendid gentleman. It is under the supervision of the Federal Loan Administrator, who is an expert in that line, and he has demonstrated his ability and efficiency to serve the country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this bill will recapture $700,000,000?

Mr. SABATH. About that amount; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not believe the gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. SABATH. I myself have not made that statement, but I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from New Jersey, and, as I stated before, it is humanly impossible for me to familiarize myself with every provision of each bill that comes before the Rules Committee and on which a rule is granted. I am trying to give the House all the information I have been able to digest in the short space of time that invariably is mine in reporting rules.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman will find this bill provides for the recapture of approximately $300,000,000 and an additional $400,000,000 will have to come from some other source not covered by this bill.

Mr. SABATH. I think there is one provision involving $100,000,000, another provision involving $300,000,000, and there is still another that will make it possible to recapture $700,000,000 in all, but I will leave the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency to give you the correct figure.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to delay the House, but I feel in honor bound to call attention to one matter that has been annoying me for some time. During the last few weeks I have been obliged to object once or twice to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Montana to insert in the RECORD something which he claimed were his own remarks. It is the first time in the 34 years I have been here that I objected to anyone's unanimous-consent request. I hope it will not be necessary in the future, and that the gentleman will desist from putting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD matters that create prejudice and resentment—matters that assail a people who are undeserving of the attacks that have been made against them.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman state why he objected?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I will state it. You put in the RECORD so many abuses coming to you, I regret to say, from sources—

Mr. THORKELSON. Why do you not prove those abuses? Every remark I put in the RECORD is authenticated and documented.

Mr. SABATH. I will answer the gentleman. He has asked me a question and I will answer it.

Mr. THORKELSON. If you will show me the common courtesy of answering those remarks correctly I will appreciate it.

Mr. SABATH. There is not a scintilla of truth in most of the charges that the gentleman has made. He has put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. THORKELSON. I put the facts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and you know it.

Mr. SABATH. More stuff than any 10 Members. You have put 7 different extensions in the RECORD in the last 3 days, taking up 28 columns of space, or 14 full pages, at a cost to the taxpayers of $45 a page, or a total of $630. For 3 days! He has used 447 full columns of space so far in this Congress, at a cost to the people of more than $10,000 for printing alone, to say nothing of the cost to the Government in carrying this franked matter through the mails free.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman's remarks taken down.

Mr. SABATH. I felt these inserts are unjustifiable and unwarranted. They are not founded on facts. You cannot substantiate any of them—I think you should desist—taken from Nazi elements who are feeding you with that stuff.

Mr. THORKELSON. What is a Nazi element?

Mr. SABATH. I am not going to argue with you.

Mr. THORKELSON. I demand that the remarks be taken down. I want the gentleman to prove what he has said. I resent being called a Nazi by this gentleman here. I want those remarks taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state what words he objects to.

Mr. THORKELSON. I object to the remarks that he made in regard to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana will have to be more specific as to the exact words to which he objects.

Mr. THORKELSON. By inference the gentleman states that I am a Nazi. I want him to prove those assertions, and I want every man who makes such statements to prove them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana will have to be more specific as to the words to which he objects. Will the gentleman state the words to which he objects?

Mr. THORKELSON. I object to that material going into the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. What material? What words?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may we have the record read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana will indicate what words he wants taken down.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I want the words that he stated here on the floor taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the words demanded to be taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

I feel these inserts are unjustifiable and unwarranted. They are not founded on facts. You cannot substantiate any of them—I think you should desist—taken from Nazi elements who are feeding you with that stuff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sees nothing in these words that is a reflection upon the gentleman except that part of the last sentence which reads "taken from Nazi elements who are feeding you with that stuff." The Chair holds that the objection made by the gentleman from Montana to those remarks is well taken.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to withdraw that language and proceed in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but this reminds me of a little story, and I think I will be justified in telling it. A certain judge had a witness before him who, being excited on cross-examination, told a lawyer that had tried to put words in his mouth that he was lying. He said, "Well, you are a liar." For this the judge found him guilty of contempt. The man paid the fine, and then asked the judge, "Judge, I am paying the fine. Now, I want to know whether a man has a right to think in this court." The judge said, "Yes; you have a right to think." "Well, I still thing he is a liar." [Laughter.]

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I demand that those words be taken down. I want a clean retraction. I want a retraction of the statement he has made by implication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the words taken down. I ask to have the statement taken down that the gentleman made just a while ago by implication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the words demanded to be taken down.

Mr. SABATH. I think his request is as ridiculous as the articles that he puts in the RECORD.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request that the remarks be taken down, because I do not believe they are worth recording.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, that will have to be done by unanimous consent, and I object, and, Mr. Speaker, I demand recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] rise?

Mr. DINGELL. The remarks of the gentleman cannot now be withdrawn without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make that as a point of order?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a few minutes before I took the floor, my attention was called to an extension of remarks in this morning's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the gentleman from Montana entitled, "Reply to My Revilers." He takes up six columns of space with a lot of nonsense.

The gentleman rants about the accuracy and authenticity of his extension speeches, and says that none of his statements have ever been disproved. I do not know what the gentleman considers the word "disproved" to mean.

I call attention to my remarks concerning the gentleman that appeared in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 3006. I ask any colleague who is interested to look up those remarks and then judge for himself the character of the much-boasted "authenticity" of his documents. The gentleman had, on October 11, 1939, inserted in the RECORD under "leave to print," a letter purporting to have been written by Col. E. M. House, closest confidant and adviser of Woodrow Wilson throughout the World War, to the British Prime Minister, Lloyd George. In this letter Colonel House was placed in the position of carrying on a secret conspiracy to turn the American colonies to Great Britain. Every detail of the "conspiracy" was described. Of course, the letter was later proved to be a rank forgery, but the gentleman from Montana had the gall and audacity to try to convince Congress that it was genuine. He apparently would still like to have his reading public believe the letter was genuine, for in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—page 3841—he says, referring to my own remarks:

> He refers to the so-called House letter, which I have already said is a part of the Geneva hearings of the Senate. * * * This proves the substance matter of the letter.

Now read this illuminating bit of information in his yesterday's extension of remarks:

> The letter appears in the hearings without signature, but is a part of the permanent records of Congress.

Appears in the hearing without signature! Note that. But when the gentleman from Montana placed it before Congress it had a signature, the forged signature of Col. E. M. House, which he tried his best to make Congress think was a genuine signature.

Yet the gentleman has the gall to say:

> I defy anyone to find one paragraph, sentence, or word in any of my remarks that are not in the strictest accord with the fundamental principles of this Republic as set forth in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I have never charged that the gentleman from Montana is a Nazi. I said that he inserts material in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under leave to print that is similar—very similar—to the type of material that is used by the Nazi propagandists, and that it has the same effect. The effect is to arouse racial hatreds, to poison the people's mind against the Jewish race, and that is the identical kind of propaganda that Hitler used in Austria, Holland, Belgium, and that he is using in Mexico and South America and Central America.

Just what the gentleman from Montana thinks of the murderer Hitler and nazi-ism, I do not profess to know. But the following colloquy between the gentleman from Montana and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] on June 11 would seem to indicate that he is not 100 percent sure just where he does stand as to nazi-ism:

> Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman grant that the Nazi Government is at cross-purposes with our Government?
> Mr. THORKELSON. I presume it is; I don't know, because we have not declared war on Germany.

Mr. Speaker, the inserts of the gentleman are not only unjustifiable but appear to me to be willfully and deliberately inserted lying Nazi accusations against the Jewish people. The gentleman from Montana objects to be classed as a Nazi, and the fact is, I repeat, that I did not charge him with being a Nazi. I merely said the inserts in the RECORD were Nazi-inspired. By that I mean he must have been inspired by the Nazi propaganda that has come to him that seems to have poisoned his mind. That is the policy of the Nazi propagandists.

I fully appreciate the advice of nearly all of the Members that I should not dignify his accusations with an answer, but should ignore them. Unfortunately, however, many people read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD whose minds might be prejudiced, and, I fear, some may already have become prejudiced. It is to that end, and for that reason, that he should desist in his unfair attacks and abuse of his privilege in overloading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with this scurrilous material.

Not only that but these insertions have been reprinted by the hundreds of thousands and mailed out under a franked envelope by a Nazi organization—free of postage—and even by this man Winrod, of Wichita, Kans., who conducted his campaign for Governor on this contemptible Nazi issue. Furthermore, the gentleman from Montana boastfully inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech which he delivered in New York City to the Christian Mobilizers. Taking everything into consideration, I cannot help but feel that his actions are strengthening the "fifth column" which to my mind is aided, yes, financed by the Nazi forces. The country should know that Fritz Kuhn, Collins Ross, Joe McWilliams, and many others also have denied Nazi connections, but the investigation has proven otherwise, and there are many other Fritz Kuhns not in jail who are carrying out the Hitler-Nazi plans. You must have read frequently of the activities of the bunds in New York City, Chicago, in the State of New Jersey, and in other places, and just a few days ago you must have observed in the press of their activities in Texas and Mexico and, only today, a Washington paper carried the following:

> NAZI PROPAGANDA CHIEF ORDERED OUT OF MEXICO
> MEXICO CITY, June 14.—Foreign Minister Eduardo Hay announced yesterday that Arthur Dietrich, press attaché of the German Legation and director of Nazi propaganda in Mexico, had been asked to leave the country because his activities are "considered prejudicial to the interests of our nation."
> Hay said the German Legation had been informed that the 40-year-old Dietrich, brother of Adolf Hitler's press chief, no longer was persona grata to the Mexican Government.
>
> An official in the Mexican Government press department acknowledged "this is only the beginning" of a drive against "fifth column" propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, it became necessary in the Panama Canal Zone to investigate the Nazi followers gathering there.

I also wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that what I predicted in my speech of March 18, 1938, as to the program of the Nazis was not overstated, and I feel that Nazi "fifth column" activities are even greater in the South American republics, because today my attention was called to the evidence presented to the House Committee on Indian Affairs showing that Nazi activities among our own Indians are rampant. Further newspaper reports give account of the propaganda carried on in Peru and Bolivia, in which countries the majority of population is Indian. At the same time one also reads of the Nazi activities in other South American countries, where there has been a steady influx of Nazis.

I am calling attention to these subversive activities in our midst because I believe it is my solemn duty to do so, and I shall continue my efforts whenever I feel it necessary to direct attention to those whom I feel guilty of subversive activities in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I am exceedingly sorry that this has required so much time. I did not expect it to, and I shall conclude my remarks by urging and asking that a favorable vote be had on the rule. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am fearful, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] carries out his promise to continue his feud with the gentleman from Montana, we may be in session until next December. [Laughter.]

I had proposed to take only 2 or 3 minutes to say that I believe the rule is fair and that this important measure should be carefully considered by the House of Representatives.

My distinguished friend, the chairman of the Rules Committee, however, advised the House that we should adjourn almost immediately——

Mr. SABATH. Not immediately.

Mr. FISH. Not immediately, but next week. My idea about that is that the Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, should not desert their post of duty in this national emergency, and that those who proceed to desert their post or want to go home now will probably be kept home by their own constituents. [Applause.]

The gentleman further said, I think, possibly, referring to me, that I might try to find fault with the President. I want to assure you that that is the easiest possible thing for me to do. I do not even have to try at all.

Mr. SABATH. You are an expert.

Mr. FISH. I am an expert at it, it comes naturally and very easily, but I am not going to indulge in it, although the gentleman did defend the President and assure the House that the President was not in favor of going to war. I wish the gentleman spoke directly for the President, and I wish I could believe one-half of that statement. I do believe this, in all fairness to the Democratic Members of the House, that 90 percent of them are opposed to entering into any foreign wars unless this country is attacked by some foreign foe. On the other hand, I believe that under the leadership of your President the Democratic Party is the war party in the United States and that he is rapidly leading us into war.

Now, you ask me to give some evidence—or I assume that is what you are going to ask me—and I present as exhibit A one of your main New Deal newspapers, the Philadelphia Record. It is 101 percent New Deal—correct? I bought a copy of it the other day. You have to read something on the train, so I bought this New Deal paper to see what is going on. I do not get very near the White House these days. There was an editorial in it, covering one-third of the first page, headed "We are in—we are in the war." This was a New Deal paper saying we are already in the war I do not believe it, because I have faith in Congress, and I also have faith in the Democratic Members of the Congress, and I know they will not vote to put us in the war, in spite of the President.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I think I have said enough for the time being, but in view of what the chairman of the Rules Committee said I could not pass this over and confine myself entirely to the rule.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I would just like to tell the distinguished gentleman that there is not much difference between the editorials of the Philadelphia Record and the editorials of the Philadelphia Inquirer, which is a very strong pro-Republican paper.

Mr. FISH. That paper is utterly disowned by the Republican Party. It has changed its policy recently and the gentleman knows the reasons, but they are somewhat personal. Is not this the newspaper that is owned by Moe Annenberg, now under indictment for tax frauds?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Is it not a fact that this 103-percent New Deal paper, the Philadelphia Record, is owned by David Stern, a multimillionaire New Deal liberal—liberal with other people's money—and the Philadelphia Inquirer is owned by Moses L. Annenberg, a multimillionaire notorious tax dodger, who is also liberal with other people's money? When it comes to spending other people's money these two multimillionaire newspaper owners and publishers are about as liberal as our multimillionaire New Deal President and his multimillionaire Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is an expert in these matters and knows what he is talking about. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

I believe the Members who voted against House Concurrent Resolution 76 will regret they thereby have prevented vital facts from being given to the Congress.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is not that vote turning down my resolution asking for essential information regarding conditions in war zones in foreign countries and their repercussions in the Western Hemisphere, and upon neutral and nonbelligerent countries, a sign that the leadership of the House does not want the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee to know what is going on. It is vital that we have the most complete information in the committee that first acts upon our foreign policy. We have had few meetings of the Foreign Affairs Committee this year and very little information has been brought by the committee. We have to seek our information elsewhere. The Foreign Affairs Committee should be our first line of defense if we are to protect our flag properly.

Mr. FISH. The lady from Massachusetts is completely correct. We have had far too much secret diplomacy under the New Deal administration.

Mr. Speaker, I confess that when legislation comes to this House from Mr. Jesse Jones, the very able Administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I am inclined to go along with him, just as I am inclined to go along with this legislation. I am not sure that it is needed now. I think the original purpose of the legislation was to get around the $45,000,000,000 debt limit, so that $300,000,000 could be made available by the R. F. C. to the Treasury Department in order to obviate raising the debt limit.

However, that is past now, because the debt limit has been raised, and probably that part of the bill is not needed. I do believe, however, and I want to go on record in saying so, that Mr. Jesse Jones is an able and experienced administrator, and that he has made a remarkable record in the handling of billions of dollars of the people's money. I think when bills of this kind come here with his recommendation—and that is the reason that this bill is here and I doubt if it would be here if it were not for his recommendation—it ought to be given very careful consideration and attention by all Members of the House on a nonpartisan basis. [Applause.]

I yield 18 minutes to the distinguished member of the Banking and Currency Committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have heard such a remarkable explanation of this bill that I hardly think I can add anything to it.

Behold how the picture changes. The Budget message sent in the first of this year gave assurance that the Treasury could recover $700,000,000 of money from so-called Government corporations, and that that would suffice to prevent raising the debt limit, or it was so implied. This bill provides for the recapture of $400,000,000, as far as you may understand it, although additional borrowing power is granted, so that they could possibly furnish the Treasury with more funds. This bill came before our committee with the express understanding that it would be passed to obviate raising the debt limit. The bill was reported to the committee some time ago. Since that time we have increased the debt limit $4,000,000,000. I quote from the hearings:

Mr. WOLCOTT. Would this bill be necessary if we increased the debt limit?
Mr. JONES. I don't think any of it would be necessary if we increased the debt limit.
Mr. WOLCOTT. You would not be here asking for it if we increase the debt limit?
Mr. JONES. I think that may be assured.

If I can read a man's mind, Mr. Jones does not now want you to pass this bill that is, those portions of it wherein we avoid increase of the debt limit by depriving him of his capital. In fact, from a conversation this morning, I understand that the head of the new Board, Mr. Stettinius, is already in conference with Mr. Jones, and is probably depending on the R. F. C. for large amounts of money. There are but five sections to this bill. The first section allows the R. F. C. to buy the stock of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to the extent of about $125,000,000 from the Treasury. This simply provides the Treasury with money. I think the R. F. C. might sell this stock, if they desired, and get their money back again. Mr. Jones says it will be profitable for the R. F. C. to purchase because the stock pays more interest than he has to pay for money, so that he does not object. Recently the R. F. C. borrowed money as low as 1 percent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this morning in a conference notice was served on Mr. Jones by Mr. Stettinius that the R. F. C. would be called upon for heavy loans?

Mr. GIFFORD. I said that a conversation I had this morning implied that to me; that they were, or had been, in conference, and that to me implied using this fund. But I do not think Mr. Jones wants the first sections of this bill now. He so impressed me. It is well to keep that in mind. I think some Democratic member of the committee ought to call him by telephone. You should ask him directly whether or not he would like to have this enacted or not in view of the fact that we have increased the debt limit by $4,000,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hold in my hand today's issue of the Journal of Commerce, of New York. On the third page I find this language:

JONES FOR PRIVATE FINANCING—INDUSTRIES TO BE LOOKED TO FOR SELF-FINANCING AND PLANT EXPANSION

At his press conference today Federal Loan Administrator Jesse H. Jones said he thought a great deal of the defense program would and should be financed privately, and that this was particularly true with respect to the providing of working capital. "The present lending authority of the Federal Loan Agency is adequate to take care of all the industrial needs that will arise under the defense program," Mr. Jones stated.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am limited for time. Will the gentleman take that up later, because I am relying upon the gentleman to take care of section 5 in his remarks.

Section 2 of the bill provides for $300,000,000 to be returned to the Treasury by buying in capital stock and surrendering a part of the earnings; but the joker in that section is it shall not reduce the borrowing power of the R. F. C. They have had to protect themselves there. This proves the inadvisability of this section.

Section 3 simply increases the amount that can be loaned to railroads. There is no objection to that. It probably is necessary.

It prolongs the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation some years. That is undoubtedly necessary.

Section 4 ought to interest every friend of the farmer in this House. Of its capital stock the Secretary wants to take $100,000,000 from the Federal Farm Mortgage Association. Every man knows that will be needed and ought to stay there. They know huge losses are bound to be met. It is not sensible; but they have put a joker in that section, in that it shall remain available whenever they should want it.

I will not take the time at the moment, but I am going to comment upon the Treasury method of financing, showing that all the funds are in one basket, although carried on the books for various purposes. When more money is needed, they have to find it by borrowing. They can never know possibly how much they are to need at a given time. They are pleading not only for these funds but for the $4,000,000,000 they have already been granted, that the Treasury may have at hand a plentiful supply of money. It is the first line of defense. They can use any money labeled "defense money," and they ought to. I shall comment on that in my extension of remarks.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The only reason they want to take over this money from the various corporations is to try to patch up the Treasury situation to avoid letting the public know how insolvent they are?

Mr. GIFFORD. It is only an election scheme. Can anybody deny it? It is to get by November without raising the debt limit. That was the original intention. Now the $4,000,000,000 has been authorized and we do not need to do this. A great Senator in another body calls this the juggling bill, and he is a Democratic Senator. We all know it is a juggling bill. It is funny business. Let us grant to the R. F. C. any special powers needed, but not take away from them any funds at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I would like to make this observation: Senate Resolution 150, known as the Byrd report, shows as of June 1939 the losses of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to be $82,408,464.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. We understand that the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation met with great losses. This $100,000,000 should never be taken from them. They agree to it because it will supposedly be available at any time they want it. Why take it and then later, after election, give it back? I am critical of this Treasury bookkeeping and such information as is given to the public. I have so many times called your attention to it. It seems to go unheeded. But you remember in the 1936 campaign how your President went over the country telling about the $6,000,000,000 assets which we had, which appeared simply on the books. Immediately upon the opening of the Congress in 1937 we had to mark off two and one-half billion dollars of worthless securities. Did not the President know about this? How could he help but know it? Mr. Hoover answered him by striking him out nine times, if you will remember, but the public paid little attention to it. The adulation of personalities in this Nation of ours overcomes all reason relating to finances or anything else. I do not know what we can do to arouse our people to the condition which the Treasury may be in. Again I trust you will read the further remarks I will extend along this line.

In this report—it is a strange thing and perhaps they will explain it—that under article 5 many corporations may be set up by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase strategic materials that may be necessary for matters of defense. Not one corporation, but many; and we had hearings on that and we on the minority side tried to amend the section. This testimony does not appear in the hearings. Why did you not print it in the hearings for the benefit of the House and that we ourselves might review our arguments on that matter? That, however, will be taken up very fully by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] a little later.

It may be wise to form these corporations, but somebody will ask when they read that we are to advance 25 percent in order to get strategic materials, "Are we going to advance it to foreign nations?" Nearly all this sort of legislation has resulted from the great confidence we have had in Mr. Jesse Jones. Now we see where he was summoned. He was requested to come to the rescue of the Treasury by scheming things so that his party could get by the election. And even Jesse Jones has to submit to the will of his President. I wish some of you gentlemen would go to a telephone and ask Mr. Jones if he would not prefer that we did not pass this legislation. He says that $500,000,000 capital is not now needed to carry on, because he can borrow six and six-tenths times the amount of his capital stock. Not that exactly, because we asked him how much he really could borrow. He said that it was impossible to tell at any given time, because every time we instruct him to capitalize something or to lend something we specify that it shall not interfere with his borrowing power but that it should be increased in like amount.

Do we want a capitalization of $500,000,000 to carry some $3,500,000,000? I hardly think we do; I hardly think he wants to. O gentlemen, it is so plain to see why it is done. The $4,000,000,000 has already been granted. This is no longer necessary. Let me read you some facts. The actual debt limit as estimated by the Treasury is $45,612,000,000. The debt on May 28 was $42,439,000,000. This leaves a surplus of $3,172,000,000. There should be added to this the proposal by the President to recapture $700,000,000 from Government corporations. Then you would have plenty of money. You would have enough money to enable you to spend from $4,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 in excess of revenue before the present debt limit should be raised. We have now raised the debt limit by $4,000,000,000 under the title of defense. When it comes into the Treasury it will be there in the general funds, like the social-security funds. It will be used. It may be earmarked for certain purposes and declared available. But it is not within the realm of my imagination to believe that this $700,000,000 can now be needed. You cannot spend that money within the year, even though you are very good at spending money quickly. This bill is very simple. There are but five provisions in it. Do not get confused. It is not difficult to understand. It provides for the purchase of the stock of the Federal home-loan bank. That is No. 1. Soon the Federal home-loan stock will all be owned by private banks or individuals. The Government was not supposed to own it for a great length of time. This was a Hoover set-up. The home-loan bank was created when the Republicans were in power.

Next is the $300,000,000 that we should provide the Treasury, but must increase the borrowing power of the R. F. C. I regret that you do not get the full benefit of the discussion in the committee, because some of it is not in the report. I shall extend my remarks because I do not want to take more time, but I do wish some of you would do me the honor of reading in the extension of those remarks the statements regarding the Federal Treasury. I think they are opportune.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand that this bill provides $700,000,000 which is to go into the Treasury to reduce the deficit of the fiscal year. The Secretary of the Treasury before the Committee on Ways and Means on the 31st day of May, or his assistants, testified that the anticipated expenditures over normal receipts for the fiscal year will amount to $1,876,000,000 less anticipated recovery of anticipated funds from general Government agencies of $700,000,000, making an anticipated deficit to be financed by borrowing of $1,706,000,000. There are Treasury obligations to be met as of February 21 which will result in the borrowing power being fully exhausted and the working balance being reduced to $600,000,000—and this is assuming that the anticipated return of $700,000,000 of capital from Government agencies is realized. By charging the normal expenses of the maintenance of the Army and the Navy to the special defense fund as is proposed that will relieve the Treasury, and by this feat of financial legerdemain, using funds provided for the national-defense emergency for general purposes, will provide the Treasury with $1,040,000,000 of working capital, and the recovery of this amount will not be of so much importance as it was before the national-defense emergency arose.

Mr. GIFFORD. I ask the gentleman not to take any more of my time. Returns under this tax bill will be used for ordinary purposes of government. The picture has completely changed. The debt limit has been raised $4,000,000,000. There is now no necessity for this bill.

Time marches on. Before this bill could be presented another bill was passed carrying provisions far exceeding the original purposes of this one. The President's Budget message, contemplating repayment by Government corporations of some seven hundred millions to obviate the necessity of increasing the debt limit, was considered by the committee and is now before you.

But already a bill has been enacted in the House, raising the debt limit by $4,000,000,000. You will ask, "Is this bill now necessary?" It will be argued that the other legislation simply provided for national defense. Is it possible that during the next fiscal year such a vast sum can be wisely spent? It has been clearly shown that large amounts to be raised under the new tax bill will be used for ordinary expenses. Shall we now juggle the accounts of these agencies and allow these seven hundred millions to be used temporarily? You will note by the provisions of the bill that they must still be available to these corporations if, and when, needed. Treasury bookkeeping is little understood. The public has been misled by those in high places. In the campaign of 1936 the President himself assured the people that we had assets of six billions. The books and reports to the public so indicated. But at the very next session of the Congress we were asked to charge off more than two and one-half billions of securities at one stroke. The Treasury held the notes of the R. F. C. for this amount in full knowledge that it represented cash paid out for relief and other nonrecoverables. The public was deliberately deceived. The Treasury cannot, and does not, keep cash on hand even for earmarked appropriations. The money is all in one basket. The books, however, show these liabilities for these special appropriations, and when cash is needed the Treasury must provide it. If receipts are not enough, borrowings must be resorted to. Social security and all other trust funds are spent as received, although credits are placed on the books. The money received from the issuance and sale of bonds is used for any purpose. Vast commitments of expenditures steadily demanding payments must make it impossible for the Treasury to know at a given time what amount may be needed on hand.

Small wonder Mr. Morgenthau pleads that the stabilization fund, the increase in the debt limit, and the temporary calling in of this seven hundred millions are necessary. How he must dread the fateful hour when sales resistance may be met in the disposal of our debt certificates. At the moment a great surplus of idle money, and the present patriotic appeal will postpone this event. Probably the Government may rely on the supposition that because banks and insurance companies already hold such huge amounts, they will, in sheer self-defense, see to it that our bonds appear, at least, to be good investments and will not allow a surplus to be placed on the market.

It is not a pleasant picture. The Treasury is, indeed, our first line of defense, and any portion of so-called defense money must and will be used to support it. The people should be fully informed at all times as to the real condition of the Treasury. No apparent audits seem to be made and vast sums constantly appear in the reports as real assets, which are often worthless, although carried on the books at face value. Many times have I presented this to the Congress. It is claimed that congressional action is needed before these securities can be audited and marked down. I do not believe this to be necessary. As I recall it, the R. F. C. requested the Congress to mark off the two and one-half billions so that they might no longer pay interest to the Treasury. That fiction might have been carried on indefinitely. If the Republican Party comes into power and I still am here and on the Expenditures Committee, I can promise an audit of many securities now carried at face value and I think results would be astonishing. How long will these corporate devices be able to borrow money at 2 percent and even 1 percent and loan at 4 to 5 percent, thereby mopping up their huge losses? Even the H. O. L. C. boasts that their great losses, known to everyone, will be met by this difference in interest and classed as profit. Borrowing from one class at 1 percent and loaning to another class of citizens at 4½ percent. Such is the Government's policy at the moment. It cannot go on indefinitely. Already our institutions realize they have a disproportionate amount of one kind of security in their portfolios.

Mr. Morgenthau now insists that the new issues of four billions will not be tax-exempt—I wish him luck. We will watch the eagerness of the public to buy them and the rate of interest granted to insure their sale.

These remarks are made as germane to this bill in this contemplated transfer to the Treasury. It has been termed by experts as "the juggling bill." Read line 8 on page 2 of the bill, line 1 on page 3, line 14 on page 4. Why take these funds if they must still remain available and also replenish the capital stock of the R. F. C. when needed later? It may be called a hocus-pocus proceeding, originally contemplated only to postpone raising the debt limit in an election year. No one can venture to dispute that statement. Let us consider now the advisability of amending this bill by striking out sections 1, 2, and 4, since the tremendous sum of four billions has already been granted. Under the provisions of section 5 the R. F. C. should need the funds already at hand and not be obliged to call on the Treasury later. Their borrowing power supposedly has a limit. It should come as a distinct shock to the Nation to learn to what extremes this administration would resort to temporarily juggle these accounts, simply to get by an election. Attempt to fool the people once again. Do the people know of the direct misrepresentations made to them in the campaign of 1936?

How convenient a time to raise the debt limit in the name of national defense.

Will Democratic oratory suffice to mislead them again as to the real state of their country's assets? Will a pied piper again lead them to the very brink of financial disaster? People may not always be willing to loan money to the authority having the power to tax them for payment of both principal and interest. Who said, "Many nations have been foundered on the rocks of loose fiscal policy"? Where has he led them? But do they know it? Perhaps the only way to tell them will be to find a pied piper of equal ability to make them listen and turn back on the road to a safer route which will not be labeled "spending into prosperity." Once before we used the old illustration, "You can't drink yourself sober." Let us hope the drunken orgy of adulation of such leadership has spent itself and that full realization of their present financial plight may come to our people and that they will demand a full accounting.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to yield time to the gentleman and I yield him an additional 2½ minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, apparently there is no opposition to the rule, nor should there be, because at this time certainly the House wants to consider seriously every proposal that is made to it to strengthen our national defense. I want at the outset to express the opinion that many others have expressed in the Well of this House that our Government is fortunate in having the services of Mr. Jesse Jones, and to express the hope that his power and authority will not be impaired during the development of this important defense program.

I am not going to discuss the first four sections of the bill at all, but I would like to direct attention to the language contained in section 5, found on page 4 of the bill. The opening part of the paragraph provides for the setting up of a corporation or corporations to buy strategic war materials or other raw materials needed for our national defense. To that, of course, nobody can object, but I direct attention particularly to the language in lines 9 and 10, page 5, which provides that these corporations may use this money for plant construction, expansion, equipment, and for working capital. Certainly under the language of section 5 the corporations to be set up under this bill can construct plants, expand existing plants, or other plants that they construct, and use the money for equipment and working capital.

I asked Mr. Jones in committee whether he had any intention, or whether there was an intention on his part, to construct factories or buildings for the making of war material and war equipment. His answer was that he had no such idea. Some of us felt that the language should be made clear, that language should be inserted that would prohibit the Federal Government from building a factory and entering into competition with existing industries that are now providing for our national defense. Certainly no Member of this House and no loyal citizen wants to do or say anything that will impede the development of our national defense. We all want to hasten preparedness, and no one is more anxious that we have sound preparedness than are the men who served in the World War. We know the price that was paid at that time for our unpreparedness. We determined at the end of the World War that never again should our young men be sent into battle without even the knowledge of how to load a rifle, nor should our aviators be sent into the air flying airplanes with motors so faulty that the flames blow through the side of the casting and set the ship afire in the air. We do not want that experience repeated.

At this particular time it seems to me more important that we have the good will of industry, of capital, and of labor. We should be sure that every possible dollar that is lying idle in our banks will be put to work. I submit this question to the members of the committee and ask, if you as businessmen would consider investing money in plant expansion or in the building of new plants to provide matériel needed for the Government during this period of emergency if you knew that at this time Congress was writing into law language that would permit corporations of the Government to build factories and go into competition with private industry?

I do not want to see anybody make excess profits out of this national-defense program, out of the orders placed by our own Government, or out of orders placed by foreign governments. I hope when the tax bill comes back from the other body that language will be written into it that will recapture for the Treasury any excess profits that may be made. I do not want to put any obstacles in the way of those industries and those businessmen who are trying to cooperate with the Government. I would be perfectly satisfied to have language, and I believe such an amendment will be offered, that will make it clear that the Government will not and cannot go into competition with private industry, that it cannot build factories to supply matériel for our War or Navy Department, unless those matériel cannot be procured expediently and at a reasonable price from private industry.

Mr. Jones indicated in the committee he was willing to accept such an amendment. In fact, he considered and prepared some language in the committee and was willing to have the committee adopt it, but members of the committee on the majority side felt it was not fair to Mr. Jones to have him express an opinion. I for one will take the opinion that Mr. Jones expresses, whether it be a spur-of-the-moment opinion expressed in committee or something that he has a great deal of time to prepare.

If that language had been inserted in section 5, which would simply make clear that unless the material could not be secured at a reasonable price and expeditiously the Government would not go into competition, then I do not believe there would be a single objection to this bill and it could have gone through by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, we want unity, and I know the Members of the minority, certainly all of those with whom I have talked, want to cooperate on those things, but we are not going to have unity unless the majority will indicate a spirit of willingness to meet us halfway, a willingness to be fair about language that is put in bills, and a willingness to remove doubt from the mind of those who have doubts as to the language in section 5.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9958, to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9958, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 1 hour.

The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question before he starts his speech?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. FISH. Is there anything in this bill that directly or indirectly enables the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend money to foreign nations?

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

Mr. FISH. That is all I want to know. I am a great friend and admirer of the gentleman, and I take his word on anything.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the first provision of this bill contemplates the recapture by the Treasury of $400,000,000. Of this amount, $300,000,000 would be restored to the Treasury by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in one of three ways: By direct return out of the original capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, amounting to $500,000,000; or out of the surplus, which amounts to $285,000,000 on the books of the Corporation at this time; or by the purchase of the capital stock of the home-loan bank, which amounts to about $125,000,000, and which is now owned by the Treasury. An additional $100,000,000 of capital of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation would be restored to the Treasury under the provisions of this bill.

The next provision of the bill would enlarge the lending powers of the Corporation for the benefit of the railroads of the Nation. Under existing law, there is a limit of $350,000,000 that may be loaned to railroads. That amount has been practically absorbed by loans already advanced or by commitments for loans now pending with the Corporation.

Another provision of the bill would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to organize a corporation or corporations for the purpose of aiding in financing the Nation's program of national defense. The corporations organized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be permitted to make loans for the acquirement and retention of strategic and critical war materials and other raw materials necessary in the preparation of military equipment, for plant expansion, for plant construction, and for working capital.

Another provision in connection with this last would authorize the advancement of cash for the purchase of war materials for subsequent delivery, and authorization is given for negotiations by which farm products would be delivered in exchange for any materials purchased within the provisions of this bill. This provision was suggested by the Department of Agriculture and by Jesse Jones.

The measure provides for the extension of the time for maturity of loans from 1945 to 1955. It is contemplated that an amendment will be offered which will also extend the life of the powers of the Corporation, which would expire under existing law at the end of the present fiscal year, so that these powers would exist for 5 additional years.

This, in short, is the purpose of the bill. I want to say that it is not contemplated by anybody that the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the subsidiary corporations organized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would supply funds authorized under this bill for Government construction and operation of plants and industrial outfits engaged in carrying out the program of national defense. The purpose of this bill is to separate transactions of this kind from the general business of the Corporation.

Under the law the general loaning activities of the Corporation must be made within certain restrictions and limitations prescribed by Congress. The Congress laid down the general rule that loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be made upon a basis of full and adequate security. This bill would separate business contemplated by this act from the general business of the Corporation, so that a wider range of discretion would be allowed in order that the Corporation in making contracts for the acquirement of these materials might have greater freedom of action in negotiating arrangements with private industries; that the purpose is to make contracts that will be fair to the Government; that would protect the interests of the Treasury and the people of the Nation and at the same time have enough elasticity and freedom of action to enable the Corporation to make agreements that will protect private industry against losses to be incurred, which, under hard and fast ordinary rules, might not be anticipated. The purpose is to save to the people of the country wherever it can be done without sacrificing the program of defense any losses that might occur by the application of arbitrary rules governing transactions between the Government and private industries. The purpose is to set up business methods, trusting the administrative officials to protect the Government and at the same time apply fair rules for contracting inustries. Otherwise, industry, in entering into these contracts, would have to anticipate all possible adverse development and exact prices and conditions that would not be the case where sufficient freedom of action is allowing to permit contracts upon a common-sense basis, fair to the Government and fair to those with whom the Government has dealings.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. On page 5, under section 5, there is a provision for making loans to develop strategic and critical materials and other raw materials. What is the definition of the word "strategic"? What does the gentleman include in that term?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not understand exactly the technical distinction between strategic materials and critical materials. To me, they all mean about the same. There is a distinction, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The reason I ask the question is that a bill has been introduced in the Senate which defines gold and silver as strategic materials. The Bureau of Mines has put out a statement which defines these under the category of manganese, chromium, mercury, tungsten, and antimony.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is probably a good answer, but I am not prepared to say that I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman would not be in favor of including gold and silver as strategic war materials?

Mr. STEAGALL. Well, I do not think there is any practical reason for that question. I should say not.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. On page 2 of the report there is mentioned the fact that the purpose of the bill is to return surplus funds from various Government agencies to the Treasury. Has the gentleman any information as to the total amount that might be returned to the Treasury?

Mr. STEAGALL. The total amount contemplated by this bill is $400,000,000; $300,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as I have undertaken briefly to explain, and $100,000,000 recaptured out of the capital stock of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

Let me say to the gentleman that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation borrowed to the amount of nearly $3,000,000,000—I think the figure is $2,800,000,000—when the capital of the Corporation was only $500,000,000. At first the Corporation was permitted, under the original act, to expand its capital three times, and then it was raised to five times, and now it is six times plus two-tenths; but the Corporation had obligations approximately $3,000,000,000 outstanding when the capital was only $500,000,000.

Their outstanding obligations now are only $1,100,000,000 excluding capital; they have a surplus of $285,000,000, and our advices are that this surplus is, certainly for the greater part, a valid, real surplus. This being the case it is evident that with diminishing loans, there cannot be any necessity for a greater amount of capital structure than was required when the Corporation was transacting almost three times the amount of business in the form of loans it is transacting now or may be expected to carry in the future.

I do not understand the logic of gentlemen who, while complaining about too much government in business, seem to insist that the various activities of the Government requiring capital furnished by the Treasury should be required to continue to hold unnecessary Government investments. It would seem that everybody would welcome even a partial liquidation of any emergency corporation established by the Government which requires the use of funds from the Treasury of the United States. That is what is undertaken by this bill; and let me say that Mr. Jones, the Federal Loan Administrator, in whom so much confidence has been expressed, advises us that there is no need for the full amount of capital on hand. I share that confidence to the fullest, because I think he has done a great job in the administration of this great activity of the Government. I pay tribute to him as one of the greatest administrative officers of all our Government agencies. I, too, have the fullest confidence in his judgment; he has assured us, in direct answer to questions propounded by members of the committee, that if there were no mention at this time of lifting the limit upon the national debt, he would still favor the return to the Treasury of this amount of the surplus and capital held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and so did Governor Black.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman will recall that Mr. Jones said that if he gave this $300,000,000 we must not interrupt but increase his borrowing power in like amount, that he could not spare this, and we put it in your bill to increase that borrowing power.

Mr. STEAGALL. But Mr. Jones repeatedly assured the committee that the Corporation was amply equipped to return this amount to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. HAWKS. If the loaning capacity of the Corporation had not been increased from two to three to four to five to six times-plus, as the gentleman indicates, that surplus would not exist, would it?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, the surplus represents the earnings accumulated out of the total activities of the Corporation on all loans.

Mr. HAWKS. It also has some relation to the reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has consumed 18 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, it has been my fortune for the past 6 years to be a member of the minority party of two legislative bodies. One thing I learned from this experience is that legislation which appears to be very simple when presented by new dealers is very often legislation which means just the opposite from what it appears to mean. Consequently, when those bills come before me which appear innocent and highly desirable, I always give what I consider special attention to determine just what they mean. In this particular bill before us under section 1 there is permission given to the R. F. C. to buy the stock of any Federal home-loan bank. In section 2 the R. F. C. is permitted to retire its capital stock and to pay dividends from earnings. Under section 3 the amounts of money which the R. F. C. as a revolving fund may make available to railroads as loans is increased to $500,000,000. There is a direction to the Federal Farm Mortgage Co. to repay to the Treasury all amounts in excess of $100,000,000 which they heretofore received as capital. Under section 5 the R. F. C. is authorized to create corporations to aid the Government in its national-defense program, upon request of the President and the Federal Loan Administrator. The provisions of this bill illustrate that those who write New Deal laws can write them plainly, so far as section 3 is concerned, because that section, which provides for an increase in authorization of loans to railroads, is very definite and clear. One who runs may read it and know that we are authorizing an increase in loans to railroad companies who borrow from the F. R. C. However, section 2, permitting the R. F. C. to retire capital stock, section 1 permitting the R. F. C. to buy stock in the Federal home-loan bank, section 4 directing the Federal Farm Mortgage Co. to retire its capital stock in excess of $100,000,000 do not tell the clear and obvious story. Their purpose, which is not stated, is to increase the Treasury fund and in part increase the contingent liabilities of the Government at the same time. It may quite readily be argued that this is a matter of bookkeeping, that inasmuch as all of the securities issued by the various Government corporations are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the Government, it is not important that there be any capital credited to the Corporation as an asset.

It makes no difference, no practical difference, they may say, whether the Corporation is financially able to pay or not, because their securities sell not because the Corporation is good but entirely and only because the United States Government guarantees the payment of their obligations. If such is the case, why cannot the bill say that the purpose is to lessen the security back of the contingent obligations of the Government and at the expense of the various corporations increase the Treasury balance for the regular governmental expenses? We do this at this time by transferring money, following the action of Congress less than a week ago, wherein our national debt limit was increased by $4,000,000,000. We do it, Mr. Chairman, simply to save the face of the President of the United States, who said in his Budget message that this could be done, and consequently we do it at his request and, as I interpret it, over the objection of Mr. Jones. Before this administration, by reason of national-defense needs, indicated their willingness to accept an increase in our national debt limit, Mr. Jones said, in part:

> I am here doing my part in respect to the proposals of the President's Budget message. I am going to do it in a businesslike way. It can be done without in any sense impairing the efficiency or solvency of these two agencies.

Of course, it can be done without impairing their efficiency or their solvency, because the United States Government guarantees the debts of these corporations. Uncle Sam will make good through the taxpayers.

That sounds as though Mr. Jones was intending to approve the plan; but listen to Mr. Jones again. On May 20, as disclosed on page 80 of the hearings, in reply to a question by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]:

> In other words, you would not be here asking for this if we increased the debt limit?

And Mr. Jones replied:

> I think that may be assumed.

But, ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Jones, if not acting under orders of the President of the United States, would be in the impossible and highly improbable situation of the president of a bank saying to a borrower, "Here, take your collateral. I do not want it."

Can you imagine a banker turning down collateral of his own free will?

It is my hope that the President will not exert Presidential pressure upon Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, who, under Presidential domination, are attempting rapidly to get business out of its lethargy resulting from 7 years of the New Deal. Only if he keeps hands off and allows those gentlemen of approved fitness to streamline industry can they succeed. The President has thrown monkey wrenches long enough into the wheels of industry.

This leaves us with but section 5 to consider. This section at one and the same time is in part the only essential part of this bill and at the same time one of the most dangerous delegations of power that Congress has ever attempted. It provides, in part, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with Presidential approval, which, in fact, means the President, may create or organize corporations to aid the Government in its national-defense program, and to make loans to these or other companies for such a program. The loans may be for the purpose of acquiring and carrying raw materials, for plant construction and expansion, equipment, and working capital. Now, there is no one, I conceive, who will deny but that every industry in the country comes within the national-defense program in a time of national emergency. Therefore this provision authorizes the Government to, under guise of national defense, set up and operate any business the President desires.

We are a nation whose economy depends upon privately owned capital entering, through the purchase of privately issued stocks and bonds, the industrial world to provide jobs. Many in this country, unfortunately, and some in high places of authority, apparently think differently, for they impose every conceivable restriction upon the ease with which private capital may enter into private business. [Applause.]

We are today in a national emergency, when it is essential that our national economy operate to its greatest efficiency. This means that new capital must find its way into industry, to open new plants, and to operate new and old ones. Capital while so employed must be assured reasonable safety and at least a chance of earning a profit.

The President has in recent months publicly stated that private business is essential to our national defense and will be encouraged by his administration. He has enlarged upon this in an obvious effort to persuade business that he is its friend, and that when he addresses the Nation by radio as "my friends," he includes the businessman.

I can think of nothing more discouraging to a prospective investor of private funds, in any business, whether it be for the manufacturing of toothpicks, shoes, guns, airplanes, or radios, than for him to realize that his business may be subjected to Government competition at any day. Under this bill the President has the power to set up any business, Government owned and operated, and without any requirement whatever that the business, becoming his competitor, operate at a profit.

Surely an amendment will be adopted by the committee today which will assure the private-business man that as he does his best for the defense of his country he will find his Government cooperating and not fighting him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to sit here in Congress day after day listening to arguments with some of which one often disagrees intensely without exploding into talk occasionally. I have jotted down these few notes.

Although there are not many Members on the floor at the moment, I do not wish to extend them in the RECORD. The RECORD becomes a conglomeration of material which Members have said, which often they wish they had not said, and material which Members have not said, but which they wish they had said.

When one makes a deposit in the RECORD one may say, "BRUCE BARTON wrote The Man Nobody Knows, but I am coauthor of The Book Nobody Reads." [Laughter.]

I suppose there is no more harm in this bill under discussion than there is in some of the other "black magic" which has passed the House within our memory. So long as people understand that under this bill we have reached the point in government where we are now watering our stock in Government corporations, we have not yet, of course, reached the point of selling the W. P. A. paintings, nor pawning the statuary on the Mall. We are watering stock and by now we should be used to water. We have had billions in "pump priming." We have had "self-liquidating" project bills. I do not know what Machiavelli behind the scenes had all this water on his brain, but for some time our ship of state, like Noah's Ark, has been foundering in deep water. We have been "a painted crew, sailing a painted ship upon a painted ocean." Long ago somebody shot an albatross. The albatross, I think, was the spirit of private enterprise.

This Reconstruction Finance Corporation, organized in 1932, has admittedly a splendid record of administration, but the necessity for such a corporation, as far as I can see from the evidence that appears before our committee, has just about disappeared. It is a Government corporation devised to loan money to banks, insurance companies, and industry; even Government agencies, whenever they are designated by Congress to be mandated, and there have been $2,900,601,000 so mandated by the Congress. This Corporation has lost some money. About two and a quarter billion dollars of losses were written off its books by Congress, by legislative enactment.

It has also made some profit. For instance it appears from their Seventh Annual Report issued February 2, 1939, that they made $21,016,493 in premiums on the sale of P. W. A. securities. It has made some profit on loans and stock purchased from almost bankrupt banks. The reason the R. F. C. was able to make money on some of these bank transactions was because by law it was given priority over the depositors and other creditors of those banks. Today it has, to be sure, on its books a profit of $285,000,000, but its total losses and gains have not yet been determined. As the Corporation has been successful much credit is due justly to Mr. Jones and his organization. Mr. Jones has operated at a time and in a Capitol where he stood almost isolated and almost completely surrounded by a body of zealots who seemed to think that spending Government money without wasting it was somehow inhuman or, as they called it, not humanitarian. Mr. Jones, however, has managed to retain that intelligence characteristic of successful businessmen which people have always called common sense because we all like to think we have it.

The loans now outstanding total $1,900,000,000. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] said they were $1,100,000,000. I thing the loans which were made should now be sold to commercial banks and others. I think the shaky loans should also be sold, if necessary, with a Government guaranty, on the principal of the F. H. A. mortgage system, because those loans are all financed by money borrowed by using tax-exempt securities. I do not think this country can afford to have something like $60,000,000,000 in securities which are not subject to income tax or to State or local taxes. That money should be encouraged to go into private enterprise where it can make profits and wages for other people and help other people pay taxes. If you stop to think that about $60,000,000,000 of property is in effect mortgaged to the Government, you will agree that through this virtual $60,000,000,000 of Government-guaranteed or Government-owned securities we have bought ourselves about $60,000,000,000 worth of potential communism. Government securities can be turned into cash without delay. No wonder investors go on buying more bonds until they see whether or not we in America are going to have more communism, although we do not call it communism; or, as some of us hope, we are going to liquidate the communism we have already purchased.

The time to stop issuing Government securities is when people generally are afraid to go into private enterprise. This is not merely my opinion. I asked a Government financier in private conversation, a Government financier whom many of you have said you respect: "How can the Secretary of the Treasury go on saying that the bond market is all right when people are buying bonds because of fear? Every dollar that remains out of private enterprise is a sign of distress at a time when every light upon the control board seems to be flashing danger." The answer this sage gave me was: "What else can he say?" The Secretary of the Treasury is the man who sells the bonds.

Under these circumstances history will certainly not accept the answer present-day politicians are giving to the unemployed when they say private enterprise has failed. It is the politicians themselves who have transgressed the ordinary and fundamental principles of jurisprudence.

Until this "blitzkrieg" in Europe began, financial collapse seemed to impend at any time. It seems now, however, that the necessity to arm is offering a new stimulus to private enterprise. It looks as if we were going to have a new lease on life, a first chance to acquire governmental efficiency, a chance to avoid the necessity of a trustee in bankruptcy, always remembering that usually the trustee in bankruptcy is a Mussolini, a Hitler, or a Stalin. As we go forward in the mass production of airplanes, universal training for labor skills, universal training in physical as a necessity for martial fitness, wages, and salaries, and profits in private enterprise will almost necessarily increase. The trend toward Government employment, the desire to be in the Government service will be reversed.

It would seem that if and when this happens would be the time to liquidate these Government agencies, to cut down the number of Government employees; but I think it is a mistake to make a blanket reduction of Government salaries as suggested by one amendment which I saw headlined in the newspapers. To my mind, one elementary principle of good government which the dictators have been too shrewd to violate is that government salaries should always rise until either because of salary or the honor they can gain, or the pleasure and Christian reward they have from serving the people of their country, the best men and women are lured into key government positions. Until you have reached that time salaries should rise. This, as I see it, is a principle of government as elementary as the principles set out in our Constitution and Bill of Rights, but it has usually been violated or ignored in this country, alas for the country. On the other hand, the way our bureaucracy seems to be crowded with employees simply for the purpose of furnishing employment is, in my opinion, equally tragic. It makes political racketeering the Nation's biggest business.

The most constructive job the next administration can do is the same as that of a receiver in bankruptcy appointed before the bankruptcy petition is filed.

To take only the agencies that came before our committee, I believe that a competent investigation would show that the following steps might be taken with great profit to our people. It appears from the evidence in our hearings, first, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be liquidated in the way I have already suggested, and the Export-Import banks subjected to the same treatment. Second, the Federal Reserve bank and the home-loan bank are doing the same type of work, duplicating many functions, and I believe an investigation would show that they should be merged. The F. H. A., an investigation would probably show, should take over the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is doing the same type of work as the Federal Savings Loan Insurance Corporation, and I believe an investigation would show it should be merged or consolidated.

It would be pitiful if such a job were not undertaken in connection with other agencies that go through other committees. It would be pitiful if, at the time the concept of democracy fights for life, we were to continue to follow those who are saying openly that defense includes all the extravagant pet projects for spending which are dear to the hearts of politicians because the people have the idea that in getting them they are getting something for nothing. Instead, the people may be giving up everything to secure these miserable bowls of pottage.

It is the custom of the moment to blame every woe upon Hitler. Hitler, we should realize, is the Frankenstein monster created by a people who saw advancing toward them that specter which is the reductio ad absurdum of democracy—communism. Those people had read the advice of their philosopher, Oswald Spengler, who, toward the end of the late World War, wrote for a despairing people that book, The Decline of Western Civilization. It was read in every camp in Germany. It enumerates the weaknesses of democracy which we all know democracies have, the corruption, the stupidity, the spinelessness, the selfishness of public officers sometimes elected by people who are uninformed or who have become indifferent to their own need to have good government.

One reads that the people in France are already beginning to realize that if they are destroyed it is because they, like us, have permitted themselves to be overcome by these weaknesses ever threatening democracies. If the people of the world shall learn from the war that no people can afford these weaknesses, the war may prove to have been worth all its dreadful cost in blood and money. While we are considering the weaknesses that always threaten democracies, we should not forget that Rome, too, was a great republic, that Rome did not fall until the people had first permitted themselves to fall so in love with one man, Caesar, that they permitted him to gather into his single pair of hands almost all the reins of government so that they were easily seized by the incompetents, fools, and tyrants who succeeded Caesar.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 3 additional minutes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in matters of appropriating money for defense, the Congress and the Executive have been a team, moving with clocklike precision. But once we have appropriated the money, what becomes of it? In legislative questions of policy still more necessary to defense, it would seem that the Executive is moving toward the left and that the Congress, when we express our thinking by votes, is moving directly toward the right. Before we can go forward unitedly, it seems to me we must decide what is the one best way to go, whether to move toward the left, toward increasing Government ownership, or to the right, toward encouraging private ownership and private enterprise.

I submit that the one best middle ground is that of Him who taught the strong to lift up the weak, but who, knowing men are human, saw fit to picture to them a reward with a House of Many Mansions.

No leader that I know of has yet succeeded in proving that a government should be run upon the principle that a laborer either with his head, his hands, or his money is not worthy of his hire. You can pass laws in Congress, and people can evade punishment under them, but no people can violate the principles of sound government, time-tested through the ages, without suffering punishment because the principles of sound government are based upon the principles of economics and psychology. Congress should be, first of all, a laboratory, for determining what those sound principles are. We cannot afford to act upon inconsistent theories of government.

If we as a people are incapable of determining and acting efficiently upon correct principles of sound government, then we deserve the punishment which will make this country a carcass which any dictator can have for the picking. If we do not do these things as we should then we are not the people I believe we are, for I feel that we can and will, in this generation, press on to a higher stage of civilization. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have not much to say about this measure; just a few words regarding the recovery of $700,000,000 from the capital structure of Government bureaus, erroneously called Government corporations, this bill providing for the recovery of $400,000,000 of that amount.

I desire to call to the attention of Congress again that the general-fund balance of the Treasury as stated in the 1941 Budget is incorrect. It is given there as about $1,600,000,000. In a statement submitted to me by the General Accounting Office there were liability items in the amount of $1,150,000,000 which the President failed to take into consideration in arriving at his balance figure.

The Government lending bureaus deposit their accounts in the same fund along with other Treasury receipts. The Treasury checks against them the same as it does its own deposits. A part of the $1,150,000,000 above mentioned as not having been taken into consideration by the President consisted of deposits of Government lending bureaus which had been checked out by the Treasury.

There is no possible way of knowing whether this $700,000,000 that we are talking about will be recovered by the Treasury or not. It is likely to resolve itself into a simple New Deal bookkeeping proposition.

I want to say a word about the clause in this bill which provides for the lending of money for the development of strategic and critical materials. It so happens that a bill has been introduced in the Senate, S. 4008, which designates strategic and critical materials as follows, and I read from that bill:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of a quartz ledge or vein, or other ore body, or a placer deposit, containing gold, silver, or tin, or gold and silver, or any strategic or critical mineral which, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be of value to the United States in time of war.

We have arrived at the place where we may expect practically all the legislation the new dealers bring in from now on will have attached to it some sort of provision for defense purposes. Is it possible the silver people of the West may use this as another means of raiding the Federal Treasury?

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman is not taking the position that this national-defense item is in this bill in order to pass it through the Congress? I hope the gentleman is not taking the position that strategic materials are not needed and that we should not accumulate them.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. No; I believe the gentleman knows very well that I do not think any such thing. I think the gentleman knows that I have, as I give him credit for having, ordinary ability to define what strategic war materials are.

Mr. GORE. I may say the gentleman is very charitable to me.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I mean to say that it is a question as to what you are going to call strategic and critical material, particularly as to whether it includes silver and gold. I intend to offer an amendment which will define the word "strategic" so that it will not include silver and gold. The Bureau of Mines has defined it for us. I cannot see why Congress should not define the term "strategic and critical material," and I believe this will be agreed to by the other side. I want to plead with this Congress, let us be careful and not permit the selfish groups of this country to take advantage of us in this critical hour to promote their own petty scheme and to further rob the United States Treasury.

Mr. GORE. I would join with the gentleman in denouncing any such attempt, but I submit that this item is very essential to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman that the term "strategic and critical" is satisfactory. I only mean to indicate that we see there is a possibility of people taking advantage of this provision by giving the term a definition that suits their purpose. I believe the gentleman will agree with me that it is absolutely necessary that we see to it this does not take place. The gentleman certainly does not believe that it is necessary to provide money for the development of gold and silver in this country when we now have more silver and gold than we can use.

Mr. GORE. May I say to the gentleman that that is not mentioned in the bill. The bill that has in it the provision to which the gentleman refers is a bill that was introduced in another body and is not pending before the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am only asking that the term be defined.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman give his definition of strategic war materials?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I will.

Mr. GORE. Granting that the gentleman's definition is satisfactory to him, suppose that in time of emergency we needed some other materials to come within that definition.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am merely contending "strategic and critical" as appears in section 5 of this bill should be defined so there can be no possible chance for including silver and gold deposits.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important national-defense bill. The point to which I wish to draw immediate attention now is section 5 enlarging the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to provide for the obtaining of strategic materials.

I heard only a part of the remarks of the gentleman who preceded me. He seems to be raising the question of whether we ought to encourage the mining of gold and silver. I cannot take the time to go into that now, but I do know that strategic, critical, and essential materials are vitally necessary for our national defense.

I am convinced there are two parts of the program to which we ought to give our attention now in order to have adequate national defense. In the first place, we ought to lay in a stock pile of strategic minerals and materials. I regret that we must go abroad for a great many of them, most of them, in fact. We ought to lay in this stock pile at once, no matter to what part of the earth we may have to go to obtain them. But equally essential—nay, more essential—as a part of national defense is the development of these strategic materials from our own domestic sources. It is folly for us to continue to depend upon distant and foreign countries to provide for us those vitally necessary things. So long as we continue to depend upon other countries we are at their mercy.

There is a view held that this country is inadequately supplied naturally with such minerals as manganese, tungsten, and the like. I was confronted with that suggestion when I went before the House Committee on Military Affairs on May 18, 1937, when I urged our development of domestic sources of supply. However, I do not believe they are lacking. It may be that we do not have tin. It may be that in the continental United States we do not have nickel, but it is a well-known fact among the mining men of this country that America is abundantly supplied with manganese, tungsten, and the like. If we will only turn mining men in the West loose to find what is out there, and thus supplement the work of the Bureau of Mines, there is no question but that we have these supplies.

Now, I maintain it is a short-sighted national policy if we do not encourage our own mining people to find new deposits and develop them, and for that reason I am heartily in accord with the extension of the power of the R. F. C. to thus encourage private enterprise in the mining of the essential materials. Does this bill do that?

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. SACKS. This bill does that very thing and, furthermore, it puts us in a position where, in cases of an emergency, besides the development of the resources here, if it is necessary to have a supply of such material on hand in case of emergency, that situation is covered also by the bill through the development of the resources of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman for that affirmative statement.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but my time is so limited I would like to make this statement first.

I have been one of a group studying unemployment. We find that during the past few years there has been a great deal of unemployment. We would like to have this problem of unemployment solved by the finding of employment for our employables in private industry. Now, I feel that the great extractive industry of mining opens up a vast field for such private employment. I regret to see so much governmental interference with business. I want this country to give free play to the individual enterprise of our people.

Let me say to you that the mining of metals has been in the dumps out yonder in the West. We need more capital for investment. It is our crying need, capital furnished to small mining men and also the middle group. The big companies can look after themselves. In my own State, for instance, 25 years ago there were 50 big mining companies producing copper. Today there are about a half dozen. These mines may become depleted. Today we should bring on a crop of small mines, some of which will be the big mines of tomorrow. By the way, copper is one of the essential minerals just as manganese and tungsten are critical and strategic minerals. Let us give the small-business man a chance in this program of national defense. The job will be well done, and returning prosperity will rest secure on the American plan of private enterprise. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] was on the floor I was reading a statement which appears to be a question of Mr. Jesse Jones that appeared in the New York Journal of Commerce of Friday, June 14. The paper quotes Mr. Jones as saying:

"We may be called upon for loans for plant expansion, equipment, and maybe some plant construction," he continued. "But I see no reason why the most part of working capital needs should not come from the banks and the resources of the institutions that will do the defense work. All of these institutions have their own banking connections. The banks are full of money and looking for loans. I don't think that any of them are excited."

Mr. Jones added that he did not think it would be necessary to call a conference of bankers on financing needs of the defense program and stated that he would not ask bankers to make any "special easy terms" for such loans.

"Certainly ordinary banking rates are low enough," he said.

The loan-agency chairman estimated that $100,000,000 to $250,000,000 would be used for acquisition and storage of strategic materials under authority in legislation now pending in Congress. He gave these figures as round numbers, but added that he did not expect such acquisitions to exceed the maximum estimate.

Mr. Chairman, I make these observations and read this statement from the Journal of Commerce in connection with section 5, pages 4 and 5, of the bill now under consideration, which provides—

The Corporation—

Referring to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—is authorized to create or to organize a corporation or corporations with such powers as it may deem necessary to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program, when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President, and to subscribe for the nonassessable stock thereof, and to make loans to any such corporation or to any other corporation to assist in such program. Such loans may be made for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials and other raw materials, for plant construction, expansion, and equipment, and for working capital, and may be made on such terms and conditions and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine.

Mr. Chairman, I have just read into the RECORD that portion of the bill to which I seriously object. If I understood Mr. Jones correctly, he is not in favor of the R. F. C. creating corporations to which the R. F. C. can lend money for the purpose of building plants, leasing plants, buying plants, expanding plants, filling them with equipment and furnishing them with the necessary working capital so that those Government-owned corporations may go out and compete with private industry, and I certainly hope that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS] will state to us whether or not in his opinion Mr. Jones wants language of that kind in this act, and whether or not it is the intention of the Federal Loan Administrator to originate policies which will make loans to Government-owned corporations for the specific purpose of building plants and competing with private industry. Why any administration will in this day and age under our conditions advocate Government-owned corporations entering into competition with private business is beyond my comprehension.

As an illustration of what bureaucratic government does, let me read a brief statement from the monthly survey of business, No. 107, second quarter, 1940, from the American Federation of Labor, which says:

Labor estimates that in 1935–36, 59 percent of all families had incomes too low to support an adequate living standard. Since 1935–36 our national income has increased somewhat, but even so, approximately 50 percent of American families today are living below minimum standards for health and efficiency.

As a matter of national conservation and preparation for defense, steps must be taken to correct this sorry condition and revitalize our human energies by giving work and adequate income to our work forces. Fortunately this can be done in the present circumstances. As noted above, the national-defense program will lift production to higher levels, particularly in the heavy industries. Thousands and eventually perhaps millions of new workers will be required in our industries. Already plans are afoot to train 1,000,000 for defense production jobs. Industrial output is expected to increase from the estimated June level of 112 (Federal Reserve Board index) to 120 in September within 7 percent of the all-time peak. This will continue to create new jobs. Changes in the war situation will affect our foreign markets and therefore may modify the business outlook at least temporarily. The long-term prospect, however, is for expanding production.

Here is a statement from the American Federation of Labor, which shows that so far as it is concerned, it considers the defense program an open sesame which will bring about increased employment, and a high standard of living in the country. Another reason why I am amazed the Government will at this time advocate the enactment of a bill putting Government-owned corporations into competition with private industry is this, which I take from the June 13, 1940, statement of conditions of the Federal Reserve banks:

Excess reserves of member banks on June 12 were estimated to be approximately $6,610,000,000, an increase of $80,000,000 for the week.

Mr. Eccles, Governor of the Federal Reserve System, tells us those excess reserves can be expended by the member banks seven to one, or in excess of $42,000,000,000 credit expansion, which the member banks alone are now in position to give to private industry. No wonder Mr. Jones made the statement which I read from the Journal of Commerce to this effect, that the banks have ample funds to finance this program.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Congress of the United States could enact a law at this time which carries such language in section 5, and there will be offered from this side of the aisle an amendment to correct that so that the R. F. C. will not be authorized to make such loans to Government-owned corporations, to compete with private industry. We have here before us a defense program which my simple mathematics leads me to believe, if it is to be carried out, will involve, over the next 10 or 15 or 25 years, an expenditure of not less than $50,000,000,000 on today's price index basis. I suppose you say that is wild imagination.

All right. You show me—I think I know a little about what it costs to bring machinery into useful condition—you show me how you can produce the planes, tractors, tanks, the ships, the land fortifications, the undersea craft, and the oversea craft, all of the aircraft, for less than $25,000,000,000 as a minimum. When are you to spend the money? During the next 3 to 5 years or the next 10 to 25 years? If you take 25 as the minimum, 5 years, that is $5,000,000,000 a year. If it is 10 years, it is two and one-half billion. If you use $50,000,000,000, it is double those figures.

Do we intend at this time, when private industry has been browbeaten and stabbed in the back, if you please, by acts passed by the Congress, to further discourage the investment of private funds in industry? As far as I am concerned, I have not supported such a program since I came here in 1935, and I do not propose to start to do so under the war hysteria that covers this land today.

I believe in the private-enterprise system. I am opposed to the Government going into operations of this type which compete with and challenge the life of private industry. I have no objection to Government corporations being created under the language of section 5 for the purpose of acquiring and carrying and holding, in order to serve private industry, with the strategic war materials and other war materials mentioned in that section. I shall be glad to support legislation which provides the creation of such Government-owned corporation to go into the world markets and pick up tin, rubber, manganese, or whatever materials we need so that it can be carried without forcing private industry to carry the load and go through the bankruptcy proceedings at some later date.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The Securities and Exchange Commission has issued a statement showing that the amount of money normally flowing into private enterprise by the investing public has been about $2,000,000,000 a year. That has shrunk to $375,000,000 a year, and in some degree proves what the gentleman says that private industry has been stifled by Government competition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As an illustration of what the gentleman has told us very forcibly, to sell commodities you must have a commodities exchange. To sell livestock you must have a livestock exchange. To sell bonds and stocks for capital structures you must have stock exchanges. Seats on the stock exchange sold this week for $39,000. In 1929 they sold in excess of $625,000 per seat. Stock-exchange operation is going out of business in this country, because the capitalistic system is folding up in the United States, and anybody who cares to read the record and who is at all fair must come to that conclusion. The twenty-fourth annual meeting of the National Industrial Conference Board entitled "Development of American Enterprise and Challenge to the Enterprise Principle," which I hold in my hand, will give you the facts if you want to bring yourself down to date. It was published May 22, 1940.

If it is the objective of the administration to destroy the private-industry system in this country, well and good; go ahead and destroy it, but you will not do it with my consent. This Congress has no right to pass this legislation in its present form. No administrator has the right to request us to do so unless the objective is to destroy private capitalism in this country. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

Now, let us take one or two other sections of the bill for a moment. Let us refer to section 2, pages 2 and 3, where—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make payments from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury in amounts to be determined by the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator, for the partial retirements of its capital stock at par and in payment of dividends from earnings.

What are the earnings? As testified by Mr. Jones, the earnings of Reconstruction Finance Corporation—$285,000,000—represented by its surplus at the present time. In answer to an interrogation by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], Mr. Jones said, on page 84 of the hearings:

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have $500,000,000 capital and you have the $285,000,000 surplus, from which you take $175,000,000, and it will still leave you $110,000,000 surplus.

Mr. JONES. To cover losses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To add to your already capital of $500,000,000, or a capital structure of $610,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I continue:

Mr. JONES. I wouldn't count the $110,000,000, because we will need that to cover losses.

Going back to page 3 of the bill you will find the language provides that the capital structure of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be reduced, but when the language in this paragraph takes effect the—notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time * * * shall not be decreased by reason of any retirement of capital stock under this paragraph, and such aggregate amount is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph and of the second paragraph of section 304 of the act of March 9, 1933, as amended.

You are reducing the capital structure and you are authorizing an increase of lending capacity. You start out with the R. F. C., according to Mr. Jones' testimony on page 85 of the hearings, and authorize it to make loans 3 to 1—capital $500,000,000; loans $1,500,000,000. Mr. Jones states at the bottom of that page that from time to time the act has been amended so that you could loan 6.6 to 1—6.6 times the capital. Now, then, you are operating this thing backward, you are decreasing the capital structure and increasing the lending power based on the decreased capital structure.

Who knows to what extent private industry will have to call upon the R. F. C. if the people of this country continue to hoard and refuse to put their private savings into industry by reinvestment? If it is the will of the Congress to reduce the capital structure of the R. F. C. and come back at some subsequent date and build it up simply for the purpose of accommodating this $700,000,000 recapture which was advocated before the decision to increase the debt limitation and recapture the $300,000,000 approximately, that is one thing. But do not do it until you know what you are doing. That is the reason I point it out to you. It is a policy, of course. As long as you have the Treasury back of you, the taxing power of government, you can do almost anything and get away with it until the rainy day comes and you have got right down to the bottom of the meal barrel. Then you may have to do what some of the so-called democracies of Europe are doing at the present time.

Another proposition is that the bill provides in section 4, page 4—

SEC. 4. Section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1020b) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is authorized and directed to repay on or before June 30, 1941, to the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States, all amounts in excess of $100,000,000 theretofore subscribed to the capital stock of the Corporation.

You are going to do a similar thing with the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation that you are doing with the R. F. C., you are going to reduce the capital structure and you are going to do that at a time when Secretary Wallace comes along with a new program. I refer you to yesterday's issue of the New York Journal of Commerce, which is a pretty good paper to refer to once in a while. You will find from page 1 that Secretary Wallace is to lay before the President a plan for widening surplus removal, for he fears famine and added farm export losses.

Within a few days you will have before you a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency asking you to let the Commodity Credit Corporation have another $500,000,000 to help salvage the situation. But here you are decreasing the capital structure of the Farm Mortgage Corporation.

This procedure is financially cockeyed. It is shystering, and in my opinion it is almost equivalent to check-kiting. If we tried to do it in private industry they would lock us up in the penitentiary where we should be and leave us there for safekeeping so that we would not destroy the equities of our people by such operations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 4 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Alabama has 37 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 304 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 51d; Supp. V, title 12, sec. 51d), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase at par any part of the stock of any Federal home-loan bank owned by the United States, as evidenced by certificates, receipts, or otherwise, in amounts to be determined by the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to sell such stock to the Corporation. Any such stock so purchased by the Corporation shall be held subject to the same conditions, requirements, rights, and privileges (including all dividend and retirement provisions) as are provided by law for or in connection with the ownership of such stock by the United States."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 602), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"The Corporation is authorized to make payments from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury in amounts to be determined by the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator, for the partial retirement of its capital stock at par and in payment of dividends from earnings. The aggregate amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this paragraph takes effect shall not be decreased by reason of any retirement of capital stock under this paragraph, and such aggregate amount is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph and of the second paragraph of section 304 of the act of March 9, 1933, as amended.

"The Corporation shall retire its capital stock and pay dividends under the preceding paragraph of this section, and shall purchase stock of the Federal home-loan banks under section 304 of the act of March 9, 1933, as amended, in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $300,000,000 to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury; but the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator, shall determine that portion of such aggregate amount which shall be used for the retirement of the capital stock of the Corporation, the payment of dividends, and the purchase of such stock of the Federal home-loan banks."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: On page 3, line 7, after the word "Corporation", insert the words "on or before June 30, 1941."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is no objection to this amendment. It simply gives a margin of time within which this may be done. The purpose is to save interest which would be required if it were done as of the passage of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: On page 3, lines 7, 9, and 14, strike out the word "shall" wherever it appears therein and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GIFFORD: Page 2, beginning in line 13, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon it. I discussed the amendment fairly at length earlier in the afternoon. There is no necessity for this legislation at the moment. This bill was presented simply and wholly that we might find money for the Treasury and obviate the necessity for increasing the debt limit. But we have increased the debt limit by $4,000,000,000 and there will be ample funds for the Treasury. All funds raised under that limit can be used temporarily and at any time to take care of the needs of the Treasury. The $4,000,000,000 will not all be needed.

I quoted Mr. Jones; also Mr. Black, of the Federal Farm Credit Association, and I will quote them again. Both stated emphatically before the committee that they would not have been before the committee, and there was no necessity for the bill, if they had thought the debt limit would be raised. Up to that time it had not been suggested, Mr. Jones stated. Now, since this bill has been reported, the tax bill has been brought in here increasing the debt limit by $4,000,000,000. Now, there is no necessity for this. If I can read a man's mind, helped by the tone of his voice—and I think I can—at this time Mr. Jones would not want this legislation.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have been trying to get someone over there to ask me to yield.

Mr. GORE. What is the objection to it?

Mr. GIFFORD. The objection to it is that we cripple him. He acknowledges in the very section itself that he cannot do it without being granted further borrowing power.

Mr. GORE. How do we cripple him, and whom do we cripple?

Mr. GIFFORD. When we questioned him in committee, and asked him whether he could afford to do this, he said:

You make my funds pretty low if you take this money.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Jones said this would not impair the capital structure of the R. F. C.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes, he did; but he also stated that if we take this away he would have to have more borrowing power. Do you want to lift that borrowing power out of the proper proportion to capital stock?

Mr. GORE. How does this hurt the R. F. C.? What is the harm in doing it? If it is not needed, there is no harm in doing it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Perhaps not; but Mr. Jones said he would never have asked for it if he had not been requested to do so. When we suggested that he should have thought of this last year, recommending that it would be a good thing to retire that capital stock, he did not agree that he should have done so. He simply said he had made a little more money. He is borrowing money lately at 1 percent.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the amendment adopted a moment ago this entire matter is left within the discretion of Mr. Jones, whom the gentleman is so willing to trust in this Corporation. This is merely an authorization.

Mr. GIFFORD. He has the authorization already. He can do that now if he wants to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The third paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 605; Supp. V, title 15, sec. 605), is hereby amended by striking out "$350,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000,000."

(b) The first sentence of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 15, sec. 605m), is hereby amended by striking out "January 31, 1945" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 31, 1955."

SEC. 4. Section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1020b) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is authorized and directed to repay on or before June 30, 1941, to the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United State, all amounts in excess of $100,000,000 theretofore subscribed to the capital stock of the Corporation. The proceeds of such repayment shall be held in the Treasury of the United States as a fund available for subscription, by the Governor on behalf of the United States with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the capital of the Corporation when, in the judgment of the directors of the Corporation, additional subscriptions to its capital are necessary."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GIFFORD: On page 4, beginning in line 5, strike out all of section 4.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will speak briefly on this amendment. We are taking away $100,000,000 of the capital of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Every Member of this House knows we ought not to do it and every Member knows it will have to be replenished later. Mr. WOLCOTT asked this question:

You have been given to understand, Mr. Black, have you not, as we all have, that the reason for this bill and this amendment is to recapture some of this capital so that the Treasury will not have to issue bonds in excess of the debt limit?

Mr. BLACK. That, I believe, is the general understanding.

Mr. Chairman, this is to remain available so that when the Corporation wants it back again they can have it. This is simply juggling, is it not?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and the question he raised awhile ago. He submitted the question of what is the harm in doing it. I want to say to the gentleman that any man who has had experience in handling large financial transactions, and by "large financial transactions" I mean corporate structures running from $5,000,000 up to $100,000,000, does not dare do this kind of trickery. It will destroy his credit standing with the banks; it will destroy the confidence of his stockholders; it will destroy the confidence his customers have in the service his company proposes to render and the product it puts on the market. It will eventually throw his company into bankruptcy. I challenge the gentleman to show me one corporation of that size operating in the United States over a period of 10 years or more that ever participated in this kind of financial juggling.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Does the gentleman likewise object to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's paying into the Treasury some of its surplus profits?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman will have to admit that a mistake was made in creating the structure of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the basis of $500,000,000, or he will have to admit that we came to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's assistance and gave them back virtually two and a quarter million dollars by letting them write off part of their losses and having the Treasury absorb them, or he will have to admit that there is no such thing as a direct, reasonable connection between capital structures and lending capacity, or he must admit that my argument is sound; and I again refer him to private industry for the historical background of the situation I am calling to his attention.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I would remind the gentleman that on page 30 of the hearings Mr. Schram, the present Administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, admitted to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] that the banks borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would not be permitted by their supervising authorities to do the same thing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is now asking the Congress for permission to do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to refer the gentleman to various releases and public addresses which have been made by the Administrator of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, in which time and again he has pointed out to the depositors of this country that the only power the F. D. I. C. has to remain in business on a safe basis is to retain sound financial structures in the banking institutions, and the F. D. I. C. will not permit this kind of financial juggling.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in closing these remarks, I just want to express my surprise that there is no one here, apparently, who wants to help defend the Farm Credit Administration. It is an unusual proceeding. A later vote will probably indicate that the Republicans are the real friends of the farmers.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this particular measure, but I have listened to practically all the debate and I have read the hearings on the bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] said that the measure was cockeyed. It is not only cockeyed, it is dishonest. It is dishonest to the American people and to the American taxpayer, to every American citizen who has a stake in this Government. Any man who has had any experience whatsoever in the management of a financial institution will know that you cannot keep on decreasing the capital stock of a bank or financial institution and at the same time increase the lending capacity of that organization.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman were acting as the credit manager of a corporation that is accustomed to extending large credits to people in the form of goods shipped or in the form of open credits, would he always look at the relationship between the current assets and the current liabilities and at its capital structure—that is, the capital stock, bonds, debentures, and surplus and undivided profits—as related to its other obligations? Would the gentleman pay any attention to this?

Mr. HAWKS. I certainly would.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has a knowledge of investment banking. Would he advocate to his clients the purchase of securities of private corporations if he found their finances were being juggled in such a manner?

Mr. HAWKS. I would be in jail if I did.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. Certainly.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I wonder if the gentleman knows from his experience how many States have "blue sky" laws which would prevent this operation on the part of a private corporation.

Mr. HAWKS. I could not answer that question, but I know that if I came to the American public with a prospectus such as this and published it in any of the papers of the country, Mr. Jerome Frank would be on my tail in 2 minutes, and I would be down here answering a lot of questions of a lot of crazy bureaucrats who were trying to prove their point, and I could not substantiate anything on the basis of this kind of a prospectus, and you know it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman believe that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself would make loans to any private corporation if it found that corporation's affairs were being handled in the manner here proposed?

Mr. HAWKS. Of course they would not. They would probably put that corporation out of business without going into any detail about making a loan to them at all.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman refers to the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. HAWKS. I am referring to the whole proposition.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman knows that the Farm Credit Corporation really does not need any capital because all its issues are guaranteed by the Federal Government.

Mr. HAWKS. Certainly, and who is the Federal Government? I want to tell you that it is not a bunch of bureaucrats here in Washington.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am just wondering if it would make any real difference in the handling of the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it did not have any capital stock at all. As a matter of fact, it does not need any capital stock so long as the Government guarantees its bonds.

Mr. HAWKS. Of course; and if we were perfectly honest about this whole thing, this would all be a part of the United States Treasury——

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is really what it is.

Mr. HAWKS. And you know it as well as I do.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Does the gentleman mean to say that every section of this bill is a fraud?

Mr. HAWKS. Listen; if you were a private individual in the banking business, or in the investment-banking business, and the head of a corporation that wanted to finance a loan or put out an issue published a prospectus as silly and ridiculous and as untrue as this prospectus right here, I want to tell you he would not get very far.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS] to the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the hearings on the 1933 act and the 1935 act and the other one or two acts under the jurisdiction of that Commission and see what the Commission says about prospectuses drawn along this line and see to what degree they have closed or dried up the streams of private capital in this country.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like also to say that to give the bill a little face, to give this bill just a little appearance of being decent, they stick in an increase here from $350,000,000 to $500,000,000 to railroads.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to use the 5 minutes. I merely want to call attention to a strange paradox. The gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER] advocated liquidation of the R. F. C., and now the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan complain because we are giving authority to do a portion of what she said ought to be done.

Now, if by law the R. F. C. was required to purchase a portion of its capital stock at par value and was required by law to pay into the Treasury a portion of its surplus profits, and we were in here with legislation removing that requirement, then the gentleman on the other side of the aisle would really be "raising cain." We are on the other side of the picture and giving the R. F. C. authority for partial liquidation by purchase at par value some of its capital stock and to pay into the Treasury some of its profits, and they are still "raising cain." In fact, Mr. Chairman, they "raise cain" by force of habit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I hardly dared hope that the honorable Representative would listen to all I said, and I am gratified he listened to half what I said. What I said was that the loans of the R. F. C. consisted of good loans and shaky loans; that the good loans could probably be sold at a profit to commercial banks and that the shaky loans could probably be sold to banks if they were guaranteed by the Government on the F. H. A. plan; and I believed that it would be a better principle of Government to handle the R. F. C. in that manner.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one or two observations with reference to the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]——

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me before doing that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to make the observation to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is no liquidation here and there is no giving up of capital stock, because in every paragraph you increase in great proportion as you allow the decrease.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have not advocated the liquidation of the R. F. C. What I am complaining about is the unsound procedure in reducing the capital structure of the R. F. C. at the same time you extend its lending power.

This is unsound for any lending agency and, as perhaps has been pointed out, Mr. Jones said they were doing this:

> The principal purpose of the bill is to provide a means of returning to the Treasury $300,000,000, conforming to the President's Budget message, wherein he expects to recover from lending agencies $700,000,000 they do not now need.

This is on page 3 of the hearings, and we do this at a time when I assume there is an emergency in this country, when I assume that private industry and borrowers are going to call upon the R. F. C. to grant them some additional loans.

Again, I observe that if we wish to make a direct pipe line to the Treasury and let the Treasury carry whatever burden may develop under the administration of the lending agencies, whether it be Mr. Schram or Mr. Jones or somebody else, because men do not go on forever, very well and good; but this is unsound financial procedure, and that is the point I am arguing, and I do not propose to let the gentleman from Tennessee place meanings on my words.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. You are perfectly willing to have the R. F. C. lend to private business whatever money is necessary in order to enable them to expand and carry on the program?

Mr. CRAWFORD. With this proviso.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Answer the question first.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That private industry have a chance to do something itself and get rid of the six and a half billion dollars of excess reserves and get some of the $24,000,000,000 of demand deposits and some of the twenty-four and one-half billion dollars of time and savings deposits, and thereby preserve the private capitalistic system of this country, and having done that, then let these Government agencies function as is necessary. That states my position.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. HAWKS. Does the gentleman suppose that Mr. Crowley, in handling the F. D. I. C., has been as liberal with the banks of this country as we are with the R. F. C.?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Crowley insists that the capital structure of the banks be maintained, either by earnings or by contributions by stockholders to replenish losses that may occur through operating conditions or losses outside of operations, such as losses on bonds and portfolio liquidations, and he also demands that, unless they do that, the F. D. I. C. takes them over and forces liquidation or consolidation with some one or more banking institutions. Only in this way can he carry out the functions of deposit insurance.

Mr. HAWKS. He makes them put up or shut up.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Would the gentleman guarantee that these $6,000,000,000 of reserves that he talks about will loan that money to private industry?

Mr. CRAWFORD. So far as my power goes, I guarantee that private industry will never again function in this country as it has in the past until the Federal Government takes a more kindly attitude toward private industry. In this connection let me observe that we have about eleven and one-half million unemployed, approximately nineteen and one-half billions of gold, six and six-tenths billions of excess reserves, perhaps a national income this year of about seventy-five billions, a Federal direct debt approaching $50,000,000,000, a three and one-half billions deficit for the current fiscal year; bank deposits owed to our people by the banks are at the highest point in our history; a declining volume of loans; a stymied stock market with commodity markets declining; about 8,000,000 families facing starvation; a rapidly expanding policy of substituting State capital for private capital; a Congress that has in years past, if not at the present moment, been rather unfriendly to private enterprise; an unsound taxing policy; a country blessed with empire, natural resources, diversified climate, and filled with people who want to adventure, who want to reinvest, who want to do things for themselves; but with such an inclination for the Congress to authorize the Government to further compete with these individual citizens the gentleman wants to know if I will guarantee that the individuals involved will go out and do the job. Of course, they will not unless Government changes its attitude toward them. Today there is no sound basis on which our people can make long-term commitments, and this is because they do not know what attitude the Government will take on such matters as those we are today discussing in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SACKS. Is it not true that Mr. Jones testified that in the creation of this new corporation, private capital will not lend the money to carry these strategic materials that we need?

Mr. CRAWFORD. And at no time have I complained about the Government-created corporations carrying the burden of strategic materials. That is a matter of national defense, and why should any individual be forced or expected to venture his private savings to carry that class of material in behalf of the general welfare? Of such is the national burden and should be carried by the people as a whole.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. As between borrowing money through the R. F. C. and lending it to Government-guaranteed private loans, as with the F. H. A., is not the R. F. C. plan an inadequate plan, which we abandoned when we took up the F. H. A. plan?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I give the R. F. C. credit for one thing, and that is they encouraged the private banks to participate with them in these industrial loans, and if we could get the individuals of this country and get the Congress to be friendly to the private system of enterprise in this country, the banks would eventually be taking all of these loans, and the R. F. C. could step out of the picture.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have had some little experience in connection with banks, and I am wondering if it is not a fact that the Government was forced to place itself in a position whereby credit could be extended and money loaned to private individuals because of the fact that our private banking system had broken down and was not furnishing the needed funds with which to carry on business?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is a moot question, but, as I remember it, the Federal Government closed the banks of this country, and scores of those banks which were closed by the Government have paid up 100 percent, and so I think we better not get into that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hold in my hand an amendment which I at first proposed to offer, but I am not so sure that I ought to offer the amendment at that particular point in the bill. Some of the gentlemen have told me that section 5 in this bill carries all the provisions of additional power to R. F. C. that are needed. I am a little bit dubious about that. I have read section 5 carefully. I find myself in thorough accord with the provisions of section 5 so far as it goes. I do not believe it goes as far as we should enact in this program. We want to acquire these strategic minerals and that as quickly as possible as a matter of national defense. There is no doubt about that.

Then along with that the other prong on this fork is the development of strategic minerals in our own land. That is the provision that I wonder whether section 5 adequately covers. The amendment I have in mind to offer is this, that at the end of line 21, on page 5 of the bill, a new section be added. All that part of my bill (H. R. 9996) beginning on line 7, page 1, be inserted to read:

SEC. 6. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon sufficient security to recognized and established corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting ores. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of a quartz ledge, or vein, or other ore body, or placer deposit, containing gold, silver, or tin, or gold and silver, or any strategic, critical, or essential mineral which, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be of value to the United States in time of war, when, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there is sufficient reason to believe that, through the use of such loan in the development of a lode, ledge, or vein, or mineral deposit, or placer gravel deposit, there will be developed a sufficient quantity of ore, or placer deposits of a sufficient value to pay a profit upon mining operations: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 shall be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such development purposes; except that not in excess of $40,000 in the aggregate may be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such purposes, if such corporation, individual, or partnership has expended funds previously obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for such purposes in such manner as to justify an additional loan for such purposes: Provided further, That there shall not be allocated or made available for such development loans a sum in excess of $10,000,000.

However, my bill which I would like to incorporate in the measure before the House was only temporarily considered yesterday by the Committee on Banking and Currency. True, a hearing on it has been had by the gentleman from Nevada and the gentleman from Arizona. Yet I fear that not enough consideration has been given the bill up to this time. In view of the fact that this bill has the approval of Mr. Jesse Jones, it would be quite proper to incorporate it, but I do feel it would be more properly supplementary to the bill before the House today. Perhaps it can be passed later.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman is rather modest. The gentleman from Arizona introduced the bill to which reference was made. I have gone over that bill and I think it is a very meritorious bill. However, if we are unable to get that, it seems to me that section 5 in the present bill goes along fairly well in the direction of accomplishing the purposes set forth in the gentleman's bill. There is one question, however, I would like to have the gentleman's view on, and that is this: In section 5 does the gentleman understand that that is broad enough to include the making of loans by the Government through the R. F. C. to corporations outside of governmental corporations, which are engaged in the development and production of these strategic metals?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am told that it is broad enough. I earnestly hope it is, for that is the very thing I want provided in the law.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the legislation, there are two objectives to be sought: First, to obtain stock piles of strategic war materials sufficient to insure the national defense of this country, either from abroad or from domestic sources. When that is done, then we ought to provide for the development of our natural resources, so that we would not be cut off by the closing of foreign markets to this country, which is more than ever apparent than before the war.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman expresses my view exactly.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I talked to the gentleman, and I said I thought this bill carried provisions along the line he was suggesting, and I asked Mr. Jones this question in substance: "Do you have authority today to loan money to a mining corporation engaged in the production of strategic materials and would you do so to help them develop local supplies of that as against purchasing on the outside?" And his answer was "Yes."

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I am glad to get that affirmative reply from the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. But I want to give Mr. Jesse Jones more power in this respect than he has under existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to include the development of silver and gold deposits?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. My interest is in the strategic materials—strategic, critical, and essential minerals, as listed by the War Department.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does the War Department list silver and gold as strategic materials needing development?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I believe not; not to my knowledge.

I am in favor of this bill. If it does not go far enough, I am going to ask favorable consideration at a later date from this committee with regard to my bill, which will permit loans to be made to private industry in the development of these strategic minerals. This is a part of that desirable legislation suggested by the Small Mine Operators' Association of Arizona. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to remind the House that the amendment striking out section 4 has not yet been voted upon. Before we vote on that matter, and because many Members have come in, this should be restated. This relates to the Farm Credit Administration. We do not need to take this $100,000,000 away from the Farm Credit Administration. We have provided $4,000,000,000. I must reiterate this point. So let us not do this, because Governor Black, in effect, said before the committee, "You know it is not really retiring stock." He says, "We simply put it back into the Treasury. It is used like all other funds. It is like putting money in the bank. It will be available at any time.

The gentleman from Tennessee tries to tell you it is good business to retire capital stock. This is not the effect of this section.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GIFFORD) there were—ayes 66 and noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 15, sec. 606b), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"The Corporation is authorized to create or to organize a corporation or corporations with such powers as it may deem necessary to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program, when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, and to subscribe for the nonassessable stock thereof, and to make loans to any such corporation or to any other corporation to assist in such program. Such loans may be made for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials and other raw materials, for plant construction, expansion, and equipment, and for working capital, and may be made on such terms and conditions and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine.

"Any corporation created or organized by the Corporation under the preceding paragraph is also authorized, with the approval of the President, to make payments against the purchase price to be paid for strategic and critical materials in advance of the delivery of such materials. Whenever practicable, the Corporation may require the payments so made to be used for the purchases of raw or manufactured agricultural commodities to be exported from the United States."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri: On page 5, line 21, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 6. That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 15, sec. 613–c), as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1941,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'January 22, 1947.'

"(b) The first sentence of section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 604), as amended, and the first sentence of section 14 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 614), as amended, are hereby amended by striking out the word 'ten' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'fifteen.'

"(c) The second paragraph of section 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, sec. 606b), as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1939,' wherever it appears therein, and inserting in lieu thereof 'January 22, 1947.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to inquire as to whether there are any amendments to be offered to section 5 of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. In that event, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri will be considered as having been read for information.

The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 4, lines 24 and 25, and page 5, lines 1 to 12, inclusive, strike out the entire language and insert the following:

"In order to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program the Corporation is authorized:

"(1) To make loans to or purchase the capital stock of any corporation (a) for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, and (b) for plant construction, expansion, and equipment, and working capital, to be used by the Corporation in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense on such terms and conditions, and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine; and

"(2) When requested by the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President to create or to organize a corporation or corporations with power (a) to acquire and carry strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, (b) or to purchase land, to purchase, build, and expand plants, and to purchase equipment and machinery for the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as defined by the President in accordance with the Neutrality Act of 1939 necessary to the national defense, (c) to lease such plants to private corporations to engage in such manufacture, and (d) if the President finds that it is necessary for a Government agency to engage in such manufacture to engage in such manufacture itself. The Corporation to make loans to or purchase the capital stock of any such corporation for any purpose related to the national-defense program, on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that the amendment is not as involved as its length would indicate. I have simply offered the language that has been adopted by the Banking and Currency Committee of the other body in a bill on which they will act, I understand, in the next few days. I am further informed that that language was approved in that committee by Mr. Jones.

If language can be written in as a substitute for section 5 of the bill you have before you, that will bring about complete unity and not interfere in any way with the results that we hope for under section 5, certainly it is worthy of our attention and consideration. The amendment divides section 5, as we have it before us now in the House bill, into two parts. Part I to apply the loans that may be made by the R. F. C. for the purchase of equipment and acquiring of strategic and critical materials, as defined by the President, for plant construction, expansions, and equipment, working capital, and so forth, to be used by the Corporation in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary for the national defense under such terms and conditions as the Corporation, meaning the R. F. C., may determine. That section relates only to loans that the R. F. C. can make to private industry, and the only reason for putting it in this bill is to protect the record of the R. F. C. and make it possible for them to make loans to private industry for needed plant expansion.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I am afraid I have not time to yield. If I have time I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman later.

The second section accomplishes the purpose hoped to be accomplished in the House bill that you have before you, allows the R. F. C. to set up a corporation or corporations to build plants, equip them, give them working capital, and so forth, for the procurement of strategic war material or for the manufacture of arms, munitions, or implements of war as defined by the President of the United States according to the Neutrality Act of 1939.

The sentence I have just quoted is taken verbatim from the bill passed by the Congress and signed by the President known as the Finnish loan bill. It simply defines "arms, ammunition, and implements of war."

We all realize that the Government should have factories in stand-by condition to manufacture powder and for the manufacture of such articles as 16-inch cannon and material of that type, factories that we cannot expect private industry to maintain because of the very limited use for such things during times of peace. We want those plants available, we want the Government or corporations set up by the Government to operate them. On the other hand, we do not want the Government to set up under the guise of such corporations, factories to compete with existing establishments. I have read and reread the section. I cannot see that it applies any limitation or works any hardship. It does, however, protect those who are now considering investing their private capital in the expansion of existing facilities. It gives them some assurance that this program we are adopting here today will not make it possible for a Government corporation to build and operate in the next lot a plant for the manufacture of horse blankets, books, saddles, safetypins, or a hundred and one other items that might properly be referred to as war material, material used by the War and Navy Departments.

I now yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. Under the present bill, the bill brought out by the committee, the United States Government could not operate any business. Is that correct?

Mr. MILLER. No; it is not correct.

Mr. SACKS. Under the present bill?

Mr. MILLER. Under the present bill, the House bill, a corporation could operate any type of business.

Mr. SACKS. All I see is the language which says that loans may be made for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials and other raw materials for plant construction, expansion, and equipment.

Mr. MILLER. Loans to the corporation to be set up.

Mr. SACKS. And for working capital. Under the gentleman's amendment the Government could set up a manufacturing plant and run that itself.

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely; and I believe the Government should have the power to set up a factory for the manufacture of powder, 16-inch cannon and war material private industry cannot provide. That is what I want.

Mr. SACKS. I want to point out it goes further than the present bill.

Mr. MILLER. In the one direction, yes, and very definitely limits the other. It limits the factories that the Government can build and operate to those manufacturing arms, ammunition, and implements of war as defined by the President in his proclamation issued in 1939, and only if the President finds it necessary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not had time really to comprehend this amendment. Will the gentleman answer this categorically, if he can. Will his amendment permit the Government to set up Government-owned corporations, financed through the R. F. C., to manufacture goods that compete with private industry—other than what?

Mr. MILLER. Only arms, ammunition, and implements of war as defined in the President's proclamation of 1939 and only when the President finds it necessary for the national defense.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What are those?

Mr. MILLER. I cannot enumerate them all, but they are definitely war materials defined in the Neutrality Act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does it include tractors?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Airplanes?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Tanks?

Mr. MILLER. Tanks; yes, possibly, if industry cannot make them as needed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does include tanks?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, we ask the automobile industry to go out and retool its factories for the purpose of making tanks and other equipment—and I assume that would include military equipment—and at the same time we set up a proposition which permits the Government to go into business and compete with them.

Mr. MILLER. No. I think the gentleman is wrong. My amendment prevents that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I want to bring out.

Mr. MILLER. The discretion is left with the President. We all know we have this War Resources Commission that is going to govern these things. Possibly some automobile plant might under existing law be called upon to do that; but if the amendment I have offered is adopted, then there will not be competition with private industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] for the purpose of bringing out further discussion, because I am not sure I am opposed to the amendment. We faced a situation here in connection with the tax measure which went through the House the other day, now before the Senate, involving the amortization of the cost of plants built or extended for the purpose of carrying on the national-defense program. There is involved the question of excess-profits taxes. If I may remind you, in 1917 Congress authorized private companies which went out and built plants for the purpose of producing war materials to amortize the cost of those plants, the excess cost of those plants, in arriving at the taxable income. I voted against the tax bill the other day which was passed by the House because I felt the bill as drawn was unfair to American industry, because I thought it was unfair to the taxpayers of the country, and because I thought it was not keeping faith with the people of the United States. I find that the Senate is going into some of the very questions I raised in my comments on the floor at that time.

What we should do is encourage private industry to go out and build these plants and at the same time impose an excess tax on private industry to the point where private industry will not gather in excess profits in connection with war materials. At the same time permit private industry to amortize the cost of these plants in arriving at the taxable income. In that way, as we demonstrated through private industry in 1917 to 1919, there would be no necessity for the Government going into competition with private industry.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I hardly think it is fair to levy a tax on industry to take their excess profits and at the same time set up some institution to compete directly with the same industry, or with any industry, for that matter. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, it would authorize the Government to go into business in competition with private industry. If it would prevent that, I would vote for it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As has been pointed out, this bill now before us does authorize the R. F. C. to create corporations to go into all types of competition with private industry, in the manufacture of saddles, blankets, wearing material, clothing, shoes, boots, harness, guns, ammunition, tractors, tanks, airplanes, and everything else which can be construed as carrying on the national-defense program; and, if I may say so, that means flour, it means sugar, it means canned goods, it means everything under the sun for carrying on the defense of our country. If you want to verify that, just go to the rules and regulations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the decisions of the Tax Appeals Board, the decisions of the courts which covered that interesting period from April 6, 1917, to along in 1925. We must bear in mind that the language "national-defense program" carries a far-reaching meaning. The language is very broad. It is not restricted to arms, ammunitions, and implements of war. What is more essential than all kinds of food, clothing, and so forth?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Why could not the matter be settled by a plain restrictive amendment which would provide that in no case should the Government be in competition with private industry except in the cases the gentleman mentions in his amendment, the manufacture of large things like 16-inch guns and similar items?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe that is the way the bill should be amended.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. The amendment I have offered, in my humble opinion, does just that. It prevents them from going into competition except on these war materials the gentleman has referred to, 16-inch guns and powder.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understood the gentleman to say that all of this is in the discretion of the President.

Mr. MILLER. No. It is in the discretion of the President to the extent that you accept his definition as stated in the neutrality proclamation. The original text read "equipment and supplies," and the phrase "arms, ammunition, and implements of war" was substituted for that, so that you would not get into any competition. The only purpose of the amendment and the only reason it was adopted in the other body was to prevent competition. We do not want to interfere with the Government's putting up a factory if private industry cannot take care of that material, and private industry cannot maintain stand-by plants for certain war materials.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If private industry is permitted to amortize the cost of these plants which produce the ordinary things of commerce from taxable income, private industry will build the plants, as is proven by the history of 1917 to 1919.

Mr. MILLER. It will be expensive, though.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this in order to continue this debate a little longer.

An investigation was made by the Shannon committee in 1932, headed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON], and we found at that time that the Government was in the manufacturing business to the extent that it was very competitive with private enterprise. A report was made to Congress, but Congress took no action on the report that was filed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]. It seems to me that any legislation that is enacted at this time whereby we interfere with the initiative of the citizens of America, whether they be individuals or whether they be corporations, is taking away from them rights and privileges which the Constitution of the United States gives them, to be held by them as long as they obey the laws of our land. If we take away from American citizens the opportunity to go ahead, we take away from hundreds of thousands of businessmen in this country, who are repsonsible for the great amount of labor that has been employed in America during the past 150 years, rights given them by the Constitution.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In 1918, when the Government was not in competition with private industry and we spent $19,000,000,000 over the Budget, private industry charged the Government from 400 to 600 percent over the cost of production. This fact was developed in a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs. I can name the article. For instance, for 2-piece underwear that cost 75 cents to produce, the Government was compelled to pay $4, which is 600 percent over the cost of production.

Mr. RICH. Was the gentleman in Congress at that time?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was not, but in 1932 a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs made an investigation, and that is what developed.

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman that if Congress permits any manufacturer to make a profit like that, that profit ought to be taken away from him, and it is easily done; but why penalize good, honest, conscientious American citizens who want to operate a legitimate business, and put the Government into business? That is only common sense.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not yield.

When you take away——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We did not take away, but we did turn millions in income-tax refunds back to them several years later.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut will permit the Government to continue in business in competition with the private citizens of this country, then I believe we ought to amend it so that it will eliminate such Government competition. This would keep the Government out of that kind of competition. If any business enterprise does make fabulous profits, as the gentleman from New York said they did, we ought not to permit it. We ought to be sound enough here to stop profiteering during wartime.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I just want to ask a question. I am going to address my question to the chairman of the committee. I simply want to find out——

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further. If the gentleman from Montana wants to get time, let him get his own 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment should be so worded that it will limit the very wide powers of the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. They are limited.

Mr. RICH. So that he will not be permitted to set up all kinds of business enterprises that will compete with the American farmer and the American businessman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentlewoman from Illinois rise?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read again, so we may understand its provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The Clerk again read the Miller amendment.

CHICAGO MANUFACTURING AREA, SAFEST FROM ATTACK, HAS EVERY NATURAL ADVANTAGE FOR PRODUCTION OF NATION'S PREPAREDNESS SUPPLIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am, indeed, surprised that the gentlemen on the left should offer such an amendment advocating that the Government go into business in competition with our private industries. As a rule we on this side are charged with favoring such a program as the gentleman proposes. Today we see this amendment is proposed by those who unfairly charge us with favoring such a program because they are proposing that very plan.

As one who had experience during 1917 and 1918 I subscribe to and endorse the provision in the bill, and I hope the bill will pass in that form and that the amendment now proposed will be defeated.

MISTAKE MADE DURING WORLD WAR SHOULD SERVE AS A LESSON NOW

During the war a grave mistake was made, which later had to be corrected by President Wilson, when the record showed that New England and the western coast had taken on twice as much, and in some instances three times more, governmental work than they could possibly produce. This retarded and delayed the Army and Navy from obtaining much-needed equipment and supplies. The manufacturers in these sections obtained skilled mechanics and laborers from Chicago and the Middle West territory, separating the workmen from their families, and upon their arrival in the East and on the west coast they were unable to afford them decent or proper housing facilities.

This situation was brought to my attention, and when I called it to the notice of President Wilson, together with the fact that many manufacturers and businessmen in the Middle West were in position to expedite production of needed materials and supplies, the President, recognizing the unfair conditions, ordered a readjustment and reallocation for the production of war supplies to other sections of the country, including the Middle West.

When the reallocation had been effected it was found that the manufacturers who were willing to go into production were handicapped by reason of the fact that a shortage of raw materials and machinery had occurred in their territory as well as of mechanical and skilled labor by reason of their diversion to manufacturers on the east and west coasts. The War Finance Board was created to assist in financing the available plants, and within a short period of time they were able to greatly supplement the needs of the Government. To prevent another such grave occurrence at this time, I respectfully call your attention to the availability of many plants advantageously situated in the Chicago area.

The Chicago Association of Commerce, the Illinois Manufacturers Association, and the Illinois Chamber of Commerce have offered their services to the Government in this connection, and I desire to submit that the Chicago area is centrally and advantageously located to all parts of the country; it has the advantages of not only rail but water transportation; it has labor and is close to all sources of raw materials. A further advantage is that it is far removed from the coasts, and, in view of the fact that war experts feel our country should be protected from any eventuality by establishing plants removed from our vulnerable coasts, I respectfully submit these facts for the information of the various departments and to manufacturers as to the advantages of the Chicago manufacturing area.

CHICAGO AREA BEST POTENTIAL SITE IN UNITED STATES FOR AIRCRAFT ENGINE LABORATORY

A survey giving effect to strategical and technical forces, and using the concepts of vector analysis, points to the Chicago area for the location of an aviation-engine research laboratory because Chicago offers more natural advantages than any other American city.

Chicago, one of the world's four greatest cities, is a center upon which converge forces of military strategy, access and transportation, industry and commerce, and culture and research.

Chicago has attained greatness because it is at the Nation's industrial and transportational center, because it is near the Nation's center of population, and because it is midway between the geographical center and the financial and governmental centers of the United States.

Chicago is inland, separated from seacoasts by continental mountain ranges, placed conveniently between southern oil fields and northern iron mines, and situated in the heart of the Nation's farm lands, approximately 1,100 miles from the nearest point on the Mexican border.

The thrust of technical considerations and the attraction of strategical centers resolve into one great force indicating Chicago. As a corollary, it is obvious that few other locations surpass the Chicago area in as many as one or two factors and that no other location has such a complete complement of advantages.

CENTRAL LOCATION

Chicago is the economic center of gravity of the United States. Inland, between continental mountain ranges, Chicago is adequately protected against attack from the Nation's seacoasts.

The Nation's transportation and industry—the two most heavily weighted factors in economic and technical considerations—are centered in the Chicago area. The concentration of transportation facilities and industrial plant equipment in the Chicago area means that nearly every technical need can be satisfied within 1 working day.

Other important, though less heavily weighted, factors array themselves on all sides of the Chicago area:

To the east: Government, industrial States, finance, airplane engines.

To the west: Aircraft, agriculture, center of area, raw materials.

To the north: Iron ore, copper, timber.

To the south: Population center, cotton, petroleum.

All directions: Coal.

TRANSPORTATION

Chicago is readily reached from Washington and Dayton and from east coast engine plants and west coast plane plants, because the Nation's air lines, highways, railroads, and even whaterways meet in one great central terminal—Chicago.

Throughout its history Chicago, at the lower tip of Lake Michigan, has been a natural intersection of travel routes. The watershed divide between the Mississippi and St. Lawrence River systems is in the Chicago area. This divide is at the same time the lowest and most convenient crossing for land routes. Prairies surrounding this low divide are excellent terrain over which to fly.

Therefore continental airway, highway, and railway routes have converged upon Chicago as a terminal, with the result that land, air and water transportation facilities capable of handling the commerce of a nation have developed at Chicago.

LABORATORY SITE—OUTRIGHT GRANT

The Chicago Association of Commerce has surveyed possible sites for aviation-engine laboratory use, has arranged for the grant of necessary land to the United States Government, and has checked each proposed location for airport accessibility, railroad connections, power sources, highway connections, nearby residential sections, commutation service, and all other features necessary to convenient and efficient operation of a scientific laboratory.

CHICAGO AIRPORTS

The terrain around Chicago is suited to aviation—level plains, free from obstructions, extend in three directions, and Lake Michigan extends 400 miles in the fourth direction.

TOPOGRAPHY

Chicago area elevation ranges between 590 and 652 feet above sea level and about 19 feet above Lake Michigan.

The area is essentially level or rolling prairie, free from mountainous obstructions. City areas, of course, are obstructed by buildings, but Chicago, the only large city in the area, is long and narrow, with Lake Michigan on the east and flat prairie on the west of the narrow sides.

The mass of the area outside of the city and industrial sections is in cleared farm land, and only one or two river valleys have extended timbered areas, and in even this case the timbered areas are narrow.

CLIMATE, CEILING, AND VISIBILITY

Chicago's fortunate location at the southwest corner of Lake Michigan makes its climate an important aid to production. Lake Michigan's cool expanse of water in the summer protects the city from long periods of high temperatures. Likewise, the relatively higher temperature of the lake water in winter moderates and prevents cold waves.

Chicago's average annual mean temperature over a period of 66 years is 49.3 degrees. This line of approximately 50 degrees average annual temperature, is the line along which the leading markets of the world are located. It determines the zone where the death rate is lowest, where pestilence is less frequent, and where the soil gives the greatest variety of products.

The average annual precipitation is 32.95 inches. The average relative daily humidity is 70 percent. The elevation of Chicago above sea level ranges between 590 and 652 feet, and above Lake Michigan, 19 feet.

The Weather Bureau reports that 94 percent of the year—that is, 343 days out of 365 days—the conditions of 700-foot ceiling and three-fourths-mile visibility obtain. Surveys show this data to compare favorably with other cities.

UTILITIES

Chicago, as every great city must, has provided itself with all types and varieties of utility service. The very magnitude of the Chicago industrial area is evidence that utility services are available to satisfy every requirement.

ELECTRICITY

Adequate and economical electric service is furnished in Chicago and surrounding area by an interconnected supply system the total capacity of which is in excess of 2,000,000 kilowatts. Diversified industrial and commercial progress has been stimulated by an abundant supply of low-cost electricity.

Ten thousand kilowatt load—Per kilowatt-hour

Service is available in 60-cycle, single or three phase, 120- to 12,000-volt classifications.

GAS

An adequate supply of refined and controllable gas is furnished in Chicago and surrounding area. Natural gas of 1,000 B. t. u. and mixed gas of 800 B. t. u. are available. Gas in the Chicago area is sold by therms equal to 100,000 B. t. u. Rates run as low as 2 cents per therm for the larger loads.

Nearly 200,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas from the Texas Panhandle reaches Chicago area each day through a 24-inch, 1,000-mile natural-gas main. The gas company supplies more than 840,000 customers with more than 67,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas each year.

WATER

Chicago has an unfailing, abundant, easily obtained supply of water in Lake Michigan.

The rate for water to industrial users, when taken through a meter, is 6.8 cents per thousand gallons. This is the lowest rate charged for water by any city in the world.

Chicago's water-supply system annually provides more than 375,000,000,000 gallons of water for the city of Chicago and for 53 communities in the Chicago area. Water flows by gravity from a system of 6 cribs, through a system of 58 miles of water tunnels. It is then pumped into 3,785 miles of water mains to the entire community.

Pressure normally ranges between 25 to 65 pounds per square inch. At no time in recent years has any section of the city been left without water.

The water is comparatively soft, running 7.6 grains of hardness per gallon.

All water is sterilized with liquid chlorine to the extent necessary to make it safe for drinking.

OIL

There are nine oil refineries in the Chicago area capable of running more than 260,000 barrels of crude oil and cracking 190,000 barrels per day. Under normal conditions all types of fuels are readily available.

Illinois is the third petroleum-producing State in the United States. More than 425,000 gallons of petroleum—more than one-tenth of the total national output—are produced in Illinois each week.

COAL

Third among all coal-producing States in the Nation, Illinois has vast supplies of coal which are quickly transportable by rail to Chicago at moderate costs. More than half of Illinois' 102 counties are actively producing coal. Augmenting this supply is the output of mines in Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, and Iowa.

Coal is one of the raw materials which has enabled Chicago to grow great.

TELEPHONES

Close to 4,000,000 local messages are sent over Chicago's telephone system each day. Chicago's 3,800,000 population uses more than a million telephones.

Direct long-distance wires and teletype service to Washington, Dayton, Hartford, Paterson, and Indianapolis—and every other important city in the United States—enable executives located in Chicago to hold conferences with men throughout the Nation.

INDUSTRY—LABOR

Chicago is the Nation's greatest center of basic industries. A population of more than 5,000,000 persons in the Chicago area provides the Nation's largest reservoir of industrial workers.

The wide variety of large-scale, basic industries in the Chicago area carries on balanced industrial activity and provides an economic stability enjoyed by few, if any, other American cities. No industry dominates the activity of the area; no industry controls the welfare of the community.

Industrial activity is concentrated about twice as heavily in the Chicago area as in the United States as a whole.

Annual value of products manufactured in Chicago is greater than $4,711,000,000. An average of more than 500,000 industrial workers is constantly employed.

Steel works and rolling mills employ more than 66,000 workers, and machinery manufacturers employ more than 80,000 workers.

Chicago manufacturing has enabled workers to acquire skills and experience in the same operations and processes used in the manufacture of aircraft and airplane engines.

Manufacturers may locate in the Chicago Industrial Area with the assurance that their labor requirements will be filled by competent, cooperative workers.

Chicago strike time loss is far below that in other cities much smaller, and below the national average.

MECHANICAL INDUSTRIES IN CHICAGO INDUSTRIAL AREA

Tool and machinery manufacturing in the Chicago industrial area produces equipment used in the production of airplanes and airplane engines.

In the Chicago area are produced light, fast transportation equipment made of aluminum and steel alloys in streamlined shapes, internal-combustion engines made to low-tolerance specifications required by sustained operation.

The mechanical industries already in Chicago are many times as great as those in most other industrial centers. Every need of the aircraft industry can be readily met in the Chicago industrial area. The following from the United States Census of Manufactures will attest to this statement:

	Number of concerns	Value of products, 1937
Machine tools	20	$12,000,000

NATION'S LARGEST STEEL MILLS ARE IN CHICAGO AREA

The Chicago area has 9 steel ingot mills with a total capacity of nearly 14,000,000 tons. The Pittsburgh area has 24 mills with total capacity of 15,000,000 tons.

The Nation's largest steel mill, located at Gary, in the Chicago area, has a capacity of slightly more than 5,000,000 gross tons of steel ingots. This is equal to the sum of the capacities of Pittsburgh's 2 largest mills. Furthermore, Chicago's first 3 steel mills' total capacity equals the total of Pittsburgh's first 7 mills.

During the last decade Chicago's position as a steel center has improved with respect to Pittsburgh's. In 1929 the dollar value of Chicago's steel works' and rolling mills' output was about 70 percent of Pittsburgh's. In 1937, according to the United States Census of Manufacturers, the percentage had increased to 79 percent.

Chicago's steel-ingot plants are located in South Chicago, East Chicago, Indiana Harbor, Gary, and Chicago Heights. The ingots are used for semifinished blooms, billets, slabs, sheets, strips, steel for forgings, heavy structural shapes, and railway rails.

SKILLED LABOR AVAILABLE FOR AIRPLANE PRODUCTION

Chicago is a source of skilled and experienced labor in all of the lines necessary to the production of aviation engines and airplanes.

Chicago industrial workers operate nearly 10 percent of the Nation's lathes, hydraulic presses, and drop hammers.

More than 20,000 men are engaged in welding operations, and 25,000 industrial workers operate pneumatic tools.

RESEARCH

Research is conducted in Chicago by industrial concerns, by universities, and by libraries and museums.

A. One hundred and twenty-eight manufacturers maintain research and engineering laboratories in Chicago.

B. Twenty universities and colleges conduct research in the Chicago area.

C. Library and scientific museum facilities in Chicago are famous throughout the Nation.

D. Chicago is the home and meeting place of numerous scientific and engineering societies.

Therefore Chicago offers unusual opportunities for bringing together and developing a staff of research workers.

BILL WILL AID SMALL MANUFACTURER AND AFFORD A SQUARE DEAL TO THE MIDDLE WEST

The purpose of this measure is to help the small manufacturer and to give the Middle West and other sections of the country where the very large plants are not located, a chance to be of service to the Government and at the same time bring about reemployment of people in those sections who are ready to cooperate with the Government in every possible way and aid our national defense.

I feel that the amendment should be defeated and the provision as written in the bill should be accepted because I consider it for the best interest of the entire country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The question I would like to have answered is whether or not the provisions of section 5 of the present bill are sufficiently broad to permit the lending of money to permit corporations to go into the development of strategic minerals. If the gentleman cannot answer that question, I will address it to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. I think section 5 does that very thing and will permit the lending of money for development, construction, and aid in acquiring the things which the gentleman has enumerated.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether he confirms the opinion of the gentleman who is now speaking?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot answer that, but if the gentleman will ask me a question about the bill, I can better answer him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am trying to find out if section 5 is sufficiently broad to include the lending of money by the United States Government to provide assistance to individuals engaged in the production or development of strategic minerals.

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly; that is the purpose of it.

Mr. SABATH. Now, in conclusion, let me state that the city that I have the honor in part to represent is splendidly equipped to be of service to the Government and the Chicago Commerce Association has volunteered to do all in its power to help and assist in this matter. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I would not seek to impose myself upon the Committee at this late hour were I not convinced that this is an exceedingly important question and should not be passed upon in haste. I know it is exceedingly difficult to legislate on the floor of the House because misunderstandings arise as to the meaning of language and the questions already asked here indicate very clearly that a great many of us need light on the matter. I do not pretend to be able to throw light on all of it, but nevertheless I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] stressed the desirability of having the Government extend proper financial aid to small business and private corporations which, with such aid, may come to the help of the Government at a time of emergency.

The Miller amendment does that very thing. In the first paragraph it authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make such loans not only for the acquiring of critical materials but also loans for plant construction, expansion and equipment, and working capital, provided of course that those loans are to be used in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense. So the Miller amendment takes care of the very thing that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was contending for.

The second paragraph of the Miller amendment is completely different, and it is limited in its application. It authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to create separate corporations with power to do certain things. One of them is to acquire and carry strategic materials.

Such a function would not run into competition with private industry, the acquiring and carrying of a stock pile of tin, tungsten, or anything of that sort. Private capital would never think of doing such a thing.

The next thing it does is to authorize such corporation in effect to go into the business, if you please, of manufacturing arms, ammunition, and implements of war. They have all been defined under the terms of the Neutrality Act, through proclamation I think under the State Department. "Arms, ammunition, and implements of war" are thoroughly understood.

I have been all of my life a defender of private enterprise, so much so that I have been charged with being a reactionary on a great many occasions, and probably will be in the future, but I do not carry that conviction to the extent of contending that it is improper for the Government of the United States to manufacture its own weapons. We maintain an arsenal at Springfield, Mass., a Government arsenal, where the Garand rifle is being made. I would not contend, and I think no one in the House would contend, that the arsenal is in competition with private industry. We have an arsenal at Watervleet, where certain types of guns and gun carriages are made. There is a gun factory here in Washington under the auspices of the Navy Department. I think none of us would contend those institutions are in competition with private capital, but even if they were, I go to the extent of saying that this is a legitimate activity of Government in its own interest.

The manufacture of weapons for the Army and Navy is, to my mind, in an entirely different category than is the manufacturer of shoes, shirts, tents, or even trucks. Those are things which are produced in civil life normally, and the Government should not put up a clothing factory; but if the Garand rifle cannot be made in sufficient quantities, with sufficient speed at Springfield, the Miller amendment will permit the Government to build another plant. Also, there is a new gun coming out, the 105-millimeter fieldpiece. We have scarcely any of them and no manufacturer in this country has ever made them. It would not compete with private manufacture if the Government financed a plant in which to make its own 105-millimeter fieldpiece. The amendment by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] confines the activity of the Government to the manufacture of weapons. It does not permit the Government to go into the manufacture of things which private industry ordinarily in time of peace or war can make probably more efficiently than the Government itself.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman point out the particular provision of the Miller amendment that so distinguishes it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The Corporation is authorized to purchase land, to purchase buildings, and expand plants, and to purchase equipment and machinery for the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as defined by the President under the Neutrality Act.

That is all it can do. Then in the concluding subsection it provides that if the President finds it necessary, a Government agency may engage in such manufacture.

Mr. MAY. These same things.

Mr. WADSWORTH. These same things, to engage in their manufacture.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has certainly expressed my sentiments with reference to this proposition and I would be glad to go along with them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This limits competition on the part of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER) there were ayes 83 and noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 5, line 21, after the words "United States", insert "Provided, That no such payment shall be made more than 120 days in advance of delivery."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is offered simply to relieve the minds of some who feel that the last paragraph of section 5 makes it possible to circumvent the Johnson Act. It simply says that where we are buying rubber, tin, and other things of that kind and where this section allows the Government to pay for that material in advance, that it shall not be paid for more than 120 days in advance. Under the wording of section 5, the last paragraph, it would be possible for corporations set up under this act to advance money on purchases of strategic war material for 4 or 5 years before we made collection from them on the strategic war material.

I think the amendment is clear. It simply makes sure that the limitations of existing law shall be adhered to; that there is no desire to circumvent that act or any other act that limits the credit of certain countries in default, and if it does that the amendment can do no harm.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, this ties into this question of barter and trade generally? As an illustration, take the cotton-rubber barter deal which we made last June, I think it was. Only 30 percent of the supplies have been delivered. If the language is permitted to remain in the bill as presented to the House today, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] has pointed out, the Federal Government could make advance payment, we will say, of $100,000,000 to the East Indies Co. or a European company, and 1, 5, or 10 years could pass before the delivery of the goods had to be made. It amounts to an extension of credit of the amount advanced in the form of advance payments. Personally I think the gentleman's amendment is very constructive and should be adopted.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I realize there are Members of the House who feel that the restrictions contained in the Johnson Act should be repealed. If that is the feeling of Congress, I would prefer to see Congress do the courageous thing and pass on the question of whether or not we should repeal the Johnson Act, and not accomplish it by a subterfuge.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I understood the gentleman to make some remark with respect to the Johnson Act. As I understand it, this avoids that act?

Mr. MILLER. No, no. The section as we have it before us allows the Corporation to pay for this material in advance. As the gentleman from Michigan said, we can pay $100,000,000 today for rubber to be delivered at some later date—say, 5 years from now.

Mr. MAY. But under this amendment you cannot deal with any government that owes us money?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. MAY. I want to repeal the Johnson Act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under your amendment we can deal with any government?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, surely.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The point is the material must be delivered within 120 days after the advance payment is made by the Federal Government.

Mr. MILLER. To put it another way, it must not be paid more than 120 days in advance.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. What is the situation with respect to land for the construction of a building, for instance?

Mr. MILLER. This has nothing to do with that. It does not apply to this last section:

Any corporation created or organized by the Corporation under the preceding paragraph is also authorized, with the approval of the President, to make payments against the purchase price to be paid for strategic and critical materials in advance of the delivery of such materials.

That is all my amendment applies to.

Mr. McGRANERY. It has nothing to do with land.

Mr. MILLER. Nothing at all.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Let me explain that in case the gentleman's other amendment, the first one offered and just adopted by the committee, should be voted on and voted down by the House; I want to make this point clear, that the gentleman's amendment coincides in part, but only in part, with the one I had in mind. However, it goes beyond the amendment I had in mind. So anxious am I to get even a part of this into the law, I was glad to support the whole amendment and thank the gentleman for offering it.

Mr. MILLER. I did not hear the gentleman's amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAWFORD) there were ayes 76 and noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: Page 5, line 12, after the word "determine", insert a comma and the following: "but no loans shall be made under this section for the development of silver or gold deposits."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, not much explanation is needed to understand this amendment.

The reason for offering this amendment is to prevent further raids on our Treasury by the silver interests in the country, inasmuch as there has been introduced in the Senate a silver and gold bill, S. 4008, which provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be permitted to make loans upon sufficient security to recognized and established corporations and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting ores, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is permitted also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of quartz ledge or other ore body or placer deposit containing gold, silver, and tin, or gold, and silver.

The bill before us contains no definition of strategic and critical materials. It has been argued that this does not include silver and gold. If it does not include silver and gold there should be no objection to my amendment. The fact that this bill mentioned has been introduced we should be convinced that an interpretation might be placed on "strategic and critical" materials so that money could be lent by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and these other lending agencies for the purpose of developing silver and gold deposits.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I know the gentleman is interested in silver. I shall be very glad to yield to him in just a moment.

The silver interests in this country have already sold us 325,700,000 ounces of silver at a cost of $241,000,000. With silver selling at 35 cents an ounce—and it is not worth any more than that and likely would be down to 10 or 15 cents but for the arbitrary price the Treasury now fixes—at 35 cents an ounce the silver interests in this country have already received a bonus of $123,505,000. I think we should do everything at the present time to guard the Federal Treasury. For that reason I offer this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Are we not in agreement on the definition of this term by the War Department: Strategic, critical, and essential materials? We are agreed on that, are we not?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I do not know what the War Department's definition is, but I believe the gentleman indicated that it does not include silver.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is my understanding.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Then we will make sure of it, because we are doing the defining, not the War Department.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. But the gentleman is discussing a bill which is not before the House, a bill that was introduced in another body which has not reached the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I merely mention that bill to indicate what interpretation may be placed on these words, what definition may be given to "strategic and critical materials." That is the whole point.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman will find in the hearings of the House Military Affairs Committee a list of what is denominated by the War Department as strategic raw materials. They are about 37 in number, if I remember correctly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Ohio) there were—ayes 33, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I believe at this point I should make a brief explanation of my amendment. The amendment which I have offered extends the time within which the R. F. C. can function from 1941 to 1947. It also extends the life of the Corporation from 1941 to 1947. That is what the amendment is. It is desired by the Corporation. I think under the circumstances there could be no objection to it. It simply extends the time during which the Corporation can function.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments, under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9958) to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 517, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Miller amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the so-called Miller amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 4, lines 24 and 25, and page 5, lines 1 to 12, inclusive, strike out the entire language and insert the following:

"In order to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program the Corporation is authorized:

"(1) To make loans to or purchase the capital stock of any corporation (a) for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, and (b) for plant construction, expansion, and equipment, and working capital, to be used by the corporation in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense on such terms and conditions, and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine; and

"(2) When requested by the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President to create or to organize a corporation or corporations with power (a) to acquire and carry strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, (b) or to purchase land, to purchase, build, and expand plants, and to purchase equipment and machinery for the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as defined by the President in accordance with the Neutrality Act of 1939 necessary to the national defense, (c) to lease such plants to private corporations to engage in such manufacture, and (d) if the President finds that it is necessary for a Government agency to engage in such manufacture to engage in such manufacture itself. The Corporation to make loans to or purchase the capital stock of any such corporation for any purpose related to the national-defense program, on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 111, noes 69.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 272. Joint resolution to authorize the postponement of payment of amounts payable to the United States by the Republic of Finland on its indebtedness under agreements between that Republic and the United States dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932.

POSTPONEMENT OF PAYMENTS BY THE REPUBLIC OF FINLAND

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 272, to authorize the postponement of payment of amounts payable to the United States by the Republic of Finland on its indebtedness under agreements between that Republic and the United States dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Republic of Finland, at its option, may postpone the payment of amounts payable to the United States of America during the period from January 1, 1940, to December 31, 1940, inclusive, under the agreements between that Republic and the United States of America dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932; and, in the event of the exercise of the option herein granted, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make, on behalf of the United States of America, an agreement with the Republic of Finland for the payment of the postponed amount, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum beginning January 1, 1941, in 10 annuities, the first to be paid during the calendar year beginning January 1, 1941, and 1 during each of the 9 calendar years following, each annuity payment to be payable in 1 or more installments: Provided, however, That the amounts postponed shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum from the date payment of such amounts was postponed to January 1, 1941.

SEC. 2. That agreement authorized in the first section of this joint resolution shall be in such form that annuity payments thereunder shall, unless otherwise provided in such agreement, (1) be in accordance with the agreement with the Republic of Finland dated May 1, 1923, and (2) be subject to the same terms and conditions as payment under the agreement dated May 1, 1923.

Mr. FISH. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that this bill has come here under practically a unanimous-consent agreement and that we have very little time to consider it. I am for the proposal, but I do not think it goes far enough. If we had time to present the facts to the House, I believe the House would be willing to cancel all the loans made to Finland after the World War, and I am convinced that 90 percent of the American people would like to see that done. Those loans made to Finland immediately after the war should be canceled because Finland is the only nation to pay her debts to the United States, and I think it would be a very fine example if the Congress of the United States canceled those debts. I do not refer to the loan recently made by the Congress through the Export-Import Bank to Finland, but to the debts referred to in this bill. I do not think we have the time now to bring it up, but I would like to see that kind of legislation introduced and passed before adjournment.

May I say in these few brief minutes, as we talk about war debts and as I talk about direct cancelation or partial cancelation, I would like to see also a partial cancelation of some of these other war debts, whether they be French or British, in return for the West Indian islands. We ought to have every one of those islands, from Greenland through Trinidad to South America, as a matter of national defense for air bases, for naval bases, and for submarine bases. They are of no value particularly to any foreign country. They are of value to us for national defense. I would like to see the Republicans and Democrats alike adopt a program that we will keep out of Europe and Europe must keep out of America, and we ought to begin by acquiring those islands off our coast by peaceful means and by liquidating some of the war debts which are owed us by England and France.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the present bill, although it does not go far enough. I would like to see the Congress cancel all loans made right after the World War to little, honest Finland. [Applause.]

The Senate joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STRENGTHENING OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That (a) in order to expedite the building up of the national defense, the Secretary of War is authorized, out of the moneys appropriated for the War Department for national-defense purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, with or without advertising, (1) to provide for the necessary construction, rehabilitation, conversion, and installation at military posts, depots, stations, or other localities, of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants, and the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures, as may be necessary), for the development, manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter; (2) to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary; and (3) to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders, and for the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other military equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage), and to amend or supplement such existing contracts, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes specified in this section: Provided, That the limitations contained in sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction, shall be suspended until and including June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by this act: Provided further, That all contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under this section; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of War.

"(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when he deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

"(c) Whenever, prior to July 1, 1942, the Secretary of War deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, he is authorized, from appropriations available therefor, to advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction for the War Department in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price of such supplies or construction. Such advances shall be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. (a) During the fiscal year 1941, all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets in the Army Air Corps, and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps, shall be suspended.

"(b) The President may, during the fiscal year 1941, assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary, irrespective of the limitations on the strength of any particular branch of the Army set forth in the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

"SEC. 3. All existing limitations with respect to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained, shall be suspended during the fiscal year 1941.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War is further authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, That until December 31, 1941, the Secretary of War may, if he finds it to be necessary for national defense purposes, authorize the employment of supervising or construction engineers without regard to the requirements of civil-service laws, rules, or regulations: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), the Secretary of War may remove from the classified civil service of the United States any employee of the Military Establishment forthwith with upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program of the United States and upon the giving of notice to such person of such charges: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal such person shall have an opportunity personally to answer such charges in writing and to submit affidavits in support of such answer.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provision of any other law, the regular working hours of employees of the War Department and its field services (except employees of the War Department engaged in nonmilitary activities) shall be 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President to exist: Provided, That, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, these hours may be exceeded, but compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek, computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate, shall be paid per annum, per hour, per diem, and piece-work employees: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries.

"SEC. 5. The President is authorized, with or without advertising, through the appropriate agencies of the Government (1) to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including all of the objects and purposes specified under any appropriation available or to be made available to the War Department for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941; (2) to provide for the furnishing of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants; (3) to provide for the procurement and training of civilian personnel necessary in connection with the protection of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use or operation thereof; and (4) to provide for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the act of June 7, 1939, but the aggregate amount to be used by the President for all such purposes shall not exceed $66,000,000. The President is further authorized, through such agencies, to enter into contracts for such purposes in an aggregate amount not exceeding $66,000,000. An account shall be kept of all expenditures made or authorized under this section, and a report thereon shall be submitted to the Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress: Provided, That all contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45).

"SEC. 6. Whenever the President determines that it is necessary in the interest of national defense to prohibit or curtail the exportation of any military equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or material or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof, he may by proclamation prohibit or curtail such exportation, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Any such proclamation shall describe the articles or material included in the prohibition or curtailment contained therein. In case of the violation of any provision of any proclamation, or of any rule or regulation, issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The authority granted in this section shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1 of the House bill provided for expediting the national-defense program by authorizing the Secretary of War to provide necessary construction, rehabilitation, and installation of military posts, depots, stations, and other localities of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, including the acquisition of land, for the manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies. This section also provided for suspending until June 30, 1942, the provisions of any statute imposing a monetary limitation on any individual construction project.

Section 1 of the Senate amendment expanded this authority of the Secretary of War so as to include the making of contracts, with or without advertising, for the purposes outlined in the House bill, extended the authority so as to include the conversion of such plants, buildings, etc., and the installation of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants, the acquisition of such land and the purchase or lease of such structure as may be necessary for the purposes specified in the House bill. This section also authorized the Secretary of War, with or without advertising, to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary and to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders and for the exchange of certain surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other such equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage). The limitations of sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction were suspended until June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by the act and it was provided in substance that all contracts entered into by the Secretary of War under the section should be subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healy Act of June 30, 1936. The Secretary of War was prohibited under the Senate amendment from using what is known as the cost-plus system of contract but the Secretary of War was authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances constructed pursuant to the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War (or the President under section 5 of the Senate amendment) by Government personnel or through the agency of selecting qualified manufacturers under contracts and to provide for leasing of any such plants, etc., under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War deemed advisable and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932. The Secretary of War was further authorized to make advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price, such advances to be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War prescribes.

The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with certain qualifying changes, authorizes the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of any such plants, buildings, etc., as well as to lease them and substitutes for the limitation upon the use of the cost-plus system of contracting a provision which bars the use of the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system but allows the Secretary of War, when he deems it necessary, to use the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract.

The second proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided that during the fiscal year 1941 the average number of flying cadets should not exceed 8,500 and that an average of 6,000 Reserve Air Corps officers might be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps. Section 2 (a) of the Senate amendment provided that during the fiscal year 1941 all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps should be suspended. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Section 2 (b) of the Senate amendment provided that the President during the fiscal year 1941 might assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary and contained a limitation that no person was to be excluded from enlistment in any branch of the Military Establishment on account of race, creed, or color. The sixth proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided for the assignment of enlisted men only and did not contain the limitation in the Senate amendment with respect to enlistment. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision without such limitation with respect to enlistment.

The third proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided that during the fiscal year 1941 all existing limitations as to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained should be suspended. Section 3 of the Senate amendment contained a similar provision which the conference agreement adopts. The fourth and fifth provisos of section 1 of the House bill authorized the Secretary of War to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere and to provide for such printing and binding, etc., as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of the act, and authorized him to waive the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912, in connection with the defense program of the United States in any case. Section 4 (a) of the Senate amendment contained a similar provision with respect to employment of personnel but modified the provision authorizing the Secretary to waive the provisions of such section 6 so as to provide that the Secretary of War might remove from the classified civil service, notwithstanding the provisions of such section 6, any employee of the Military Establishment upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program and upon giving notice to such person. An opportunity was also to be afforded any person so removed to answer the charges against him in writing and to submit affidavits in support of the answer within 30 days after such removal. This section of the Senate amendment also provided that the Secretary of War until December 31, 1941, might employ supervising and construction engineers without regard to the civil-service laws if he found it to be necessary for national-defense purposes. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Senate amendment.

Section 4 (b) of the Senate amendment provided that the regular working hours of employees of the War Department and field service should be 8 hours a day and 40 hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President and made provision for overtime payment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment with the qualification that it should not apply to employees of the War Department engaged in nonmilitary activities.

Section 2 of the House bill contained authority for the President to use $132,000,000 during the fiscal years 1941 and 1942 in emergencies affecting the national security and defense for the objects and purposes specified in any appropriation for the War Department for military purposes for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, for furnishing Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants, for procuring and training civilian personnel necessary in connection with the production of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use and operation thereof, and for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the act of June 7, 1939. It was also provided that an account should be kept of all such expenditures and that reports should be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. There was also a limitation that none of the money so authorized should be used to pay salaries to any Communist, Nazi, or Fascist. Section 5 of the Senate amendment contained a similar authorization but did not have the limitation last mentioned. A report of expenditures was to be submitted to Congress on or before June 30, 1942, under the Senate amendment, and there was also a provision that all contracts entered into under the section should be subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act of June 30, 1936. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 5 of the Senate amendment with certain clarifying changes and provides for submitting a report of the expenditures under the section at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress as provided in the House bill.

Section 3 of the House bill and section 6 of the Senate amendment both authorized the President by proclamation to prohibit or curtail the exportation of military equipment and munitions and certain machinery and material necessary for their manufacture or servicing wherever he determines that it was necessary in the interest of national defense. The Senate amendment included operation as well as maintenance and servicing of such machinery. Under the House bill the authority granted under the section was to terminate on June 30, 1942, unless the Congress otherwise provided, but under the Senate amendment it was provided that the authority granted under the act should so terminate. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill with a clarifying change.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, due to the lateness of the hour I shall not tonight have anything to say about some criticisms that were made and which appear in the RECORD as to a certain personal letter that was sent out to some of my friends. I will speak about that next week when we have ample time. Then the gentlemen who took occasion to criticize the letter, one of whom reproduced and circulated it, and gave it publicity, can be here.

Permit me, however, to call your attention to a matter which vitally concerns all of us. We here on the floor of the House as well as millions of people throughout the civilized world read the newspapers. Our impressions are gained from, our thoughts are molded by, we shape our words and determine our actions from day to day in large part upon what we read. Many of us each day get an early edition of the paper, and even before or as we eat our morning meal, scan its pages to gather information to guide us through the day.

Whether we are doubtful as to the course to be taken in a matter of investment, as to a journey, as to political action, or whether we are just searching for amusement, entertainment, the daily paper is the source to which we all turn. Whether it be a desire to learn the trend of yesterday's market, the production that has taken place in industry, the forecast as to the weather, whether it is wise to buy or sell on the market, for information as to the domestic or foreign events, to the daily paper we turn. On the 5th of June, in a letter to some friends of mine, this statement was made:

> This morning's press tells us that Roosevelt yesterday said he saw no good reason why Congress should continue in session for the duration of the emergency, as desired by the Republican Members. Sarcastically, he said the situation did not require Congress to remain in session except for the laudable goal of delivering speeches.

That was a quotation from the June 5 issue of the New York Herald Tribune. Later, on the floor of the House, it was charged that by making that statement I had distorted the truth. Let me assure you that if there was distortion it was not of my doing; and if you examine the paper, you will see that I quoted correctly. That statement in the RECORD to the effect that the truth had been distorted amazed me. Yesterday on the floor of the House the majority leader made this statement, and it appears in the RECORD of June 13, page 8176.

> Mr. Speaker, when gentlemen quote the President as saying he wanted Congress to get out of town or he wanted it to adjourn, they are quoting something that never happened. The President never made any such statement to the press or anybody else.

That statement not only shocked me, it jarred me. It made me nervous; it made me apprehensive, for the press quite generally had carried statements to the effect that the President was demanding that Congress go home and leave the Nation's welfare in his hands. Editorial writers throughout the country commented very freely on the situation, and some of them called attention to the fact that the President had stated in his message that he and Congress were a team, and they were somewhat bewildered by his statement, which, if carried out, would send at least a part of the team to the bench. Almost without exception the editorial writers disagreed with the thought which it was said the President had expressed, namely, that Congress should adjourn and they insisted that Congress stay in session.

Congressmen began to receive cards and letters and telegrams from home. Many came to my desk insisting that if there was a great national emergency requiring the appropriation of billions of dollars, Congressmen stay on the job, perform the duties which had been imposed upon them by their election. We are all prepared for errors on the part of columnists, for many of them are no more nor less than special pleaders. Many of them merely express their own conclusions; practically all of them get their facts from the news writers. Conclusions of columnists which are erroneous in no way surprise us. When, however, the press of a nation makes a statement which the President's representative here on the floor of the House tells us was the reporting of something "that never happened" we are brought up standing. Our faith in humanity is almost destroyed, or at least it would be almost destroyed were it not for the fact, as some of us understand at least, that some 80 reporters, more or less, attend these press conferences, that we know that these reporters' job is to give us the news, the facts as distinguished from what they think or what they would rather have had happen.

Reporters who attend the press conferences of the President or to whom the President's secretary gives information, are, it has been said, picked men; they are men of experience; they are men whose veracity is not open to question. They are men chosen by the great newspapers of the country because of their ability to hear plainly, see clearly, understand accurately, transcribe faithfully, and correctly report what they have seen and what they have heard. It is appalling to think that the press of the Nation, on so important a subject as the adjournment of Congress should be, at a time when the President appears to be driving us into the World War, would have in its employ reporters who were incapable of either hearing, understanding, or setting down the words of the President on that subject. It is equally disturbing to accept the other conclusion, that is, that the reporters had given to their newspapers an account of something that never happened, or that they had distorted what was said by the President. Having been reminded on the floor of the House by a gentleman who spoke the other day that I should have respect for the President, taking that criticism deeply to heart, and desiring to, if I could, respect the President, I turned in sorrow to the contemplation of the dismal fact that I could no longer rely upon my daily newspaper. That the reporters had let me down. For surely, it was said, the President could not be forgetful of what he had told the reporters, nor could he have misstated his thought. Anxious hours were passed by me in the contemplation of a future where I must no longer look to my paper even for information as to a place where I might eat, where I might find amusement, where I might find good fishing, as to what yesterday's market—prices on farm products, for instance—were. Placing full faith and credit in the utterances of the President and his spokesmen, I was almost, but not quite, led to the conclusion that perhaps I dare not rely upon the morning paper as to what ball game would be on in the afternoon, as to whether Congress would or would not meet. As to whether the day would be fair or whether it would rain. In short, it seemed that I must remake my whole life, because of the unreliability, so it was said, of the reporters.

Then came the thought that after all, perhaps the President had been misinformed as to what he really had said. I recalled that on another occasion a warm personal friend of his, a great admirer of his policies, had printed a column, and I refer to Ernest Lindley, in the Washington papers, gave us certain information. Shortly thereafter, the President stated that nothing of the kind as reported by Mr. Lindley had ever happened.

Then to my mind came another recollection of how on one occasion the papers informed us that a committee from the Senate and the House had gone down to see the President on a tax bill, that after the conference with him their spokesman gave out an interview stating that on the President's must list of legislation must go this tax bill; of how on Capitol Hill everything was in a turmoil because the bill had to be drawn and passed forthwith. I remembered, too, the reaction that followed the President's statement as to the necessity for this bill, and with it came the memory that the reaction was adverse to the President's plan and thereupon he quite plainly and forcibly announced that he had not placed the legislation on the must list. Recalling these things and others of like character, the clouds began to roll away, the sunshine sifted through. The conclusion was borne in on me that it might just be possible that our great and sometimes not so accurate President was just spoofing us, as when the mysterious and dangerous submarine was seen off the coast. I remembered that the President has sometimes found it convenient to change his position. In fact that he is consistent only in his inconsistency and in his apparent thought that he can make no mistakes. Hence, in memory came his words delivered to us here on the 16th day of May. Among other things he said:

> For these reasons, I need hardly assure you that after the adjournment of this session of the Congress, I will not hesitate to call the Congress into special session if at any time the situation of the national defense requires it. The Congress and the Chief Executive constitute a team where the defense of the land is concerned.

Pondering those words, it did seem that then at least he had in mind the thought that Congress should adjourn. Had he thought we should stay in session, surely being the great patriot that he is, he would have told us on that occasion that duty required us to stay here in Washington to assist him. Yet he said, "I need hardly assure you that after the adjournment of this session of Congress"—note that "after the adjournment of this session of Congress"—"I will not hesitate to call the Congress into special session if at any time the situation of the national defense requires it." He had just told us that the defense must grow and change from day to day. Unless he was prepared to handle the situation himself, it would seem as though he would on that occasion have said something about our staying here. The President's chief characteristic is his supreme confidence in himself. Notwithstanding a record of 7 years of failures, he still seems possessed of the idea that he can handle everything. He has indicated that belief in many, many ways. So I had no reason to suspect when I read in the great American press that he did not need us. When I read that he had sarcastically—and he loves to indulge in sarcasm where Republicans are concerned—said that the situation did not require Congress to remain in session except for the laudable goal of delivering speeches it seemed that he was not only telling us to go home, but that he was poking a little fun at us—having his little joke as it were—because of our speech making. Whether he was amusing himself because he thought he saw a difference in the quality of our speeches and his, or whether he was just chuckling over the fact that he had a Nation-wide radio hook-up while we as Congressmen had virtually no radio public, I could not determine.

After thinking the matter over at some length, having in mind the President's conduct on other occasions, recalling his forgetfulness about some of his campaign promises, a small, wee doubt crept into my mind. Not as to the accuracy of the words of the majority leader, but as to the reliability of the source from which the majority leader got his information.

My conclusion, valueless as it may be to you, is that we here in Congress may still continue to read our papers. That if from them we learn certain events that transpired here at home or abroad, that various meetings are scheduled for today or tomorrow, that the airplanes will leave at a certain hour, that the trains will depart from the station on schedule, we will be fairly safe, the President to the contrary notwithstanding, in ordering our daily lives from the information so received. Yes; let us still have faith in the reporters who see and hear and record events as they transpire, and let us consider that the statement of the President that he never said it was merely wishful thinking on his part—to his discovery of the fact that the people of the country do not, in this crisis, trust him.

Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to include an editorial at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The following editorial from one of Washington's papers of today may give information which will explain the President's lapse of memory:

CONGRESS HEARING FROM HOME

We think the country will feel relieved at the evidence that administration leaders are backing down on congressional adjournment.

Speaker BANKHEAD now says it is impossible to get gone by June 22, the deadline originally set.

The drive to put that over was slowed up considerably when Treasury Secretary Morgenthau said he was willing to stay on the job if the Congressmen were. The next day came Mr. BANKHEAD'S statement.

What is happening is that Washington has been hearing from home about the preposterous, presumptuous, and dangerous idea of the legislative branch of our Government abdicating in a time of war crisis. The here's-your-hat-what's-your-hurry attitude of President Roosevelt and his associates helped wake up the people to the fact that something queer was going on.

So the grass roots began to register. And that's democracy functioning.

We hope those at home aren't lulled by the partial retreat and that they continue to express themselves in a loud, large, and positive way. The Bankhead statement doesn't exude any enthusiasm. It hath a half-hearted and begrudging sound. But it's a good sign, nevertheless—though no self-starter.

Congress should stay in session for the duration. If it fails to, those who vote to go home should be made to stay there the next time they come up for election.

There is an equally important reason why Congress should stay in session. So far the Senate seems to show no disposition to act on measures which are before it. Six weeks ago we passed and sent over to the Senate the Logan-Walter bill. Thereafter we passed by a vote of 2 to 1 the Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. Yesterday we passed by a vote of 330 to 42 the bill for the deportation of Harry Bridges. It would be well if the House would act on the Hatch bill, which was passed by the Senate by a 2 to 1 vote nearly 2 months ago, and then advise the Senate that the House proposes to stay here until the Senate acts on the Logan-Walter bill, the Smith amendments, and the Bridges bill, and that if the Senate expects to do business with us it will be required to show a little more of the "good neighbor" policy—that it remember that the House is a coordinate branch of the Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I waive my time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on the so-called Finnish relief bill just passed this afternoon, may I say that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] had expressed great interest in this measure. He is detained at home on business. Had he been here he would have been pleased to join in the effort that was made, and which resulted in the passage of this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SENATE

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 28, 1940)

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whose embrace all creatures live, to whom all things in heaven and earth do bow: Be now and always the strong tower and defense of our Nation, and exalt our thoughts above all harassing cares into the contemplation of Thine infinite calm, that in the deep recesses of the soul we may hear Thy voice banishing all doubt and fear and urging us to greater achievement as we battle for the right.

In the fulfillment of the duties of this day may we find the larger freedom which shall lift us above all pettiness, all ignoble strife, into the fuller life of ennobling service for God and country, which Thou hast revealed in the life of the Master of men—Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

There being no objection, the cablegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LONDON, June 13, 1940.

MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

A cry for clear thinking; a plea for quick action. We Americans on British soil, but first and foremost still Americans, now that President Roosevelt has so courageously spoken, implore our fellow countrymen who so obviously want to minimize the present catastrophe to realize that there cannot, there must not, be delay, for delay costs lives. Let us not forget that procrastination is the vice of all free peoples, and by not forgetting it to act at once. To all Americans on both sides of the once broad Atlantic, our duty, one of plain common sense, is obvious: We can help in the following ways:

(1) We must give planes and more planes, guns and more guns, and, if necessary, what is harder still, our men. Sacrifice should be ours as well—sacrifice unstinted.

(2) We must give our full personal material and financial support to those various organizations that are already established, organizations such as the Red Cross, Mr. Wmthrop Aldrich's committees throughout the United States, the American Ambulances for Great Britain (particulars of which were broadcast a few nights ago), the American Field Service, etc. Others as they become necessary will naturally follow.

(3) We Americans should also throw open our shores to the old and young of all the countries stricken by aggression for the duration of the war. By so doing we would greatly alleviate the terrific burden on England and France.

Let each one of us make the biggest effort possible in that capacity to which we are best suited, and make it not tomorrow but today. By so doing we can cry "Halt!" to Mussolini and Hitler. Our efforts now will minimize that slaughter, the resultant victory will be quicker, and peace again will be the way of life.

RESOLUTIONS OF CITIZENS OF DALLAS COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram from a mass meeting held at Dallas, Tex., and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DALLAS, TEX., June 13, 1940.

Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Tonight 35,000 patriotic citizens of Dallas County, in open mass meeting, voted the following resolutions:

"Realizing that our democratic form of government involves responsibility as well as privilege, we, the citizens of Dallas County, Tex., in mass meeting assembled on this the 13th day of June, A. D. 1940, do hereby resolve that:

"(1) We reaffirm our belief in and allegiance to the noble principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence that 'all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights; that among those are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'

"(2) We rededicate and reconsecrate our Nation to the principles guaranteed to free citizens under the Constitution of the United States, and especially to the first Bill of Rights, reading, 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.'

"(3) Realizing the Allies, Great Britain and France, are heroically fighting for the maintenance of those principles we hold dear and since they are in need for war munitions and supplies at once, we recommend that Congress and the President render all assistance possible short of war.

"(4) We urge Congress to repeal immediately the Neutrality Act and pass such other necessary legislation to accomplish the foregoing.

"(5) The program of our State Department for linking together the 21 American republics in a solid front against all undemocratic ideologies receives our whole-hearted approval; that each American republic may be assured that the material might as well as the moral support of each is assured to all; and that our trade relations be built on a foundation of fair dealing, friendship, and mutual benefit.

"(6) We condemn all 'fifth column' and un-American activities which challenge our form of government or its institutions, but at the same time urge our citizens to be calm and not unjustly accuse or persecute anyone.

"(7) We immediately stop the export of war materials to countries through which such materials may find their way to the enemies of democracies.

"(8) We urge Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 immediately for the relief of war refugees as recommended by the President."

Respectfully submitted.

Mayor Woodall Rodgers, chairman of mass meeting; Karl Hoblitzelle, general chairman; resolutions committee: William Harris, Robert Storey, Paul Carrington, Allen Wight, Louis Bailey; executive committee: Nathan Adams, Fred F. Florence, Karl Hoblitzelle.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had an amendment pending. The RECORD shows that he desired a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has advised the Chair that he desires to address the Senate; so the Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

REPORT OF GERMAN POSSESSION OF AMERICAN BOMB SIGHT

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, we all know in this body, and practically everyone in the country knows, that this country is woefully unprepared in the matter of national defense. We further know, or at least it is my belief, that someone in this country has been woefully negligent and delinquent in starting our defense program. I think this program should have been started some time ago; and if the President is the great international authority he claims to be and many people think he is, he certainly must have had at his command information which would have warranted his coming before Congress a whole year ago and asking for the appropriations which he asked for a month ago.

But there is one thing above all others in the entire national-defense program that I have had drummed into my ears in committee hearings: I have read in the press, I have heard over the radio, I have heard on the floor of the Senate, and so on, that the one chief advantage we had in this country was that in our Air Corps we had a bomb sight that was superior to any bomb sight possessed by any other nation in the world. I thought it to be so, and I have repeated the statement myself. You can imagine my shock and my surprise last night when, listening over the radio, I heard a national commentator on the radio say that the Germans had a bomb sight like the American bomb sight. To quote the substance of his words, he said he did not know positively that it was the same instrument, but, on the basis of information from very authentic sources and from all appearances, it was the same or a very similar instrument. I was startled to hear this.

Our bomb sight is the one thing about which we have boasted to the world that we were superior. It is the one precious secret we were supposed to protect above everything else; and now we get this report that it, or one very similar, is in the hands of the Germans. What may we expect next?

If that is true, and it should have been procured from this country, someone has been woefully negligent. A person who would turn such a secret over to another nation could be rightly accused of treason to this country. Certainly the "fifth column" activities are reaching pretty close if information as to our bomb sight, or specifications for it, have gotten out and in some way have found their way into the hands of another power.

I want to go on record here as saying that that is a very dastardly thing, something that the Senate and the Congress of the United States should not pass by; something that Mr. Roosevelt, as President of the country, should look into, and the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, if we have a Secretary of the Navy in this great crisis. I do not know that we have one. The last I heard, he was running for Governor of New Jersey—a very laudable ambition—but certainly we need a Secretary of the Navy in these critical times, when the world is aflame. All of you know the history of the Navy Department. You know that for some time we were without a Secretary of the Navy; and then we had one for a few months, and now he is running for Governor of New Jersey. They say he is going to resign. Let us hope he will do one thing or the other.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Would the Senator object to telling us the name of the radio commentator who made the statement to which he has alluded?

Mr. BRIDGES. One of the reasons why I quote him is that I hold him in very high esteem, and I think he is a very able commentator. The radio commentator's name is Fulton Lewis, Jr.; and his radio program was broadcast over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

I believe that from the President down the line, including the proper committees of Congress, we should take steps to investigate and determine whether or not this report is true. It is a very serious thing if it is true.

I merely bring the matter officially to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard last night the radio broadcast to which the Senator refers; but, as I understood his remarks, he did not even intimate that anyone in the American Government had sold the secret of our bomb sight. He said the authorities had not yet seen the inside of the one found on the captured German airplane, but they said it looked very much like ours. I took it that the commentator wanted to convey to his hearers the idea that Germany had invented and was using a bomb sight which was equal, and probably superior, to ours. I did not take what he said as even indicating indirectly that any American official had been guilty of giving to the Germans the secret of the bomb sight we own.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator is right. He in no way indicated that, and I do not know whether the report is true or not; but it is serious enough that there should be an investigation as to its validity. I think the Senator was right in his understanding. I do not know whether it is true or not; but I say that when this bomb sight, which is one of the military achievements in which we are greatly superior to other nations in the world, or one like it suddenly appears in German hands and is found on German airplanes which have been captured or brought down, the matter certainly is worthy of an investigation by us to see if Americans in any way have had anything to do with turning it over to the Germans; and, if so, then it is treason.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course it is, and if we have any evidence that anyone did it, we should go after him. But suppose an investigation should show that the Germans had invented a bomb sight which was better than ours. Regrettable as that would be, I do not see how we could do anything about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire agrees that the interpretation of the Senator from Nebraska of Mr. Fulton Lewis' broadcast last night was correct, that he did not even intimate that it was the same bomb sight, or that anyone in the American Government had been derelict in any duty with respect to it. But I think it would be agreed by all who have listened to the Senator from New Hampshire in his remarks that he deliberately sought to create the impression that someone in the Government of the United States had been guilty of dereliction in regard to this bomb sight.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me answer the Senator by saying that I hope that the Senator will not try to twist the meaning of my words. I said all along that if the report is true, then someone in this country has been very derelict. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I think it is worthy of an investigation.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, if it is true that someone has been guilty of dereliction, then it is true that someone has been guilty of dereliction. That is the sum and substance of what the Senator has said.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree with the Senator's logic in that. It is very simple. I am glad he understands.

Mr. NORRIS. If it should develop that Germany simply invented a bomb sight that is better than ours, what are we going to do about it?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know that there is anything we can do about it; and that may be the case.

Mr. NORRIS. Until there is some charge or some intimation that someone has been guilty of giving away our secrets we should not even by implication intimate that any official is guilty.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have not implicated any official. I have merely said that the President, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the American Congress should find out whether or not it is true. Even though I differ with the Senator on most occasions, I think that at times he endeavors to be fair. [Laughter.] I think certainly he is raising the same question to me here now that he has charged against Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and the F. B. I. I do not think he had the facts to make the charges he urged against Mr. Hoover and the F. B. I. He made some pretty bad and loose charges then. I am just raising a question.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be convinced that I am guilty of committing murder, but it is not material, so far as our bomb sight is concerned, whether I have killed a whole township of people, or robbed banks, or anything of the kind, or that I have been unjust to the greatest advertiser in the world, Mr. Hoover. I do not think that the matter of the bomb sight has anything to do with Mr. Hoover, or anything to do with how unjustly I have accused him, if the Senator thinks I have. Let us admit, for the purpose of the argument, that I am all unworthy, as the Senator thinks I am; that does not justify the Senator in endeavoring to convey the impression here that some one in our Government has been guilty of giving away the secrets of a bomb sight. There is no indication as yet to that effect. When there is, I want to take the proper steps as badly as the Senator does.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. The commentator said that Germany had a bomb sight which was equal to or probably better than ours; that the inside of it had not yet been seen, but on the outside it looked very much like ours. Germany has probably a good many other inventions which are improvements over what we have or what other nations of the world have. However bad that may be, however much we may regret it, it is not cause for intimating that we should investigate from the President down——

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not say to investigate the President.

Mr. NORRIS. To discover if someone has given away some American secrets.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has me wrong. I know what I said; the Senator does not need to speak for me.

Mr. NORRIS. The newspapers will not get the Senator wrong. It will appear in flaming headlines in the newspapers tomorrow that the Senator from New Hampshire intimates that someone has given away the secret of our bomb sight; that is the impression that is going out.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Nebraska is attempting to give the wrong impression. Let me correct the impression now.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I hope the Senator will.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not charge that the President gave the secret away or that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy did. I merely stated they should investigate this report. It is their duty to investigate it. I did not imply that anyone else gave the secret away, but I said, if it is true, that anyone did, it is treason and should be investigated now.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no report anywhere of which I know that anyone in the Federal Government has been guilty of giving away our secrets. There is no such charge made by anyone. There was no such charge made by the commentator over the radio, and if the people get any such idea they will get it from the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that we should investigate now all our officials to see if someone has not been guilty of giving away our secrets.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator believe that when reports like that come along we should sit still and close our eyes?

Mr. NORRIS. No; and I do not have any idea that the officials are sitting still. I have an idea that by this time, or long before this, that bomb sight over in France has been taken apart and analyzed, and that they now probably know all about it—all that can be known, at least, from an examination of it. It has probably been looked into over there, and is being looked into now by our officials. If I had had any way of looking into it, I would have done it myself, as a matter of curiosity, to see whether, in the first place, they did have such a bomb sight; and, if it was better than ours, I would have been in favor of copying it or getting something just like it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish the Senator, in his consideration of the F. B. I. and Edgar Hoover, had used the same fairness and consideration that he pretends to have in discussing this subject.

Mr. NORRIS. That has not anything to do with the bomb sight, either. According to the Senator's idea, I have not been fair. The Senator and some other people have not probably yet read the testimony that was taken in the investigation by the Attorney General. I have seen no one defending Mr. Hoover, who has admitted what the clear testimony shows, and what now stands undisputed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, during all the discussion in the Senate on the question of preparedness and national defense, very few Senators on either side have sought to inject politics into the discussion. The Senator from New Hampshire evidently, in his remarks this morning, sought to bring a political matter, a partisan matter, into the discussion of national defense by bringing in the question of what Mr. Roosevelt and his administration had done with reference to getting our country ready for defense.

The question of our national defense, and its history during the last few years, is one with which the country is, no doubt, familiar. It is one for which probably no political party and no administration may be held responsible, and certainly not from a partisan, political standpoint. We are familiar with the Disarmament Conference held in Washington in 1921; we are familiar with the Nine Power Treaty; we are familiar with the efforts to disarm which were made in good faith not only by our country but by all other countries.

I am not making any charge that the administrations prior to Mr. Roosevelt were negligent in the performance of their duty. Congress has been as much responsible, if not more responsible, for the failure to appropriate adequate amounts of money for the national defense as has anyone else in the United States, and it has not been guilty of any partisanship in that respect. We all wanted peace; we all wanted to disarm. Probably the entire world has been caught napping by reason of the situation which has existed during the last 4 or 5 or 6 years, and which exists today.

If there is a desire to enter into a partisan argument over the history of national defense in this country, leading back to the World War, it will be a very interesting discussion. I hope we may not be compelled to enter into that; but, inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire has injected a partisan note into the discussion, and has even gone to the extent of criticizing the Secretary of the Navy by inquiring whether we had a Secretary of the Navy, because the Secretary of the Navy has been nominated for Governor of New Jersey, we might inquire whether we have a Senator from New Hampshire [laughter], because he is running for President of the United States, which is also a very worthy ambition. I might say that I am willing to make the prediction that if the record is examined, it will be found that Secretary Edison has been on the job infinitely more in the last 3 or 4 months than the Senator from New Hampshire has been on the job in the Senate of the United States. Mr. Edison has resigned as Secretary of the Navy, to take effect on June 24, which is the exact date on which the Republican Convention will meet in Philadelphia; and while Mr. Edison will go out of the Navy by his own choice, on the same day the Senator from New Hampshire will go out of the Republican Convention by its choice. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether or not Hitler has come into power since Mr. Roosevelt has assumed the Presidency and the Senator from Kentucky has been in the majority party in Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New Hampshire is more intimate with Hitler than I am. Let him answer his own question. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Kentucky knows full well the restrictions imposed as a result of the disarmament conferences, and so on. He knows perfectly well that when the last Republican administration was in power there was no Fuehrer Hitler. He has seen him come to power in this time. The leader of his party, the President today, Mr. Roosevelt, has been President during that entire period. There has been no time when the President has not had an overwhelming majority in Congress. The new dealers have been riding high for the last 7½ years, and have not heeded the warning in the danger brought about by the rise of nazi-ism. Now we have to pay the price in unpreparedness for their neglect.

Mr. BARKLEY. To answer the Senator's question specifically—the answer to which he knows himself—Hitler has come into power, of course, since 1932. The Senator also knows that during that period of time the Congress has not been willing to appropriate the amount of money and has not been willing to go as fast as the President asked it to go in matters of national defense, and that only a year ago was Congress sufficiently aroused on the subject to adopt almost unanimously the national-defense program recommended by the President of the United States. If any persons have been guilty of lack of foresight, or, in other words, have had "bum sight," that guilt is as much chargeable to Congress as to anyone else in the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky the question whether or not he thinks that if the President had come before the American Congress a year ago when this war broke out and given Congress the true picture, as he saw it, through the information he must have had, and asked for appropriations for national defense, he would have gotten them?

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt very seriously whether he would have, and I dare say that the Senator from New Hampshire himself would have been the first to charge Mr. Roosevelt with being a warmonger.

Mr. BRIDGES. No; the Senator from Kentucky is not making a correct statement; because while I have been an advocate of economy, and I have supported economy measures, I have voted for every defense measure since I have been a Member of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not saying that the Senator did not; but he is not the entire Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; he is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon—the Senator from Nebraska says he is. I apologize to the Senator from New Hampshire for that statement indicating an under estimation of the Senator.

Mr. MINTON rose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Indiana desire to have me yield to him? I yield, unless the Senator wants the floor in his own right.

Mr. MINTON. I want the floor in my own right.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I have done what the Senator from New Hampshire could have very readily and easily have done—I have walked a few steps, and gone into the cloak room, and picked up the telephone, and called the Chief of the Air Corps, Gen. Henry H. Arnold, and asked him about this German bomb sight; whether or not there was any evidence, or any facts, or any indication that the Germans had the bomb sight of the United States Government. General Arnold advised me that, from the pictures and the other information they have of the German bomb sight, and from the results they know have been gotten from it, the Germans have a good bomb sight, but that none of these facts show that the Germans have our bomb sight.

The fact of the matter is that the pictures of the bomb sight show that whereas some of the features of the German bomb sight are similar to the features of our bomb sight, in many ways the German bomb sight is not like our bomb sight.

With that statement, I hope I have been able to relieve the mind of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Germans do not have our bomb sight.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection it might be observed that, if the Senator from New Hampshire had gone to the telephone and gotten the information, which he did not have and apparently did not want, he could not have made the speech he did here insinuating that someone in the Government had done what he has suggested.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, the Senator's name would not have appeared in this afternoon's newspapers or in tomorrow morning's newspapers if he had not made that speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, it may not, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which would strike lines 13 to 15, inclusive, on page 12, from the pending work relief and relief bill.

The provision we wish to strike from the bill reads:

> No loan or grant shall be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe to or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association.

I think there can be no question that one of the soundest and most economical ways of bringing about rehabilitation of many thousands of low-income farmers at this time is by local effort made possible through loans to small groups of farmers. By furthering cooperative efforts among these low-income groups the Farm Security Administration has felt, and has been justified in feeling, that it was carrying out a well-established policy of Congress.

The worth of farm cooperatives to individual farmers is attested by various acts of Congress intended to promote the growth of farm cooperatives. Among these I might mention the Capper-Volstead Act of 1922, the Agricultural Act of 1929, the United States Warehouse Act, the act of 1933 establishing the Farm Credit Administration, and several others.

The plain fact is that low-income farmers, distressed farmers for whom we are appropriating funds through the Farm Security Administration, are the very ones most in need of the benefits of farm cooperatives.

The prohibition of the use of loans and grants from the Farm Security Administration to be used to pay dues in cooperatives tends to defeat the very purpose of the appropriation. Membership in the cooperatives brings the farmer benefits which more than equal the cost of his membership; and very frequently, I am informed, failure to belong requires him to do things and buy things at his own expense which he could do or get much cheaper through membership in the cooperative.

I also believe the Congress should take cognizance of the value of the farmer cooperatives to the American farmers and to American agriculture. The prohibition of use of F. S. A. loans and grants will materially decrease the membership in many local cooperatives, and thereby deal a blow at the cooperative movement which the Congress has been trying to build up through a number of legislative acts and through Government aid in various forms.

In the interest of the distressed farmers, in the interest of the farm cooperative movement, and in the interest of sound agricultural practices, I sincerely hope that the Senate will strike this section from the bill by accepting the La Follette amendment.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a letter from Cal A. Ward, Regional Director of the Farm Security Administration, at Lincoln, Nebr., in support of my position, and also a telegram from John Vesecky, of Salina, Kans., president of the National Farmers' Union, presenting the views of the president, officers, and directors of the National Farmers Union.

There being no objection, the letter and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
Lincoln, Nebr., May 28, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is my information that the House last week in approving the relief bill greatly restricted funds being made available for the promotion of farmers' marketing and consumer cooperatives.

In region 7, which is composed of Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, during the past 2 years we have made a great many loans for farmers to participate in cooperatives, principally grain cooperatives. Many of these cooperatives have operated for 1 year or more, and in many instances are showing substantial progress, and furthermore, it is my opinion that the greater percentage of these loans will be retired out of retains and earnings by participating in the cooperatives.

I am of the firm belief that this is a sound program and is a very definite forward step in the process of rehabilitating the individual farm family.

The objective of the Farm Security Administration is to rehabilitate the hard-hit low-income farm family, looking forward to the time when they will have more security for their families and with a better opportunity to remain on the farm. When a farmer, who is practically insolvent, comes to us for a loan, and after the local advisory committee has recommended this farmer for a loan, steps are taken in the farmer's case to work out a sound farm and home plan. Sound farm and home practices are discussed and agreed upon, proper rotation and diversification of crops are studied, and the farmer's debts are adjusted in line with his ability to pay.

In addition to the above, and other factors, his desire to participate in a cooperative or cooperatives is considered. In many instances it is deemed advisable, after a thorough analysis has been made, that this farmer should be extended a loan to participate in a cooperative which is already a going concern or one which is to be established. Furthermore, many times it is quite evident that the participation in the cooperative lends itself very materially to the rehabilitation of that individual family. Also, is is a well-known fact that not only does the farmer who participates in the cooperative receive dividends, in cash or interests in the cooperative, but the fact of the cooperative being in the community reflects higher price levels for the commodity which is to be sold or lower prices for the commodity which is to be purchased by the farmer, as the case may be.

These sound cooperatives in the community not only lend themselves to the benefit of the participant in the cooperative, but the other farmers of the community as well, inasmuch as higher prices are reflected.

For the above reasons I am very much concerned about this whole matter and hope that the Congress will see fit that funds are available to loan to farmers to participate in sound cooperatives, and, in fact, that funds are available for strengthening farmers' marketing and consumer cooperatives.

I am of the firm belief that a large percentage of the farmers, including the farm organizations of this section of the country, will feel that the farmers' cause is greatly jeopardized and retarded if the Farm Security Administration is restricted in its help to farmers and the cooperatives. I am fully aware that for many years selfish interests have fought the farmer owned and controlled cooperatives.

Knowing your interest in agriculture and the farmers of your State, I sincerely hope that you will do what you can to reinstate this provision in the relief appropriation bill.

Sincerely yours,

CAL A. WARD, Regional Director.

SALINA, KANS., May 29, 1940.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Our National Farmers Union board respectfully urge your attention to the following resolution:

"Whereas the House of Representatives' Appropriations Committee has included in the relief appropriation bill a provision to prohibit Farm Security Administration from making loans to its farmer clients for the purpose of purchasing membership and/or stock in farmer owned and controlled cooperatives; and

"Whereas purchasing of farm supplies, processing and marketing of farm products by farmer-owned cooperatives has been and is a very effective and direct way of reducing expenses of farmers and increasing farm income. Further, the financial condition of farmers' cooperatives is very sound, and the financial return to farmers by their cooperatives has been a great help to them in meeting their costs of operation;

"Whereas the loans made to farmer clients by Farm Security Administration for the purpose of purchasing memberships and/or shares in cooperatives has been one of the most constructive means of giving farmers sound self-help; and

"Whereas farmers who are clients of Farm Security Administration are in practically all instances unable to originally capitalize their own cooperatives in spite of the fact that the capital can be repaid from savings and the farmers can thus get into their hands mechanisms for self-help on a permanent basis; and

"Whereas these loans are, from the viewpoint of Government, sound from a financial viewpoint as well as for self-help purposes and are in no sense subsidies.

Now, therefore, we, the board of directors of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America do hereby urge the Congress of the United States to eliminate the aforementioned prohibitive amendment.

JOHN VESECKY,
President, National Farmers Union.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, yesterday morning's Times-Herald carried a big headline stating that Hitler had announced that he would not attack America, which, judging from the past, is a signal that he intends to attack America.

In the Evening Star of today, June 15, there appears an article with this headline:

Nazis won't forget United States aid for foes, Reich official says.

This is an impudent and brazen threat, which shows that the Nazis grow bolder each day.

Making love one day and threatening the next, the Nazis have thrown their propaganda machine into high gear in order to sabotage America's defense program. I would not have mentioned it, except for the comment that has come to me since Hitler's statement showing that some Americans are actually giving credence to Hitler's statement that he has no interest in the Western Hemisphere.

Adolf Hitler has gambled on the gullibility of the American people since the beginning. Those who have no evil in their own minds do not ascribe evil to the other fellow. Therefore, I think we are a gullible people. Because we do not think evil of others, we have no diabolical scheme for the overthrow of some other government; therefore we do not ascribe to other people the schemes that we do not have in our own minds.

Hitler comes out now with a statement written by a Mr. Karl Von Wiegand. I wonder if the name has anything to do with the fact that the writer received a private and exclusive interview with the Chancelor of the German Reich. He tells the American people, just when we are preparing our "full steam ahead" defense program, that he does not have any interest in the western world. I wonder if that is not a signal, as it was a signal for every one of the other countries which he has laid waste. And today, his hands dripping with the blood of Poland, Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France, he assures the world that he does not plan to attack the Americas. He even throws in for good measure an assurance that he does not plan to destroy England.

Fresh in our memory is his statement that he had no evil intentions against others. That is the Nazi technique. It has been the Nazi technique from the beginning to make love to 10 nations while he hacked 1 nation to pieces; then to make love to 9 nations while he destroyed another; then to make love to 8 nations while he destroyed still another—cutting them to pieces one at a time, all the while saying to the others, "I have no intention of aggression against you." He said the same thing to each of the nations he has destroyed.

Mr. President, the black and bloody record of Hitler's betrayal of those who have trusted him is grim proof that his "friendship" is more deadly than his enmity.

How can the people of America give any credence whatever to his latest cunning effort at betrayal and deception? To me it is an ominous foreboding. It is as ironical as the good meal which is fed to a victim just before his execution. It reminds me of a butcher who, contemplating a new slaughter, pats the fat animal on the back, feeling for a soft place to stick the knife. It is the ironical and fiendish technique of the Nazi propaganda.

I warn America that instead of relying upon his word as an assurance of safety we would be wiser to take it as a signal that America has been marked for slaughter. Did not the invasion of Czechoslovakia follow such denial of intentions? Did not the brutal murder of the Polish people follow such a denial? Did not the ruthless slaughter of the Hollanders and the Belgians follow just such assurances? Therefore America should look upon the Hitler statement as a new signal of danger and redouble all efforts to speed material aid to the Allies the best means of increasing our own defenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, in section 2 on page 12, to strike out subsection (f) as amended. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The joint resolution is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, on page 25, which I ask to have stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which my amendment was agreed to. I wish to ask for the yeas and nays. The amendment is very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DANAHER. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not like to oppose the Senator's request, but the amendment has been agreed to practically unanimously.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not usually submit requests of this kind. I think my attendance record in the Senate will compare favorably with that of other Senators. I was called from the Chamber while the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] had the floor. I assumed that he would speak for some time. I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, that the vote may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? [A pause.] Only seven Senators second the request. That is not a sufficient number.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who, I am informed, would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MCNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is absent from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senators from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES and Mr. SMITH], the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ and Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT and Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Misscuri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] are necessarily absent.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 272) to authorize the postponement of payments of amounts payable to the United States by the Republic of Finland on its indebtedness under agreements between that Republic and the United States dated May 1, 1923, and May 23, 1932, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

TRANSFER OF CONSTRUCTION CORPS TO LINE OF NAVY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4027) to transfer the active list of the Construction Corps to the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, which was, on page 12, after line 18, to insert:

"SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of officers of the Navy to investigate and report upon all matters concerning the status of line officers designated for specialized duty. The board shall make specific recommendations as to the advisability of establishing a technical staff corps as an adjunct to the line of the Navy, but separate therefrom, such recommendations to include proposed permanent legislation deemed necessary to give effect thereto. The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to cause the report of the Board herein authorized to be transmitted to the Congress within 10 days of the beginning of the session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, commencing on or about January 3, 1941."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I intend to offer an amendment directed to subsection (b) of section 15, appearing on page 25. I wish to have stricken lines 19 to 25, inclusive, on page 25, and lines 1 to 6 on page 26. I send an amendment to the desk which will accomplish that result.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 25, after line 18, it is proposed to strike out lines 19 to 25, and on page 26, lines 1 to 6.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, when that particular language providing for the exclusion from the rolls of workers who had continuously been employed thereon for 18 months or more was adopted it was thought that a very salutary result would be achieved. It has not worked out in practice and it has led to untold distress.

There are many reasons of economy, as, for instance, in recertifying workers, in reexamining enrollee clients, in the paper work of the offices of administration, in the loss of efficiency in the various jobs upon which relief clients are employed for striking the provision from the law. In fact, when the bill of last year was passed and became a law more than three-quarters of a million people were required to be discharged from the service before the 1st of September.

Surveys which were conducted under Colonel Harrington thereafter disclosed that by November more than half of that number were once again back on the W. P. A. roll, but, above all, Mr. President, the remaining one-half were, in many instances, found living in most destitute and most deplorable circumstances. It even reached the point where people were unable to secure public assistance in their local communities, chiefly due to the fact that, being employable, they were not eligible for local relief.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the whole of subdivision (b), on page 25, that the Senator desires to eliminate from the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct. My amendment would strike out all of subsection (b) of section 15 appearing on page 25.

Mr. President, Colonel Harrington's report shows that about one-fourth, and only about one-fourth, of the nearly three-quarters of a million people were again able to get on the W. P. A. relief rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, did I understand him correctly to say that of those who went off under the 18 months' provision only a fourth were able to get back?

Mr. DANAHER. I will read exactly what the first survey showed. The Senator will recall that there were several surveys. The first survey was that to which I have already made reference. I read from the report:

> By November considerably more than half of the separated workers were again dependent on public assistance. About a fourth were back on W. P. A. and more than a fourth were on local relief rolls. Large numbers were living on Federal surplus commodities because in many areas no relief is available for employable cases.

Mr. President, surveys were conducted from time to time thereafter. There is no question that a very large percentage, probably in the neighborhood today of one-half, of those separated from the rolls last December are now back on W. P. A. There cannot be, and there never has been, an effort on the part of the Government to provide work relief for all those who seek it; there always has to be some degree of selectivity; and, Mr. President, when, on the basis of the reports of the certifying agencies in the local communities, men have gotten on the W. P. A. roll, the best need and the best value can be subserved by avoiding all those duplications of effort, those losses of economy and efficiency in administration, and in restoring thereafter under the recertification provision those who have to be separated by virtue of the completion of their 18 months' service on the rolls. Both those who are on the roll and those who are not are legitimately, earnestly seeking private employment wherever they can.

Under the circumstances, where W. P. A. projects are going forward apace, associated, as they are, with national-defense needs in this latest development, there can be little question that the efficient, able workers should be continued on the rolls, and the opportunity should be given to them to work out to the great advantage of the Government the greatest value for the money spent.

In addition, Mr. President, those who were already on local relief rolls, already having established their status in that particular, will be cared for, whereas to disarrange the entire program means a reallocation of the types of relief clients whether on W. P. A. or on local relief.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut. I think section 15 (b) should be eliminated from the joint resolution.

I note, in reading the testimony of Colonel Harrington on page 67 of the Senate committee hearings, that he has the following to say:

> In my opinion, section 15 (b), as now embodied in the joint resolution, is so contrary to the objective originally intended to be reached by means of some principle of rotation that I recommend that it be eliminated in its entirety.

That, I take it, is just what the Senator from Connecticut is trying to do.

Mr. DANAHER. Precisely.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to read a further part of Colonel Harrington's testimony, in which he says, on page 121:

> I think that the section might very well be left in.

Mr. BROWN. I rose for the purpose of commenting not only upon what I read but also upon the position later taken by Colonel Harrington, and asking the Senator from Connecticut if he would not consider modifying his amendment in the manner I am about to suggest; but I should like to make a brief comment before suggesting the language.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me retain my prerogative just a moment before further yielding to the Senator from Michigan, whose cooperation I value, in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the reference made by the Senator from Colorado to the testimony of Colonel Harrington on page 121; and I desire to read it word for word:

> Colonel HARRINGTON. On the whole program, 37 percent, Senator McKELLAR.

Answering a question of the Senator from Tennessee as to what percentage of those on relief are over 45 years of age.

> If this provision were included in this section, my recommendation would be to strike the whole section out and do away with the 18-month lay-off, because I think it will become ineffective in accomplishing the purpose if that 45-year provision remains in. So that my recommendation would be, first, to strike the 45-year provision out; second, if that is not done, strike the whole section out.

That is the particular paragraph in which Colonel Harrington deals with the 45-year provision and with the 18-month period of service.

Mr. BROWN. I take it that the original purpose of section 15—and I gather that from what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in charge of the joint resolution, tells me in private conversation—was to assure a certain amount of rotation, and to prevent persons from remaining on the W. P. A. rolls when it was quite possible for them to obtain jobs in private employment. Having that in mind, and understanding that now, as I understand from Colonel Harrington's testimony, only about 2½ percent remain on the rolls for 18 months or longer, it is not a very important provision to retain in the joint resolution. In order to accomplish what the Senator from Connecticut wants and at the same time provide for rotation, however, I desire to substitute this language after the amendment which was adopted in line 21.

The Senator will recall that the phrase—

> Unmarried widows of such veterans and wives of such veterans who are unemployable—

Was put back in the Senate print of the joint resolution. I would add, right after that language, within the exception:

> and all project workers who have made reasonable efforts to secure private employment.

Does the Senator get what I mean?

Mr. DANAHER. Wholly.

Mr. BROWN. I think that would accomplish the purpose which the Senator from Connecticut desires to accomplish by striking out all of subsection (b), and I think likewise it would assure the Administrator the right to discharge persons who have made no honest effort to secure employment in private industry. It seems to me it would meet both situations; and I do not see how there can be reasonable ground to object to that kind of a compromise between the views expressed by the Appropriations Committee and those held by the Senator from Connecticut. I therefore make that suggestion to him, and ask him whether or not he would be willing to accept that as a substitute for his amendment?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, before answering the Senator from Michigan categorically, I should like to complete exactly what Colonel Harrington said in that particular. I will say that my own purpose is to strike out entirely section 15 (b); and if we could have a vote to achieve that result, I believe it preferable by far to amending the paragraph in the particular mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, for the reasons which Colonel Harrington himself explained. I will read what he says.

On page 121 of the Senate committee hearings, Colonel Harrington said:

> I think that the section might very well be left in, Senator McKELLAR, as it is now operating. It produced a lot of hardships last summer with this mass lay-off with the 18-month provision. It is now running between 30,000 and 45,000 people a month on a program of about 2,000,000, and we are able to handle that. We are able to get those people reinvestigated, and the ones that really cannot get employment are put back on.
>
> Senator ADAMS. And they are taken back at about an average of 70 percent?
>
> Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.
>
> Senator OVERTON. How quickly do they get back on the rolls?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. They have to wait 30 days before they can be recertified, and then after they are recertified there is some delay before they can get back on. We have to have a vacancy for them. Cases that are really in need would get back within 2 months.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that persons who are in need cannot get back on the rolls in less than 2 months, and then, if they really are in need—to quote the colonel—they get back on the rolls, it seems to me no substantial purpose would be served by adopting the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, for the reason that no one stays on relief if he can get off. Anyone would rather have a good job in private industry or private employment anywhere than to remain on relief.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to his colleague?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MALONEY. I merely want to make an explanation and a suggestion, and that is that I hope my colleague will insist upon a vote upon his own amendment.

When this proposal first came before the Senate, I very vigorously protested, here and in the committee, the suggestion that the 18-month provision be put into effect. I now want completely to associate myself with my colleague's statement and with his views, and to express the hope that he will get a clear-cut vote on his own amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank my colleague, whose help I have acknowledged publicly time and time again. His cooperation in this particular reflects our recognition of the need of an amendment of this kind in an industrial State like ours.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that striking out subsection (b) of section 15 was the original idea I had. I prefer that amendment to my own amendment, and my one thought was that we would have more difficulty in striking out subsection (b) altogether than we would have in amending it. So, as the Senator suggests, I shall be glad to have a vote on his amendment, and I shall vote for it and support it as I am now doing. If it shall not be adopted, then I shall propose my amendment in the hope that it may be adopted.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, let me say that we now have from the hearings the facts that were brought out in the committee. The fact that we may, as a matter of conclusion, differ from the Senator from Colorado is in no slightest sense a disparagement of the splended efforts he has devoted to this measure. It just happens that, as I see the matter, when 70 percent of these persons have to be taken back on the rolls, the situation is one which ought not to result in the distress and the deplorable conditions in which so many find themselves at the present time as a result of the operation of this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regrets to inform the Senator from Connecticut that his time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask some time on the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has 15 minutes on the joint resolution.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, there is little more that I wish to say. This matter was fully debated at the time the provision was first inserted in the present law. I know it has been thoroughly considered in the committee. It so happens that in my construction of the facts, and the conclusion I draw from them, this provision is not sound, and should not longer be retained as part of this measure.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this provision in the bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit the Chair to determine whether a sufficient number seconded the request for the yeas and nays?

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to discuss the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry. What was the ruling of the Chair as to the yea-and-nay vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not have an opportunity to determine the number. The Chair asked the Senator from Colorado if he would permit the Chair to make the count, but the Senator from Colorado desired to proceed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this provision came into the law from the House of Representatives during the last session. The Senate had a different theory at that time, but there was the same purpose then both in the House and in the Senate. It developed in the hearings that, for instance, in one State, more than 30 percent of those on the relief rolls had been on for more than 3 years, and at the same time there were other people trying to get on. So that the problem submitted was whether we would leave persons on the rolls after a period of 18 months who, by staying on, excluded from the roll other persons who had the same qualifications, and had been trying to get on.

As the Senator from Connecticut says, it is not possible, from a practical standpoint or financially, to put everyone on the relief rolls who has the qualifications. The provision adopted by the Senate a year ago was to the effect that, as between a person who had been on 18 months and a person who had been trying for 6 months to get on and had not been able to do so, the one who had been on 18 months must give way to the one who was in distress and had not been able to get on. That is, we did not favor the absolute, positive dropping from the rolls of those who had been on the rolls 18 months, unless other persons were being kept off the rolls. We thought that an individual who had had 18 months' help from the Government should give way to someone who had had no help from the Government.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. In the situation to which the Senator refers, people who had been on 3 years were automatically taken off when the 18-month provision in the present law went into effect. Was not that true?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. Some 775,000 people were dropped in 2 months ending September 1, 1939, as a result. Consequently the need for separating such people from the rolls, if there was a need, so far as it existed in 1939 when the law was written, has been very fully met by the operation of the law, if the purpose, then, was to exclude and separate those people from the rolls. But that is no longer the situation, I submit, since those people on the rolls 3 years were dropped.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the operation of the 18-month provision, as pointed out by Colonel Harrington a year ago, was harsh. The Senate did not approve of it. Now the harshness is over, and the only effect of the 18-month provision is to equalize and to give a preference to one who has been trying to get on as against one who has been on 18 months.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator from Colorado mean to imply that we are not in this relief measure making appropriations adequate to take care of all those who are unemployed?

Mr. ADAMS. We have never even attempted to make appropriations to take care of all those who were unemployed. We are taking care of an average of 2,000,000 people; that is the figure. There are nine to ten million unemployed. We are not attempting to take care of them. We could not do so. The Government is not financially able to take care of all the unemployed. That has not been the program of the President, which we are trying to carry out.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the official explanation we are supposed to give to people as to why we do not take care of all the unemployed?

Mr. ADAMS. There is not any obligation on the Government to take care of unemployed who are not in need. The purpose is to take care of needy people, not merely unemployed. There may be 5,000,000 people unemployed who are not in need. This is a relief measure, not an employment measure regardless of need.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator then advise us that this joint resolution is not making appropriations for all those who are unemployed and need work?

Mr. ADAMS. It seeks to provide for those who are employable and who are in need. The Government cannot in every instance immediately take care of every individual who meets those qualifications.

Mr. PEPPER. Why can it not take care of all those people?

Mr. ADAMS. In the first place, there are different situations in different sections of the country. I could take the Senator into my State, in counties where there are practically no persons in need, other counties where the certification process, the investigation, and other things, naturally delay getting people on the rolls. That is, the individual does not merely walk up to the courthouse and say, "I want to go on the roll."

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the Senator had given the lack of funds as the justification for our not taking care of all the needy unemployed. Is not that the real reason?

Mr. ADAMS. No. I am saying that this joint resolution provides the funds which the President of the United States and the W. P. A. Administrator say are necessary to do the job.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have gotten an entirely different impression from the testimony the W. P. A. Administrator gave to a subcommittee of which I am a member, which is embodied in the report of the hearings which I hold in my hand. There has been one question whenever a relief bill has been presented, and we all know it. We did not decide how many needed work; we decided how much money we would make available for work.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not the situation.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe the Senator from Colorado will say that we have ever appropriated as much money as we knew was necessary to meet the needs of the unemployed. We have always said we did not have the money to appropriate.

Mr. ADAMS. No. The Senator is at least 80 percent wrong. It has never been contended or argued here that we were merely setting aside a sum of money and taking care of people with that sum of money. We have always based the appropriation on the need. That has been the basis of the appropriation, not the amount of money available.

Mr. PEPPER. Then why are we cutting off those who have been on the rolls 18 months? Is it because they do not need it if they have been on 18 months? Why did we cut off several hundred thousand last year? It was not because they did not need it but because we said there were others who needed it as much; that there was not enough corn for all; and some of them would have to take corn for a little while and then get back from the trough.

Mr. ADAMS. In every instance the President and the W. P. A. have made estimates as to the number who would be in need. The processes of certification, the processes of investigation, always leave off some people who have been in need for 30, 60, perhaps 90 days, who have not been able to get on. On the other hand, there are always some who stay on the rolls who should get off.

Mr. PEPPER. Why?

Mr. ADAMS. Because they are not in need and do not meet the qualifications.

Mr. PEPPER. They have gotten so rich from the W. P. A. in 18 months that they ought to get off?

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator does not want to be fair, he need not interrupt me any further. I do not propose to have that kind of an argument made in my time. The Senator can cast all the reflections he desires to cast in his own time.

Mr. PEPPER. No, Senator, I did not mean it in any disparaging way, but the Senator just said——

Mr. ADAMS. I do not care to argue with the Senator if that is his frame of mind and his attitude.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I will not yield any further to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield further.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me say to the Senator——

Mr. ADAMS. I am not yielding to the Senator at this time. I have been generous, and I am always generous, but I do not propose that in my time the Senator shall cast reflections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I cannot even apologize in the Senator's time?

Mr. ADAMS. I would not ask an apology from the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been requested. The Senator from Colorado has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, regardless of what may be the occasion or the cause, there are always some on a waiting list seeking to get on the rolls, and the proposal here is to take off some. According to the statement of the officials, all who are affected by this proposal amount to 2½ percent. If we shall eliminate that provision, we will renew the very difficulties we had before. We have followed very largely Colonel Harrington's recommendations throughout the consideration of the measure, and he says, as appears on page 123 of the hearings:

> Well, to sum it up, the headaches of the thing are over, and I think this provision is all right, except for that 45-year limit.

He stated, as appears on page 121, that he thinks the section might very well be left in as it is now operating. In other words, only 2½ percent are being affected by this provision, and the 2½ percent who go off, if they have the qualifications for the relief roll, can get back very shortly after the expiration of 30 days. One who has had 18 months care from the Government certainly should be willing to step off the rolls for 30, 40, or 60 days, and permit someone else, who has not been on at all, to take his place on the rolls.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the first thing I wish to say is that in the remarks which were exchanged between the able Senator from Colorado and the junior Senator from Florida a little while ago, the last idea in the mind of the junior Senator from Florida was to give offense to the able Senator from Colorado. I used the word "rich" perhaps with impropriety. I meant to suggest that the Senator surely did not mean that a man by being on the W. P. A. for 18 months had gained a position which put him out of the category of those who needed work, and perhaps I should not have used the word "rich"; but should have said, "In the period of 18 months did he, in your opinion, reach such a position of affluence or comfort or lack of need as to deserve to be taken off the W. P. A. roll?" To me that seems an unthinkable conclusion. I did not intend to be critical of the attitude of the Senator from Colorado.

I am not going to waste my breath any longer in the Senate trying to get adequate W. P. A. appropriations. I have sense enough to know when there is no use trying. We never have even attempted to take care of the unemployed in this country. We have never even intended to take care of the unemployed. Of course, we are paying the price for it, and we are going to pay a very bitter price for it in the future. So long as the totalitarian governments put their people to work, and a rich democracy says, through its Congress, every year, "We have not enough money to keep you even on the W. P. A. rolls"—history will determine whether we have acted wisely, with economy, or whether we have acted unwisely, with extravagance.

I think a waste of man power and working power, not to speak of those spiritual values which are wreckage in the wake of unemployment, is a cancer which is eating at the vitals of our country's security, and that we will find that some of the unemployed who are not getting jobs because we do not appropriate enough money are going to be welcome subjects for "fifth column" propaganda and for the whisperings of the iniquitous aliens who try to cultivate a field that is favorable for propaganda in this country. A man who cannot get a job from his democracy is not going to be so enthusiastic about fighting for it, even at home.

As I said, Mr. President, I have learned, after 3 years of battering my head out every time a relief bill came up, that it is not going to do any good. We are not going to give jobs to the unemployed of this country. We are going to squeeze out a meager pittance every time the bill comes up. There is not a Senator on this floor whose office is not simply cluttered with appeal letters from men, women, and children asking for the right to work. Every time we go home we use the alleys and the byways, and stay in back offices, and lie about our whereabouts, because we do not want the unemployed to drive us to insanity merely about jobs that we do not have for them. Every Senator knows I am telling the truth about it.

We know that we have never even approximated the relief rolls as they have been certified by State agencies, by respectable and efficient workers in social service and welfare departments in every State in this Union. We know that in the last few months we have cut off nearly 1,000,000 persons, and we are cutting off some more between now and July 1, not because they do not need the jobs, not because they have other jobs to which they can go, not because their meager savings have not been exhausted, not because they have not exhausted even their borrowings on their little insurance policies, not because they are hale, healthy, and hearty—no, but because the excuse was that everything had run out; therefore, the lay-off had to be made.

Mr. President, we ought to be ashamed to look those persons in the face. If we do not want to take care of the unemployed, if it is not desirable to do so on moral principles, if it is not desirable to do so from the viewpoint of national defense, if it is not desirable to do so on the basis of decency and justice, very well, let us keep on going on as we are going, and wait until the evil grows greater and more sadly pressing.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the discussion we have been listening to as to the necessity of employment for Americans who are unable to find work, or who face the dire necessities of life without any ability to take care of themselves, should make more apparent to us the fact that if this country ever gets into war, that war will blast every hope of ever being able to restore a decent and normal economy to America.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, 2 days ago, on the 13th of June, the Senate adopted the following amendment to section 5, on page 17, line 17, to insert after the semicolon:

Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used to defray the expenses of transferring or maintaining the existing offices and personnel embraced in subdivisions (1) and (a) and (b) of (2) at points other than in the cities and States where now located.

The amendment had for its purpose the retention of existing Treasury agencies in the States. After the amendment was adopted it was found that it referred to one division in error. It referred to the General Accounting Office, when it should have referred to the office of the Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits and Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants. In order to correct that error I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment in question was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. By way of amendment I offer a substitute for the amendment which has just been reconsidered and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, line 17, it is proposed to insert a colon in lieu of the semicolon and to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used to defray the expenses of transferring or maintaining the performance of any of the functions appropriated for in (a), (b), and (e) of subdivision (2) of this subsection at points other than in the States where any of such functions are now performed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, let me say by way of explanation that the figures contained in the original draft were not placed there at the request and wish of the Treasury Department. They were placed there at the request of the Bureau of the Budget. So the amendment which was agreed to a few days ago was not at all displeasing to the Treasury Department. After the amendment was agreed to it was called to the attention of the Treasury Department and the error pointed out, as I have just indicated. The text which has been read at the desk was prepared by the Treasury Department; so it is exactly as they think it should be. I ask that the amendment be adopted in lieu of the one which has been reconsidered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if I may make an inquiry, would not the purpose which the Senator has in mind be accomplished by the changes which he has made without the restrictive language? In other words, he is tying down these various departments or divisions so that perhaps their people could not be moved. I do not refer to change by way of regionalizing; but I ask whether or not the Senator's purpose would not be accomplished in the way I suggest, because the Treasury Department, of course, would prefer to maintain the offices as they are now, and the money appropriated would take care of that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What is the particular parliamentary situation that calls for the injection of the Senator's proposal at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent that an amendment previously agreed to be reconsidered, and, without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to was reconsidered.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know that I should object, but what is the amendment? Is it on the pending bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated that the Senator from Oklahoma asked that an amendment previously agreed to be reconsidered, which was ordered. The Senator thereupon offered an amendment in lieu of the one which had been reconsidered. The amendment is offered for the purpose of correcting an error.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will explain it briefly. As the Senator from Oregon remembers, by a vote of 69 to 7 the Senate adopted an amendment providing that the present Treasury officials should retain their offices within the States, as they have in the past.

Mr. McNARY. I recall that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That amendment referred to the General Accounting Office, when it should have referred to the office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants. The purpose of the amendment I have now offered is to correct that error; to change the reference from the General Accounting Office to the agencies I have referred to.

Mr. McNARY. I understand it is a necessary correction. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma on page 17, line 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], in section 15, on page 25, line 19, to strike out subsection (b), as amended. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. DANAHER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have an amendment on the desk which I ask the clerk to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Upon the application of the borrower therefor, the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is authorized and directed to cancel the amount of the unpaid principal of and interest on any loan made by any agency of the United States to any farmer prior to January 1, 1936, for crop production, seed or feed purposes, or under the act of January 29, 1937, (relating to crop production and harvesting loans) or under any prior or subsequent act of the same character. Upon the cancelation of such loan, the borrower shall be relieved of all further liability to the United States on account of such loan, and any lien or other encumbrance held by or on behalf of the United States arising out of such loan shall be released. The Governor is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this section.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending joint resolution no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question before he begins his remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is this amendment intended to repudiate all obligations which have been entered into by various persons with the Government?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will explain the amendment. The amendment calls for the cancelation of what were called "calamity loans" for seed and feed made to farmers in the drought and Dust Bowl areas prior to 1936. Such loans were made in 31 States. Two-thirds of them are now delinquent. These loans, in my opinion, should never have been loans; they should have been grants. We gave hundreds of millions of dollars in grants for direct relief to those living in cities, and we did not require them to sign notes to be paid. In this instance the farmers borrowed this money with which to buy hay, at as high a price as twenty, twenty-five, or thirty dollars a ton, in order to keep their breeding stock alive. Those who could not keep them alive sold them to the Government for $20 a head. The others stayed on the job and preserved the livestock and breeding stock.

As I have said, these loans should have been direct grants. Agents of the Government have been trying to collect every year and harassing these farmers, who I think rendered a public service by going greatly into debt in order to preserve breeding stock for the benefit of the country.

We have given, and are still giving, millions of dollars for the relief of sufferers in Europe; we are spending millions of dollars for direct relief to people in the cities; and, under the stamp-plan program, we give free food to them.

It seems to me we have discriminated in this case against the farmers who stayed on their farms in the Dust Bowl and drought areas for a period of 3 or 4 years. I do not think they should be harassed on that account by Federal agents who are going around trying to collect from the farmers who have not been able to pay.

As I have said, this involves 31 States, including New York, Pennsylvania, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, California, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon.

Only one State has paid its loans in full, that is the State of Michigan. The farmers in that State did not need to borrow very much.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me ask what is the aggregate amount which would be involved in the cancelation?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There are $34,000,000 delinquent out of $51,000,000 outstanding. The chances are, I am informed, that the $34,000,000 cannot be collected. Efforts have been made to collect it but it is still delinquent. The loans which are not delinquent are problematical.

The adoption of the amendment will not involve any extra appropriation. It would simply, of course, cancel to a large extent what is already owed.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have only 10 minutes, but I yield.

Mr. KING. Would this be a precedent for the cancelation of millions of dollars now delinquent on loans which have been made by various Federal agencies such as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the R. F. C.?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; it would not afford a precedent. The loans covered by the amendment and those referred to by the Senator from Utah are in entirely different categories. This was a direct relief loan and should have been a direct relief grant. The amendment is confined to those loans which were made necessary because of the drought, as a consequence of which farmers had no feed and had to ship it in at a very high cost. I know a man who spent $5,000 in 3 years; in the fourth year he had no money left, and so he said he did not want to go into debt, that he had spent all his cash, and so he sold his dairy herd to the Government for about $20 a head, including cows which were worth from $100 to $140.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator able to differentiate between obligations incurred by men to save their homes, but which finally did not save their homes and they were ousted from possession by judgments obtained because of the property not being sufficient to meet the obligations, and loans of the character referred to in his amendment?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I may say to the Senator that I hold the two loans to be dissimilar. These were production loans to keep production going, to keep livestock alive for breeding purposes, and to plant crops to feed the people. They were production loans instead of ordinary loans to buy homes. I think there is a distinct line of cleavage between the two.

Mr. KING. The loans were not for the purpose of buying homes; the loans were for the purpose of saving homes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I still think the propositions are entirely different.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In many cases these loans were disaster loans, but they were not called disaster loans at the time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I recall that loans were made in the Dust Bowl area of Colorado, and the persons receiving them shipped wheat straw from Canada, more than a thousand miles. The wheat straw was very poor straw at that. It was mildewed. They could hardly use it; but they shipped it in there, and it came at a very high price.

A great many of the folks who borrowed the money have moved away, gone to California, perhaps, or some other place, and still these loans are on the books. They never will be collected, they never can be collected, and they never should be collected, as the Senator has well stated.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator from Colorado will not object to accepting the amendment, I shall not ask for a record vote on it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have not any authority to accept the amendment. May I ask the Senator a question about it? I have talked to him on the floor about it.

The time that the Senator fixes in the amendment is the 1st of January 1936, is it not?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No loan made after 1936 may be collected.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask as to the maturity of the loans? That is, as I understand, what the Senator is planning to do is to establish a statute of limitations to put an end to the liability. Ought not that to run from the date of maturity of the loans, rather than from the date when they were made? That is, it might be possible for some loans which were then made to be paid.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I may say so to the Senator, this is an amendment to cancel the outstanding amounts.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand; but my inquiry is whether or not the clause which defines the loans to which the amendment applies should not provide that they are loans which matured prior to January 1, 1936.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. ADAMS. Not those that were made prior to that time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The amendment is limited to loans made prior to 1936.

Mr. ADAMS. There are $51,000,000 of those loans?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; and $34,000,000 are delinquent.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the others are not delinquent?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not yet.

Mr. ADAMS. The others are being kept up?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am informed that nothing is being collected.

Mr. KING. Then they are not delinquent, are they?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not quite get the distinction between a loan that is not delinquent and one upon which nothing is being collected.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is a distinction. There is the difference between $34,000,000 and $51,000,000; $51,000,000 are outstanding; $34,000,000, approximately, are delinquent; but I do not think it is fair to cancel the delinquent loans, which are practically dead, and then go on and collect from the borrowers who have paid up to the present time and compel them to continue making payments because, in my opinion, they were in the same disastrous positions as the others, although they may have been better able to pay.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am perfectly willing that a statute of limitations shall be established, so that if a man is not able to pay he will be relieved, in order that he may go ahead with a clean slate; but I do not know why we should relieve loans if the borrowers are able to pay and are not delinquent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The amendment provides that this may be done at the request of the borrower. There is nothing in the amendment to prevent a borrower from paying if he is willing to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question? Am I to understand that this amendment forgives all these debts and cancels them, even in cases in which they are being paid and are now current?

Mr. ADAMS. That is my understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. All that the borrower has to do is to ask the Government to release the loan, and it is released. Is that really a wise precedent to establish with respect to loans made by the Government? And if we do this with respect to loans which are now current, representing a rather respectable percentage of the loans referred to in the amendment, how can we avoid taking similar action with respect to other loans, certainly as to those which are current? I am wondering if, in order to relieve the loans that are not current, we are going to release the borrowers who are current, when they are making every effort to pay the debt to the Government.

Mr. ADAMS. That would be a logical sequence.

Mr. BARKLEY. How far can we go in releasing all the loans that have been made by the Government to persons who have made an honest effort to pay their debts?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regretfully announces to the Senator from Minnesota that his time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he would accept an amendment to his amendment carrying the words "upon proof of inability to pay." That, then, would make the amendment apply only to cases in which the borrowers, by reason of the situation, find themselves utterly unable to pay the loans.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That would be satisfactory to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. MURRAY. It would be satisfactory to him?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not a question whether or not a thing is satisfactory to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration. It is a question whether it is wise, whether it is just; whether we are treating one class of borrowers in this country in a different way from the manner in which we are treating all other borrowers from the United States, so that under this amendment all a man would have to do would be to quit paying, and he would no longer be current, and his debt would be canceled.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me suggest that it seems to me this is the type of amendment which should have gone to a committee for study, rather than to be offered to a relief measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator from Colorado. We have had various amendments pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency with regard to loans made by the Farm Credit Administration and by its various auxiliaries. They have received careful consideration, and great relief has been granted by that committee and by the Congress. Now, I am wondering whether, on a relief measure, just off the floor, like flushing a covey of birds suddenly and unexpectedly, we are called on to release a certain type of borrowers from the Treasury of the United States because about two-thirds of them have not paid their obligations, and a third of them are still making an effort to do so.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have not the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question in my time.

All these loans were granted as a result of a disaster; were they not?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; such as flood disasters, and so forth.

Mr. HOLT. A total of $51,000,000?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. HOLT. And yet we adopted on the floor of the Senate an amendment turning over $50,000,000 to Europe without a word of debate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We have made various grants to various sections for various disasters, most of which have been no worse than the so-called drought period of 4 years in the early thirties.

Mr. HOLT. In other words, the Senator wants to take care of the disasters of the American people.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I may say that a number of loans have been made as the result of disasters. The Disaster Loan Corporation was created in order to make loans to flood sufferers. Now a number of those persons are hard-pressed to pay their obligations, but a number of others are doing everything they can to meet their obligations to the Government of the United States.

If we are to remit one type of loan because it is made as the result of a disaster—and all the loans that have been made by the Government of the United States have been made on account of some sort of disaster, economic or otherwise—how can we on the floor of the Senate, out of a clear sky, exempt one type of loan from repayment because of a certain type of disaster, when there are hundreds of thousands of other persons in the United States who borrowed money because of a disaster who are not included in this amendment?

It seems to me this proposal ought to have the careful consideration of the committee; and certainly we ought to know what we are getting into if we are going up a blind alley with respect to one type of loan.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator from Kentucky agree to an amendment confining this proposal to delinquent loans?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course not, because then all that it is necessary to do is to become delinquent, and a borrower gets out of his obligation to the United States. A man merely has to quit paying, and he is relieved forever.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of course, Mr. President, I drafted this amendment on the basis that this was an entirely different kind of loan than the ordinary loans that have been made to agriculture and to industry and to communities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. These loans are no different from the type of loans made in the Ohio Valley and all the other valleys that were overrun by water and flooded in 1937. I introduced in the Senate a bill to create the Disaster Loan Corporation, and hundreds of thousands of persons borrowed money from the Treasury in order to be able to reestablish their businesses and to improve their homes as a result of damage caused by the floods. A flood is quite as disastrous as dust.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And frequently is more suddenly disastrous than dust, because it is possible to move away from dust, but it is not always possible to get out of the way of water. If we are to exempt those who have been compelled to borrow money because of dust storms from the repayment of their loans to the United States, we should certainly consider exempting all those in the Ohio Valley, the Connecticut Valley, the Monongahela Valley, the Allegheny Valley, and all the other valleys of the United States who had to borrow money in order to recoup themselves and to reestablish their business as the result of floods. We should not pick out one type of loan and exempt it from repayment, cancel the loans, and wipe them out and make all the other people pay. I doubt the wisdom of doing it. I think it would be a precedent which would rise up to haunt us in the future, because the R. F. C. has made loans to people who suffered in disasters of one type or another; and if we are to cancel one type of loan, let us cancel all, and say that these were grants, not loans at all, and that we were fooling ourselves if we thought we were going to get any of the money back.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I believe we canceled over $2,000,000,000 of loans the R. F. C. made. We canceled something like $2,000,000,000 of some kind of loans.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; we did not do that. It was a bookkeeping proposition within the R. F. C. itself. It did not involve individual cancelation of debts.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a tabulation by the Federal Farm Credit Administration regarding these loans be printed with my remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1934–35 DROUGHT RELIEF LOANS

TABLE 11.—Number and amount of loans made and collected through Apr. 30, 1940, and balances outstanding Apr. 30, 1940

[1] Amounts shown transferred from drought areas.

Farm Credit Administration, Division of Finance and Accounts.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, it seems very apropos today, the day when the war debts are due, that we should be discussing the repayment of debts due by the farmers of the United States who have suffered from disasters of one kind or another. Of course, in this instance, the amount involved is only $34,000,000, as compared with billions loaned to countries across the seas, which we have seemingly forgotten. I am one who believes that charity should begin at home, and if our farmers have suffered from disasters, I think we should think about disasters in this country, as well as disasters across the ocean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the feed and seed loan matter is one of extreme importance to farmers in all the Northwest. I could not quite agree with the Senator from Minnesota that these loans should be canceled. I have given the subject much consideration, and on February 9 last year I introduced Senate bill 1278, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but it has not yet been reported. At this time I desire to offer the bill as an amendment to the pending measure, and I ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add at the proper place in the bill a new section, to read as follows:

That borrowers whose payments on emergency crop, feed, and seed loans from the Farm Credit Administration for 1938 and/or prior years are in default may refund such indebtedness with a 10-year installment contract, noninterest bearing except as to delinquency on installment payments, on the following basis:

(a) To avail himself of this act the borrower, within 1 year from the date of this act, shall apply to the Farm Credit Administration or its representative for an installment contract and shall tender therewith a token payment which shall not be less than 1 year's interest on the unpaid portion of the principal of his most recent delinquent loan.

(b) Upon receipt of the application and the token payment, the Farm Credit Administration or its agent shall compute the total amount due on the date the application is received, shall subtract the amount of the token payment, and shall write the balance into a new contract payable in 10 equal annual installments, the first of which shall be due 1 year from that date. The installment payments shall not bear interest except as to delinquency in the payment of any installment and, when the final installment has been paid, the original note or notes shall be marked "paid in full" and canceled.

(c) Each installment contract shall bear a number, and the old note or notes shall be stamped "Subject to installment contract No. —," and the number of the installment contract shall be inserted. At each installment payment there shall be endorsed on each original note the proportion of the payment which the balance computed on that note bears to the total amount of the installment contract.

(d) At any time within 5 years from the date of the installment contract the borrower may pay the entire amount of the balance on same by delivering to the order of the Farm Credit Administration an amount of grain or feed, bushel for bushel or ton for ton, as the case may be, equivalent to the grain or feed that was purchaseable by the balance or balances of the original notes on the date of this act.

(e) No borrower owing a balance on an emergency crop, feed, or seed loan shall be eligible for further loans from any Government agency until he shall have paid such balance or applied for an installment contract on same; nor shall he be eligible while any installment payment is in default.

Mr. GURNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Has this matter been brought to the attention of any of the standing committees of the Senate, and has it received their approval, or been considered by them? I refer particularly to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GURNEY. It was referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry when it was introduced, and so far they have not reported on the bill at all. I now offer the bill as an amendment to the pending joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator, as the sponsor of the measure, appear before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ask for its consideration?

Mr. GURNEY. The committee did not hold hearings on the bill.

Mr. KING. Why did not the Senator ask for a hearing?

Mr. GURNEY. I did.

Mr. KING. The Senator, perhaps, should pursue the matter with greater assiduity, and have the bill considered.

Mr. GURNEY. I was not able to get a hearing on the bill.

Mr. KING. It seems to me it would be very unwise to adopt as amendments to the pending relief joint resolution measures which have not had consideration as independent measures by the appropriate committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, line 20, after the figures "$1,700,000", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the sums appropriated by this section may be apportioned for a lesser period than the 12 months of the fiscal year 1941, but not for less than 8 months, as determined by the President, if in his judgment such action is required to meet unemployment conditions during such lesser period.

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, this applies only to the appropriations made for Indian citizens which are made on a 12-month basis, and the amendment makes it permissible to cut the time down to 8 months if an emergency should arise. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], who has the joint resolution in charge, and he has expressed willingness to take the amendment to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment I have sent to the desk be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 25, line 22, after the word "unemployable", to insert the words "and all relief workers who have made reasonable effort and have not been able to secure private employment."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this relates to the same subject matter covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] about an hour ago. It relates to a problem which is causing a great deal of distress in my State growing out of the 18-month lay-off provision.

I understand that the chief need for the section which was inserted in the law last year was that the administration authorities felt that there should be some rotation in employment. Unquestionably there was a serious situation, which I believe has now been pretty largely corrected, and I am reliably informed that Colonel Harrington testified that only 2½ percent of the total who are employed by the W. P. A. remain on the rolls for 18 months. In view of that fact, I see no reason for the inclusion of subsection (b) in the joint resolution. But that precise issue was laid before the Senate by the Senator from Connecticut. Objection was made to his amendment because it was felt that a man might not look for employment in private industry if that provision were not included. My amendment seeks to cover that situation, and provides, in substance, that any relief worker who has been on the roll 18 months and who has during that 18 months' period made an honest effort to obtain reemployment and has not been able to obtain it shall be excepted from the provisions of the section.

I ask the Senator from Colorado if he will not be willing to accept the amendment, because I believe it would clear up a matter which has disturbed a great many of us who are charged with some responsibility for legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the provision would render the law almost unworkable. It would involve a study of every individual case, not only at a particular time, but covering the whole 18-month period, to determine whether or not a particular individual had made efforts to get work. There is a provision in the joint resolution which would take off relief anyone who could get a job and would not take it. That is already provided for in the joint resolution.

Inasmuch as the matter was argued at some length in reference to the 18-month provision, I merely say that I think it would be unwise, from the standpoint of administration, to add the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I call the attention of the Senator to page 121 of the testimony. I read from the bottom of the page, where it appears that Colonel Harrington said:

I think that the section might very well be left in.

That is, subsection (b) of section 15.

It produced a lot of hardships last summer with this mass lay-off with the 18-month provision. It is now running between 30,000 and 45,000 people a month on a program of about 2,000,000, and we are able to handle that.

Then he said—and I call this particularly to the attention of the Senator from Colorado:

We are able to get those people reinvestigated, and the ones that really cannot get employment are put back on.

I bring that matter out to support the proposition that they now make exactly the kind of investigation as that to which the Senator refers. They look up these people. They get the advice from the State relief authorities, and they look into the question as to whether or not these people are able to secure employment. What is there difficult about that? Every man who was on the job, and was about to be laid off, could direct the authorities to various establishments where he had tried to get employment. It seems to me that a simple investigation, by calling upon the telephone, would be sufficient.

I say to the Senator that I believe I have received more complaints with regard to the W. P. A. administration—which has done a good job in my State—concerning the 18-month lay-off than about anything else, and I certainly hope the Senator will take the amendment to conference. The House provision has been greatly changed. The House, as the Senator knows, had in the bill a provision excepting the heads of families over 45 years of age who had dependents. That has been stricken out.

I think the suggestion I make could well be substituted for that, and might be made the basis for an agreement between the Senate and the House conferees. I beg of the Senator to give serious consideration to the proposal and to take it to conference, and see if we cannot get this difficult matter thus straightened out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] a question with regard to the main appropriation of $975,000,000 on page 2. I call his attention to the provision in line 17:

That the funds appropriated by this section may be apportioned for a lesser period than the 12 months of the fiscal year 1941, but not for less than 8 months.

I know the Senator has studied the testimony of Colonel Harrington before the committee. It is my impression from that testimony that, under the present arrangement, the money will last for 9 months or 10 months. Can the Senator tell me what the situation is, as he understands it, under the program that Colonel Harrington wants to carry through? Will the money last only 8 months, or will it last 9 months?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, to a certain extent that would be a matter of individual judgment or individual prediction. The figures which Colonel Harrington gave the House, and which are the figures which appear on page 3, as his estimate of the relief employees from July to November show the number to be cared for to be 1,700,000 in July, August, and September, 1,800,000 in October, and 2,000,000 in November. If the $975,000,000 is consumed in an 8-month period, it would take care of an average of slightly over 2,000,000 per month, which is an amount somewhat in excess of the estimate given by Colonel Harrington. For my own information, I made a computation which showed that if the amount were consumed in 9 months it would take care of 1,800,000 as distinguished from the 2,000,000 which would be cared for on an 8 months' basis.

Mr. TAFT. Since the estimate was submitted, we have appropriated great sums of money for military purposes, which should provide work and have the effect of relieving the pressure on the relief rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. Again, that is a matter of individual judgment. I should assume that the great business activity resulting from defense preparation measures would increase employment. Of course, it is argued on the other side that there has been a shutting off of some other businesses. How far that may neutralize the employment resulting from defense preparation activities I do not know. I am hopeful, as I think everyone else is, that we will have less demand for relief rather than more.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I move to amend, on page 19, line 3, by striking out "eight" and inserting "nine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 38, lines 17 to 19, it is proposed to strike out "(other than those derived from the first processing of sweetpotatoes)" and insert in lieu thereof "(other than those derived from the processing of agricultural or forestry products by bona fide associations of producers of such products)."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I can state the purpose of this amendment very briefly. It is now the established policy of the Government to provide loans to existing cooperative associations for all types of processing of agricultural and forestry products. If my amendment should be agreed to, it would make those same opportunities open to farmers who are being rehabilitated under the Farm Credit Administration's rehabilitation program.

It seems to me unjust to provide this means of credit to spread cooperative activities to more fortunate farmers, and to permit it to be extended only to naval stores and the products derived from sweetpotatoes in the case of the lower income group.

If it is justified to permit the processing by lower income group farmers of sweetpotatoes and naval stores, it seems to me that in the light of our general policy of extending loans to the large cooperative organizations for all types of processing we should treat the farmers in the lower income group who are being rehabilitated by the Farm Credit Administration in the same fashion.

If the amendment should be agreed to, it would extend the existing policy to the farmers who are clients of the Farm Credit Administration. I hope very much that the Senator from Colorado will feel that he can accept the amendment, and let it be taken to conference.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate and the House have been exceedingly generous to the organizations the Senator is speaking for, and it appears that his suggestion would result in somewhat crowding the situation. I think we were being crowded when the exceptions contained in the bill were put in it—when we excepted this very important item of the processing of sweetpotatoes and naval stores. I think we had far better take those out than put other things in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For instance, a large cooperative association or organization in Minnesota or Wisconsin can go to the bank of cooperatives at St. Paul and get a loan for the purpose of building creameries, or extending their cooperative enterprises, but under the limitations contained in the bill farmers who are being rehabilitated under the Farm Credit Administration program can get loans only for cooperative enterprises for the purpose of processing sweetpotatoes and naval stores. So long as it is the established policy of government to permit the large cooperative associations to borrow money, it seems to me it is a discrimination against the lower income farmers who are much in need of the activity of cooperative enterprises.

As I have said, I hope the Senator will be willing to take this amendment to conference, and to give it further consideration there.

Mr. ADAMS. This paragraph applies to all the money carried in the bill. It applies to the relief appropriation. What was sought to be done in this appropriation was to see that money appropriated for the relief of the needy should not be used to establish mills, or factories, or plants, but should be devoted to the purposes for which it was appropriated. This matter applies to all the funds appropriated by the joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The very point is that it is so sweeping in character that it does apply, and that is why I ask the Senator if he will not take this more embracive language to conference, inasmuch as the committee has seen fit to extend the benefits so far as processing sweetpotatoes and naval stores are concerned.

I assure the Senator that all I seek to do is to get the matter into conference so that it can be worked out.

Mr. ADAMS. What we are trying to do by this provision, which has been carried in various forms for several years, is to see that relief funds are not used to establish industry which will compete with existing private industry. That is the reason it was not desired to have the money used to establish mills or extending or relocating them.

One of the arguments made was that there were cotton mills in the North, and efforts were made to move them to the South; and provision was made so that we could not spend relief funds for the purpose of moving cotton mills from Massachusetts or New Hampshire to a Southern State. The breadth of the Senator's language would cover everything. As he knows, agriculture is one of the broadest terms in industry. When all processing of agricultural products is excluded, we shall have practically wiped out the whole thing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The unfortunate feature is that section 33 is so drawn as to embrace everything appropriated for by the joint resolution, which includes funds for the rehabilitation program of the Farm Security Administration. I assure the Senator that I am not seeking to open the door to the type of activity he is discussing.

If the Senator is willing to take the amendment to conference, in order that an appropriate provision may be perfected, the matter will all be in conference; but if we leave in the sweetpotato and naval-stores amendments, then, insofar as funds for the Farm Security Administration's rehabilitation program are concerned, there will be nothing in conference which can be considered.

Mr. ADAMS. Personally, I cannot agree to the amendment. I have only one vote in the matter, but I think it would be unwise to agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to further amendment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, by reason of being compelled to be away from the Chamber when some of the committee amendments were being considered, I find it necessary to seek the indulgence of my brethren to reconsider the vote by which section 15 (a) was adopted. I always hesitate to make such a request, because it is not a pleasant task. I should like to offer a couple of small amendments to that subsection, which deal with veterans' preference, and I must seek the indulgence of my brethren to ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the subsection was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment to section 15 (a) was agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, that amendment has been once reconsidered. From the parliamentary standpoint, I do not know whether or not it is now open to reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It must be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BONE. I may make a motion to that effect. I wish to take only a few moments' time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken in saying that it may be done by a motion. It may be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BONE. I know that my brother from Colorado is a much better parliamentarian than I am. However, I was under the impression that I could move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. I may be in error.

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment has once been reconsidered.

Mr. BONE. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that because the amendment has once been reconsidered, the Senator would now have to have unanimous consent for its reconsideration.

Mr. BONE. The Chair is correct in the statement that it has once been reconsidered.

I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment to section 15 (a) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I send to the desk two short amendments and ask that they be stated. I will say to my brethren that they merely deal with veterans' preference matters and require no explanation to those who are familiar with such things.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 15 (a), in the committee amendment, on page 25, at the beginning of line 9, it is proposed to strike out "be determined, as far as practicable, on the basis of relative needs and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be given", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "be given in each region to those who are qualified and available."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to have some explanation of what the amendment comprehends, and what its purpose is.

Mr. BONE. The amendment strikes out all of lines 9 and 10 and the first three words in line 11, and substitutes in lieu thereof the words "be given in each region to those who are qualified and available." So far as I can determine the desires of those who have expressed themselves on the subject, the purpose is to remove any question of veterans' preference in regard to that particular matter.

Mr. ADAMS. What are the regions? The other day we had a discussion about State lines, and I think the Senator from Washington was among those who thought we should be very careful to maintain State lines.

Mr. BONE. No; we once fought a war over that question. I do not want any more wars over State lines. Being very much of a Federalist, I myself am not much given to worrying over such matters.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the Senator if it is not also his purpose, if this amendment should be agreed to, to offer an amendment restoring the words "relative needs" at the end of the subsection. The effect of the two amendments is simply to give the veteran a preference, so as to insure the preference which is already intended by law to be given, in order that it may not be possible in the future, as it now is, to put a veteran who happens to be receiving $8 a month in an entirely different classification—that is, class B instead of class A.

Mr. BONE. I will say to my friend from Missouri that I have another amendment, which is the one he mentioned, at the end of the subsection. I ask that it be stated, and that the two amendments may be considered together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 15 (a), in the committee amendment, by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding the following words: "in the order of their relative needs in each region, insofar as may be practicable and feasible."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, all the amendment does is to transpose the words "relative needs" from the place where they now appear in the subsection to the end of the subsection, so as to establish the preferences set up in the subsection, and to prevent administrative officials from putting a man who may receive $8 a month in an entirely different classification, so that he will be forced to wait until all of class A is taken care of before he can receive any relief at all.

Mr. BONE. The amendments are quite simple. They are very greatly desired by veterans. I do not think they will harm any worthy person.

I should very much like to see the amendments agreed to. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter has been gone into by the committee with much care. The committee amendment has been approved by the Administration. Frankly, because of the uncertainty which may be produced, I hope there may be some opportunity for considering the amendments. I am not prepared to discuss amendments which I have not had an opportunity to see.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the amendments be permitted to go to conference. I am sure the gentlemen from the House who will be on the conference committee will themselves have had an opportunity to understand and to discuss the amendments, because I think they were discussed in the House. I hope the Senator will allow them to go to conference.

Mr. ADAMS. May it be understood that the amendments shall be allowed to go to conference simply for the purpose of providing an opportunity for members of the conference committee to study them, without absolutely committing the Senate conferees to the support of amendments with which they may disagree? That suggestion would allow a certain leeway. Does the Senator understand?

Mr. BONE. Yes. I shall be very happy to have the amendments go to conference, and I think the conferees will have an opportunity to consider them with their brethern from the House.

Mr. ADAMS. With that understanding, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I shall vote for House Joint Resolution 544, making appropriations for work relief during the coming fiscal year. I have voted for all work-relief appropriations granted during the past decade. I understand the needs in this field. It is my hope that with the large amounts of money soon to be made available under the national-defense program, new jobs will open up in private industry for many workers now on W. P. A. I know that the W. P. A. worker would rather have a job in private industry, because it means higher wages and more attractive conditions of work.

The Murray amendment did not receive my vote, inasmuch as the President requested $975,650,000 for the next fiscal year through the joint resolution. Although the measure as reported to the Senate carried $1,073,584,916, more than $100,000,000 has been added on the floor of the Senate, all of which is for the next fiscal year, with the provision that this amount may be spent within 8 months should circumstances make it necessary. That provision makes for flexibility, which is quite essential during the coming months.

Billions of dollars are being appropriated for national defense. To what degree these expenditures will result in decreased unemployment, no one is certain. We do know, however, that there will be a reaction on the part of industry which will tend to absorb many of those now on work-relief rolls. That is certain. Rather than appropriate greater funds for work relief, it is wise on our part to observe to what degree our national-defense funds are taking up the slack of those on W. P. A. rolls.

It is a good business move on our part to observe the trend, and then act accordingly. Our future action will be based on some definite information; $1,073,584,916 has been made available for work relief for 8 months, if necessary. On the basis of information which we shall have at that time, this body may appropriate whatever will be necessary for the last 4 months of the fiscal year.

In view of the great outlay required and the limited funds available, every effort should be made on the part of our citizens to plan for financial preparedness in this time of international crisis. We must find additional sources of revenue if we are to continue to make appropriations of such magnitude as this country has never before known. In the Committee on Finance, of which I am a member, the revenue bill of 1940, H. R. 10039, is pending. We are raising additional billions of dollars by increased taxation. I know the staggering problems which now confront the Nation in our search for more revenue. Those problems should not be made more serious.

National defense appropriations have the green light at the moment. Important as are other appropriations to the welfare of the country, it is necessary that we exercise caution, and feel our way forward gradually, whenever possible. The requirements for work relief are taken care of according to the President's request in an adequate manner, under a flexible arrangement whereby more funds will be made available toward the end of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) was passed.

INCREASED AUTHORITY FOR RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3938, Calendar No. 1807.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator give a description of the particular bill? I do not know it by number.

Mr. WAGNER. I was about to address the Senate briefly as to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. But before it is made the unfinished business let me ask is it the bill proposing an extension of the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is the bill to which I refer.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I wanted to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3938) to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 304 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 51d; Supp. V, title 12, sec. 51d), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase at par any part of the stock of any Federal home-loan bank owned by the United States, as evidenced by certificates, receipts, or otherwise, in amounts to be determined by the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to sell such stock to the Corporation. Any such stock so purchased by the Corporation shall be held subject to the same conditions, requirements, rights, and privileges (including all dividend and retirement provisions) as are provided by law for or in connection with the ownership of such stock by the United States."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 602), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"The Corporation is authorized to make payments from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury in amounts to be determined by the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator, for the partial retirement of its capital stock at par and in payment of dividends from earnings. The aggregate amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this paragraph takes effect shall not be decreased by reason of any retirement of capital stock under this paragraph, and such aggregate amount is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph and of the second paragraph of section 304 of the act of March 9, 1933, as amended.

"The Corporation shall retire its capital stock and pay dividends under the preceding paragraph of this section, and shall purchase stock of the Federal home-loan banks under section 304 of the act of March 9, 1933, as amended, in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $300,000,000 to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury; but the Corporation, with the approval of the Federal Loan Administrator, shall determine that portion of such aggregate amount which shall be used for the retirement of the capital stock of the Corporation, the payment of dividends, and the purchase of such stock of the Federal home-loan banks."

SEC. 3. (a) The third paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 605; Supp. V, title 15, sec. 605), is hereby amended by striking out "$350,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000,000."

(b) The first sentence of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 15, sec. 605m), is hereby amended by striking out "January 31, 1945" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 31, 1955."

SEC. 4. Section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1020b) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is authorized to repay on or before June 30, 1941, to the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States, all amounts in excess of $100,000,000 theretofore subscribed to the capital stock of the corporation. The proceeds of such repayment shall be held in the Treasury of the United States as a fund available for subscription, by the Governor on behalf of the United States with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the capital of the corporation when, in the judgment of the directors of the corporation, additional subscriptions to its capital are necessary."

SEC. 5. Section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 15, sec. 606b), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"In order to aid the Government of the United States in its national-defense program, the Corporation is authorized—

"(1) To make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any corporation (a) for the purpose of acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, and (b) for plant construction, expansion and equipment, and working capital, to be used by the corporation in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense, on such terms and conditions and with such maturities as the Corporation may determine; and

"(2) When requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, to create or to organize a corporation or corporations, with power (a) to acquire and carry strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, (b) to purchase land, to purchase, build, and expand plants, and to purchase equipment and machinery, for the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense, (c) to lease such plants to private corporations to engage in such manufacture, and (d) if the President finds that it is necessary for a Government agency to engage in such manufacture, to engage in such manufacture itself. The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any such corporation for any purpose related to the national-defense program, on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine.

"Any corporation created or organized by the Corporation under the preceding paragraph is also authorized, with the approval of the President, to make payments against the purchase price to be paid for strategic and critical materials in advance of the delivery of such materials. Whenever practicable, the Corporation may require the payments so made to be used for purchases of raw or manufactured agricultural commodities to be exported from the United States."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say to the Senate that it is very desirable to pass this bill, which I do not think will take long, and also the alien registration and fingerprinting bill, which will not take long, in order to clear the way for taking up the tax bill on Monday. I hope Senators will remain here, and cooperate as fully as possible in accomplishing these two results.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I shall make my explanation as brief as possible, and then, of course, yield to any questions which may be asked.

The pending bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] but, due to his absence, the Committee on Banking and Currency authorized me to report the bill to the Senate.

The object of the bill is to mobilize in the service of the national defense the financial resources as well as the organization and administrative experience of the R. F. C. The bill has two main features.

The first is to make available $300,000,000 to the Treasury from the R. F. C., which sum, of course, would be expended for such purposes as Congress may direct.

The second is to aid private industry by loans and by the purchase of their capital stock by the United States Government to enable such industries to further the manufacture of supplies and equipment necessary for national defense.

In the event that private industry is unable, with these laws, to meet the necessities of the situation, the R. F. C. itself is authorized to create a corporation to engage in such enterprises.

The first section of the bill, if I may briefly go through its provisions, authorizes the R. F. C. by means of certain transactions to transfer to the Treasury a sum up to $300,000,000. The transfer will be discretionary with the R. F. C., as it is proposed to amend the bill. The transfer is to be accomplished in three ways which are provided in the bill. First, the R. F. C. is authorized to purchase $125,000,000 worth of stock of the home-loan banks owned by the United States Government. That stock will be a very valuable and desirable investment for the R. F. C., because ever since the inception of the home-loan banks they have paid dividends to the stockholders. Secondly—and, I repeat, these are all matters in the discretion of the R. F. C.—$100,000,000 is to be paid out of the dividends or surplus which the R. F. C. now enjoys, which amounts to $284,000,000. Thirdly, $75,000,000 would be transferred to the Treasury, through the purchase by the R. F. C. from the Treasury of $75,000,000 worth of the capital stock of the R. F. C. which is now owned by the Treasury.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would these additional requirements on the R. F. C. increase the demand upon the R. F. C.'s capital to such an extent as would defeat the purpose of recapturing a portion of the capital stock of the R. F. C., as proposed in the President's Budget message?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The President proposed in his Budget message to recapture some $700,000,000, a portion of which was to come from the capital of the R. F. C. Could that still be done with this extension of authority to the R. F. C.?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; the bill takes care of $300,000,000 of the amount mentioned by the Senator. It is to be done by the method which I have just explained, which is really made up of three items: first, the purchase of stock of the home-loan banks; second, a payment out of dividends and accumulations of the R. F. C.; and third, by the purchase of R. F. C. stock from the Treasury. This operation, if carried out as suggested, will transfer to the Treasury, to be available for governmental expenditures, a total of $300,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator explain where the R. F. C. will get the $300,000,000 it will pay the Treasury?

Mr. WAGNER. By the issuance of its notes.

Mr. TAFT. So that, in fact, what the transaction means is that, instead of issuing $300,000,000 of Government bonds, there will be issued $300,000,000 of R. F. C. notes guaranteed by the Government? That is the effect, at least, of the measure, is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has a right to draw his own conclusions. I have tried to explain the transaction. It is a perfectly proper one. The R. F. C., as a financial institution, is as sound as any institution in the country. Of course, it does not hold its surplus of $284,000,000 in cash; it utilizes it as any well-operated business would do. It has loaned its accumulated dividends and surpluses, and notes would have to be issued in order to secure the cash with which to consummate the transaction.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think there is a vital and proper distinction, and I think it is a proper method of bookkeeping. When we borrow money through Treasury notes, we borrow for governmental purposes. Under the method now proposed, money will be borrowed from the general public by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not for the purpose of financing the Government but for the purpose of making loans to various businesses and corporations throughout the United States. I think it is entirely proper that it should be done in that way.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Why should the R. F. C. desire to buy the stock of the Federal home-loan banks? Is it for investment purposes?

Mr. WAGNER. It will be an exceedingly good investment for the R. F. C., but it is a method by which money is to be returned to the Treasury, which the R. F. C. can now afford to return, so that the Treasury may have an added sum, which is to be used as directed by Congress.

Mr. BONE. I merely seek information, but how would that put money in the Treasury?

Mr. WAGNER. In a very simple way; $125,000,000 worth of home-loan bank stock has been purchased from the home-loan banks by the Treasury so that the Treasury now owns that stock. When the R. F. C. purchases that stock from the Treasury it will pay the Treasury $125,000,000, so that the Treasury will have $125,000,000 instead of the home-loan bank stock. The transaction is exactly the same as if I purchased stock from the Senator; he would get the cash, and I would get the stock. He would have that cash as his property and his money. In that way the transfer in this instance takes place.

The next provision of the bill increases the authorization of the R. F. C. to make loans to railroads from $350,000,000, which is the limit now set in the law, to $500,000,000, an increase of $150,000,000. All the $350,000,000 which is now authorized to be loaned is exhausted, so that there would only be an additional $150,000,000, with which to make loans to the railroads. Since a number of railway reorganizations are now in process, and the railroads will soon come out of those reorganizations, undoubtedly applications for loans will be made by the railroads.

That, of course, does not increase the lending power of the R. F. C. by $150,000,000. That power is still within the limited authority they now have, which I think amounts to about a billion dollars.

The next section extends the period within which loans made by the R. F. C. may mature, from 1945 to 1955.

Section 4 authorizes the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to repay to the Secretary of the Treasury all amounts above $100,000,000 subscribed to the capital stock of the Corporation. The proceeds of such payment are to be held in the Treasury as a fund available for subscription to the capital stock of the Corporation when, in the judgment of its board of directors, additional subscriptions are necessary.

Finally, section 5 grants authority to the R. F. C. so that it may become a powerful instrument in the strengthening of our national defense. The bill enables the R. F. C. to extend loans to, or with the approval of the President to buy the stock of, private corporations having to do with national defense—either the accumulation of strategic materials or the manufacture of equipment and supplies.

The final section of the bill authorizes the R. F. C. itself to create or organize a corporation, or corporations, for the purpose of purchasing strategic and critical materials, and also to buy or lease land and to expand plants for the manufacture of necessary equipment and supplies; and that may be done either by the R. F. C. itself or in cooperation or participation with private industry. Of course, the latter will be done only in cases in which private industry is unable to cope with the situation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Is not the provision regarding the power given the Corporation itself to create corporations a rather unusual provision?

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all. It is a power which the Corporation has exercised. The chances are that it will organize corporations instead of creating them; but there is some advantage in the creation of corporations in the way of avoiding State taxes and other inconveniences. I am told, however, that what the R. F. C. intends to do is to organize these corporations. If that were done, the corporations would have to apply for charters just as other public corporations do, and in the charters would be set forth the authority and the powers under which the corporations would transact their business.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator means the corporations will apply to whom—to the R. F. C.?

Mr. WAGNER. No; we have other corporations which we have organized in the State of Delaware, as a rule, just as private corporations are organized in that State. Such corporations go through the process of securing charters in which are set forth, as in all other charters of corporations, the authority and the powers under which they are to act and transact their business.

Mr. HATCH. I understand now what the Senator means. The R. F. C. will go into the State of Delaware and make application for a charter?

Mr. WAGNER. For a charter of incorporation for these purposes either to purchase strategic materials, or, it may be, in certain cases to construct a plant, lease a plant, or even to manufacture certain implements of war when it becomes necessary.

I need not here address the Senate on the need of speed in adding to our national defense, because our inadequacy in that respect, particularly on land and in the air, has been so fully discussed. The only plea I make to the Senate is that speed is imperative; that we have no right, in the interest of our country and the Western Hemisphere, to delay an instant in prosecuting efforts to strengthen our national defense. I do not think I am disclosing anything I ought not to disclose when I say that the R. F. C. for the past 2 weeks has been in contact and working in cooperation with our Advisory Council of National Defense, and plans have already been arranged by private industry and the Government for a joint prosecution of this effort to produce the necessary weapons for our national defense.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have before me the speech of the President of the United States made over a national hook-up on May 26, 1940. In this speech the President used this language:

> I know that private business cannot be expected to make all the capital investment required for expansions of plants and factories and personnel which this program calls for at once. It would be unfair to expect industrial corporations to do this, when there is a chance that a change in international affairs may stop future orders.
> Therefore, the Government of the United States stands ready to advance the necessary money to help provide for the enlargement of factories, the establishment of new plants, the employment of thousands of necessary workers, the development of new sources of supply for the hundreds of raw materials required, the development of quick mass transportation of supplies. The details of this are now being worked out in Washington, day and night.

I desire to ask the Senator if this measure is one in furtherance of that suggestion of the President, or whether it will be further legislation looking to the end he suggests in his speech.

Mr. WAGNER. I am glad the Senator read that passage from the President's address, because the very purpose of this legislation is to bring about that cooperation between private industry and the Government, so that they may jointly prosecute these efforts, and do so without at all disrupting the private business of the country. Incidentally, I do not think there is any department of our Government which is so well equipped to do that as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because its main function throughout has been to make loans to private industry, to purchase participating stocks in banks, and in other ways to try to keep our industries on an equilibrium.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BONE. I am interested in this particular aspect of this kind of legislation because I desire to offer to the Senate, as an amendment to the tax bill when it is considered, the war-tax proposals embodied in Senate bill 1885, which would, of course, if adopted by the Congress, apply only during the period of the war. Its provisions would automatically go off the statute books, or be inoperative, if and when peace comes. But because of the high levels of taxation in that bill, questions immediately present themselves to any thoughtful person familiar with financing operations as to the need of additional capital for plant expansion, the payment of debts, and allied problems.

Obviously legislation to take care of those needs, which would be complementary to that type of tax legislation, would be necessary; and if such tax legislation should be enacted, it is my purpose and the purpose of those who feel interested to introduce that type of complementary legislation, so that the tax burden imposed by that type of legislation might not prevent the functioning of a plant.

I do not want to take any more time, except to say that if there be any question in any Senator's mind about the tax levels being too high, I would only have them consider that if the son of any Senator were receiving $5,000 or $10,000 a year as a business expert, a publicist, a writer, an architect, or an engineer, and were drafted into the Army, there would be no effort to preserve for him his private initiative, or any shred of it. He would accept the wage of the common soldier, $30 a month; his life would be forfeit, if need be, to the service of his country. Many Senators probably have sons who have their entire capital tied up in their bodies. That capital consists of their health and their sanity. If one-millionth of 1 percent of the tragedy of war is inevitably to be visited upon us in a financial way and in a moral and spiritual way, then I think business in the United States must realize that it will have to carry that burden, or a very substantial part of it, not in the seizure of its capital assets, although that might conceivably and very readily come in the face of a great breakdown. A capital levy might be the least of many bad alternatives. But certainly to preserve the economic system of the country, to preserve it from the frightful and unbearable impact of a post-war debt added to our already swollen debt, to preserve it from inflationary shock of this great debt, which would be inevitable and might easily lead to a runaway inflation, it would be a much simpler thing to take the major part of the profits of business, a substantial part of the net income of individuals, rather than face the horrible and dire necessity later of seriously considering capital levies of a very drastic kind.

I have no intention, I will say to the Senator from New York, of discussing this matter at length. I hope he will forgive me for intruding on his time, but this discussion is apropos because this sort of legislation, I think, is something that is going to have to be considered in connection with tax legislation. Certainly we are not going to escape it. I know there are many men in public life, like myself, who are not going to see the boys of America drafted, and their whole capital taken and destroyed, without making Congress tax-conscious, and making it walk right up and confront the necessity, the desirability, and the high patriotism implicit in a tax schedule yet undreamed of.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the surest way to prevent our boys going into any kind of a war is to arm to the teeth, not only to protect our country but to protect the whole Western Hemisphere. That is why speed is so imperative and why I am so anxious to have the proposed legislation enacted now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is something about the language of the bill that is not clear to me, and I wish to ask the Senator from New York about the meaning of it.

On page 7, beginning with line 22, the bill reads:

When requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, to create or to organize a corporation or corporations.

Is it the intention of the author of the bill to enable this corporation to cause to be created, according to law, a corporation or corporations, or is it the intention of the author of the bill to have done exactly what this says literally?

Mr. WAGNER. I think the intent and the literal language are identical. This would authorize the R. F. C., upon the request of the Federal Loan Administrator and with the approval of the President, to create corporations—separate corporations—to deal with these different subject matters.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as I understand the answer, it behooves me to say that there must be something new under the sun in the realm of government if one corporation may create another corporation. I have never heard of such a process before. If it has heretofore occurred, it has escaped my notice. My understanding is that no one but the sovereign may create a corporation, and under our system of government it takes a legislative act. I know of no power which Congress has to transmit sovereignty to an institution such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that it may make the grants of sovereignty which are always involved in the creation of corporations. There may not be a legal corporation without a grant from the sovereign of certain sovereign powers. I am asking for education on this subject. If there is any such thing known to the law, I should be glad to find out about it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find in the R. F. C. statute, if not in some other statute, that that authority has been heretofore given in other connections. But I might say to the Senator that there was doubt about the matter in my mind. I am assured that the corporations will be organized rather than created, under the authority given in the act.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, let me ask the Senator another question. I feel the same way about the policy. I would not undertake to block the policy of permitting this corporation to apply for a charter from a sovereign State, and therefore I would be content with this provision if a few words were added to it to make it clear that nothing more than that power is intended to be granted, namely, the words "cause to be created or to be organized."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I may say to the Senator from Vermont that Congress has heretofore delegated such authority to certain Federal corporations. For instance, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board was granted the power to create corporations. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has heretofore had that power. In two cases, both of which reached the Supreme Court of the United States, the authority so to do was upheld. If the Senator cares to have it, I will put a brief memorandum in the RECORD of those two cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think that would be a good idea. I have had handed to me, while I was talking, a memorandum dated May 27, 1940. Is that the memorandum to which the Senator refers?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it would be well to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM

MAY 27, 1940.

The power of Congress to create corporations in the furtherance of its constitutional powers may be exercised either directly by Congress or by an agency of government under statutory authority.

Recently, in Keifer & Keifer v. R. F. C. and R. A. C. C. (306 U. S. 381), the United States Supreme Court had occasion to consider the regional agricultural credit corporations which were created pursuant to statutory authority by the issuance of a charter directly to them by R. F. C. In holding these corporations liable to suit, the Supreme Court relied on the manner in which they were created but did not even question the propriety of the course followed.

Recently, also, in Fletcher v. Jones (105 Fed. (2d) 58; certiorari denied, 60 S. Ct. 116), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia sustained the constitutionality of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation against the contention that Congress did not have power to permit the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to create it. That Congress has frequently conferred upon agencies of government the power to create corporations appears from the references contained in footnotes 8 and 9 of the opinion in Fletcher v. Jones, supra, excerpts from which are attached hereto.

Fletcher v. Jones (105 Fed. (2d) 58, at pp. 60, 61):

"Congress has at different times adopted various methods for creating Federal or Government corporations. In some instances it has directed or authorized administrative boards or officials to secure charters from States or from the District of Columbia.[1] But this has been by no means the only method. In some cases it has created corporations by its own acts.[2] In others it has authorized the President to create them or to procure their creation.[3] The method provided by the present act was that the Federal Home

[1] For example, the Emergency Fleet Corporation was to be incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia by the United States Shipping Board, as directed by act of Congress (act of Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat. 728, 731).

[2] Examples of the use of this method are numerous: Inland Waterways Corporation (act of June 3, 1924, 43 Stat. 360, 49 U. S. C. A., sec. 151); War Finance Corporation (act of Apr. 5, 1918, 40 Stat. 506, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 331); Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (act of June 27, 1934, 48 Stat. 1256, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 1725); Reconstruction Finance Corporation (act of Jan. 22, 1932, 47 Stat. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 601); Disaster Loan Corporation (act of Feb. 11, 1937, 50 Stat. 19, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 605k–l); Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (act of June 16, 1933, 48 Stat 168, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 264); Textile Foundation (act of June 10, 1930, 46 Stat. 539, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 501); Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation (act of Jan. 31, 1934, 48 Stat. 344, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 1020).

[3] Thus the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., was to be incorporated by Executive order, pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1934 (48 Stat. 1211, 18 U. S. C. A., sec. 774i). Under the act of May 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 550, 551), the President was authorized to create housing corporations. Likewise, under the act of August 10, 1917 (40 Stat. 276), and the act of June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 702). The President was authorized to establish and create corporations in order effectively to carry out the provisions of the respective acts. See generally Van Dorn, Government Owned Corporations (1926).

Loan Bank Board should itself create the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This, too, is a method which has been commonly used by Congress in the past.[4]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I could not jump to the conclusion stated by the Senator from Michigan merely from observing that the Court has upheld such act, because what I speak of is a fundamental that deals with Government itself, an exercise of supreme power. I am not satisfied by merely having handed to me a memorandum showing that on two occasions the Court has upheld a previous delegation of this legislative power. However, I think the Senator, who has studied it more than I have, may find more justification for it.

Mr. BROWN. Let me state, with the permission of the Senator from New York, what the R. F. C. authorities told us at the hearing about that proposition.

First, we must recognize that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a governmental agency, I think, essentially similar to the secretary of state in the State of Vermont, who, I presume, is clothed with the authority to issue charters to corporations. At least, that is the way it is done in my State.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; but if the Senator will permit an interruption, that must always be limited by the statutes of the State which prescribe the grants in advance. The grants are made by an act of the legislature, and they are availed of by the filing of a certificate and other compliance with the statute. So that we always have in such cases a direct grant from the sovereign.

Mr. BROWN. It is assumed here, and the basis of my argument on the legal side was, that the R. F. C. is as definitely an agency of the Federal Government as the secretary of state in the State of Vermont is of the State government. But I wanted to get down to the purpose, about which the Senator was principally inquiring.

To use an overworked phrase, this is an emergency proposition, and the R. F. C. authorities fear that if they are forced to go to the various States of the Union to have these corporations organized, or go to the various authorities in the States who authorize the corporations to do business within those States—and the Senator knows that is required before a corporation may engage in business in a State—great delay will follow. The hope of the R. F. C. was that they could act promptly and immediately bring these corporations into existence and get to work.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President I must observe, before taking my seat, that if I did not regard it a matter of principle, as a matter of policy I would think it quite unsafe to turn over this power without any limitation at all, without any prescription of what must be done by the Corporation which is going to create another corporation. There is nothing in the proposed act which limits what that Corporation may give to another corporation. Therefore, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this great delegation of legislative power, can give to a private corporation powers which we as a Congress would not think wise to vest in any corporate body. With no limitations on the power, I should say as a matter of policy it was an unwise thing to do.

Therefore, if it is entirely agreeable to the author of the bill that this power shall be exercised in the customary way, under statutes which fix the limitations, then why not have an amendment added to the bill to take care of the matter, to grant the power to create such corporations?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have been informed that the Agricultural Credit Corporation, a corporation which has done extremely valuable work in behalf of agriculture, was a created corporation, not an organized corporation. When the Senator speaks of limitations, it should be recognized that the limitations are set forth in the act itself. As a matter of fact, it deals only with national defense. If the Senator will read the language of the bill:

> To acquire and carry strategic and critical materials as defined by the President, to purchase land, to purchase, build, and expand plants, and to purchase equipment and machinery, for the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to national defense.

The entire activities of this Corporation are limited to matters of national defense; that, I think, is a very definite limitation. I know, of course, that the Senator will appreciate that, because he is in sympathy with what this Government is trying to do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes, Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. That we must of necessity make the power somewhat general. We cannot hamstring these corporations with any technical restrictions that may impede the progress of their work.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from New York recognizes that I am thoroughly in harmony with the effort to build up production to the maximum, and therefore I would not interpose a trifling objection; but I am just as earnest in my desire to preserve fundamental principles as I am to speed up production—in fact, a little more so. I think that as we go along we can afford to take time enough to see that our objective is attained in the democratic way, that we do not transgress our fundamental structure, and do not open the door by creating precedents which would cause us more trouble in the future perhaps than we can foresee. Therefore, if the objective can be attained in the usual way, I think that is much wiser than to make this type of delegation. I regard it, in spite of the precedents to which attention has been called, as a very dangerous thing to do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may ask the Senator from Vermont, since these corporations are being created only for a definite purpose, within the scope of the bill, would it not necessarily follow that they had no other power?

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, are they so limited?

Mr. CONNALLY. We are creating them for the purpose of performing operations under the bill which are limited to the procurement and manufacture of war materials. Would it not necessarily follow by implication that they would have no other corporate power?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not familiar with this——

Mr. CONNALLY. If a corporation is organized to loan money, that does not mean it can buy cattle or deal in horses or cows.

Mr. AUSTIN. No. The Senator from Texas is correct, as he usually is. As I said, I am not sufficiently familiar with this particular bill to know whether the language is strictly confined. On page 8, line 8, it seems to me there is a particularly broad statement of power. I read it:

> The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any such corporation or for any purpose related to the national-defense program on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine.

That is the last sentence in section 5, subsection 2, which delegates this power of legislation to a corporation.

Mr. President, it seems to me a very unwise grant of authority. The interpretation which could be given that provision might reach lengths which we should consider. We might, as the Congress of the United States, find the exercise of the powers which will be claimed under that grant to be extremely unwise.

[4] Thus, under the Federal Farm Loan Act of July 17, 1916 (39 Stat. 360), Federal land banks were to be duly incorporated by the making and filing of an organization certificate with the Federal Farm Loan Board. Federal intermediate credit banks are created by a similar procedure (act of Mar. 4, 1923, 42 Stat. 1454, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 1021, 1026). Under the same act national agricultural credit corporations were to be created by the Comptroller of the Currency (42 Stat. 1461, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 1171). National banks are incorporated by filing an organization certificate with the same official (act of June 3, 1864, R. S., secs. 5133–5136, 12 U. S. C. A., secs. 21–24). The Federal Home Loan Bank Board is authorized to organize, incorporate, and issue charters to Federal savings and loan associations (act of June 13, 1933, 48 Stat. 128, 132, 12 U. S. C. A., sec. 1464). Production credit corporations, banks for cooperatives, and a central bank for cooperatives were authorized to be created by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration (act of June 16, 1933, 48 Stat. 257, 12 U. S. C. A., secs. 1131, 1134, 1134f).

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator read from page 8, line 8.

The Corporation—

That is, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—may make loans or purchase the capital stock of any such corporations for any purpose related to the national-defense program. * * *

You cannot make the limitations more specific, it seems to me; the only purposes for which the loans can be made, the only activities in which this corporation can engage, are those related to national defense. That, it seems to me, is quite limited. Let me say this, because it becomes important right here. I have conferred with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] with reference to an amendment which he proposes to offer, which, at least, he feels—and I am quite willing to go along with him—is a further limitation, by limiting it to arms, ammunition, and implements of war, subject to certain other suggested changes I have proposed, which the Senator from Ohio is willing to accept. There you have a complete limitation, and I hope that the Senate does not impose any further limitation, which, unintentionally, may interfere with the essential work to be undertaken pursuant to this legislation.

I might say here that there has occasionally been an inquiry to what the National Defense Council is doing. They are not making speeches, but they are working day and night. They have set up their own organization. There have been meetings with representatives of industry day and night, together with representatives of governmental agencies, the War Department, the R. F. C., and undoubtedly representatives from the Navy Department. They have their plans ready to proceed.

The amount contained in the bill of course is not a very large amount. The total sum—if the R. F. C. made no loans to any other enterprise—would be only about $1,000,000,000. Before we get through with the construction of our national-defense plants, we will have to spend a great deal more money than that. We do not want to do anything that will interfere with the work of the Council. Of course there is no partisanship in this matter, as we all recognize; we are all anxious, and I know the Senator from Vermont is anxious to cooperate with the National Defense Council. The members of that Council, as a patriotic duty, have given up everything else in connection with their own personal business, to devote all their time to this work. And, Senators, they are devoting all their time, day and night, to this work. I hope their health will not be impaired. They recognize the imperative need for speed to make certain that we will be impervious both to military and subversive political invasions of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not need to be lectured on that subject at all.

Mr. WAGNER. No. I wanted to inform the Senator——

Mr. AUSTIN. Then let us stick right to the matter about which I am asking.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. And that is the language of the bill of the Senator from New York. I think he ought to be able to answer these questions. They relate only to the language of the bill. Let us now get down to business.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. I hope the Senator——

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us——

Mr. WAGNER. I have the floor. I hope the Senator did not interpret what I said as a lecture.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I certainly am not offended.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. Let the Senator take it as he will, then.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think we ought to try to adhere to the objective before us in order to save time.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is important for all of us to know what is going on. But now let us proceed. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will ask the Senator if the amendment which he proposes to accept, namely, to strike out the words "equipment and supplies necessary for national defense" and substitute therefor "arms, ammunition, and implements of war" is not applied to and limited to subsection (b) of subsection (2) of section 5 of his bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator kindly repeat the question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will make a statement.

Mr. TAFT. Since it is my proposal, I will say yes; it relates only to the second section; not to the part about loans to corporations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me say that I observe there are two corporations involved in this section.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which will be the father.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the other corporation, which will be the son. There are those two corporations, are there not?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator calls it the "son."

Mr. CONNALLY. Perhaps it will be a daughter.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. The last sentence in this subsection—

The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of—

Refers to both these corporations, that the father may loan money to or buy the capital stock of the son. For what? For the purpose of purchasing equipment and machinery, or the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war? Oh, no! For any purpose related to the national defense program. That comprehends food, clothing, and munitions. That provision is so broad and wide that no one can stand here and envisage its scope.

I think it is too much of a grant. I think it opens the door entirely. If the objective can be accomplished without that, by all means let us do it, because we must give regard to our form of government as we go along, and not make fundamental changes in it under the urgency of the situation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to quarrel with the Senator's interpretation of the broad term "national defense"; but so far as I am concerned, in order that that question may not raise a controversy, I have agreed to accept an amendment which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] will offer to the bill, which limits the power as the Senator has suggested it ought to be limited. I should say that that amendment ought to allay any apprehension he may have as to the broadness of the terms of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think all Senators are entirely sympathetic with the purpose of the bill. As the able Senator from New York has indicated, we all appreciate that speed is important and that it is necessary to put into effect as rapidly as we can any instrumentalities which may be created for the purpose of aiding the national defense.

Preliminary to what I was about to say, I may add that we are very much disarmed when Jesse Jones recommends anything. I think we have taken upon faith many recommendations he has made since he has been occupying a very important place in our national affairs and in our national economy. In view of the fact that he will be the administrator of this great power, I am inclined to accept it, although I would have much preferred if there had been one corporation instead of two or three, the single corporation to have the limitations indicated by the able Senator from Vermont, limiting the fields in which it may operate. The single corporation should have the power to put into operation whatever instrumentalities are necessary to execute the powers contemplated by the bill.

I am not clear as to the reason why the Federal home-loan bank is brought into the picture, nor am I quite clear as to the reason why the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is brought into the picture and given some authority. I can only repeat that I would have very much preferred to have one Federal corporation, with all the powers necessary to make the loans for national purposes which it is contemplated shall be made by the various organizations which may be created.

I do not like the idea of setting up a great number of corporations. They will be intertwined and intermingled, and it will be very difficult to determine what their functions are and where the responsibility will rest for any mistakes which may be made, or for any improper loans which may be made.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the home-loan bank. The home-loan bank has nothing to do with the activities involved in this legislation. The bill provides for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of the home-loan bank, which is owned by the Treasury. That is the only way in which it is involved in this legislation.

Mr. KING. What is the necessity of purchasing the stock of that Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. The purpose was to transfer from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into the Treasury $125,000,000 out of the surplus of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which will then be available to the Treasury for the ordinary expenses of government, as directed by Congress.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator comment with respect to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill provides that:

> The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is authorized to repay, on or before June 30, 1941, to the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States, all amounts in excess of $100,000,000 theretofore subscribed to the capital stock of the Corporation.

That is another method of returning to the Treasury a substantial sum of money—$100,000,000—which had been used to purchase the stock of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. However, it will be noted that a limitation is placed upon that return, because the proceeds are to be held available for subscription by the Governor on behalf of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the capital stock when, in the judgment of the directors of the Corporation, additional subscriptions to its capital are necessary. So there is a string to the transfer.

Mr. President, I ask permission to offer certain perfecting amendments.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion at this point?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I have been in consultation with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and also with the general counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I think possibly we could clear up any question about the sentence commencing on page 8, in line 8, and ending in line 11, by inserting certain language, so as to read:

> The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any such corporation for any purpose within the powers of the Corporation as above set forth related to the national-defense program.

I understand that that amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. And to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WAGNER. Did the Senator from Vermont hear the proposed amendment read?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I understand what the amendment is, and I think it somewhat narrows the power we are delegating.

Mr. WAGNER. Would it remove the objection which the Senator has made?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. WAGNER. It would minimize it?

Mr. AUSTIN. It would minimize it.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. May we have it agreed to by unanimous consent?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona requests that the amendment be stated. The amendment to the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 10, in the committee amendment, after the word "purpose", it is proposed to insert "within the powers of the Corporation as above set forth."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 20, in the committee amendment, after the word "Corporation", it is proposed to insert the words "on or before June 30, 1941."

Mr. WAGNER. That is simply a limitation as to time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "shall" and insert "may"; on page 5, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "shall" and insert "may"; and on page 6, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 14, in the committee amendment after the word "or" it is proposed to insert the words "when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, after line 20, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

> SEC. 6. That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 15, sec. 613c), as amended, is hereby amended by striking out "June 30, 1941" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 22, 1947"; (b) the first sentence of section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 604), as amended, and the first sentence of section 14 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, sec. 614), as amended, are hereby amended by striking out the word "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen"; (c) the second paragraph of section 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 15, sec. 606b), as amended, is hereby amended by striking out "June 30, 1939" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 22, 1947."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I wish briefly to explain the amendment. While there is much technical language in the amendment, all it does is to extend the general lending authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to 1947, and also to terminate the life of the Corporation in 1947.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HOLT. I desire the floor in my own right.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wonder if the Senator from New York will yield to me to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it will interfere with the Senator from West Virginia.

I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. DANAHER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I have yielded to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is objection to the request, it can be disposed of by objection. I do not desire to consume time unnecessarily.

Mr. DANAHER. I have no idea that there will be any objection, but I notice that there are very few Senators present, and I should like to have every Senator know that there is a unanimous-consent request projected.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is only for a limitation of debate and not to fix a time for a vote on the bill. If agreed to it would give 30 minutes to every Senator, 15 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not always in order to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, provided the Senator having the floor yields for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Only in case the time for a final vote is fixed is a roll call necessary. It is not necessary on a request to limit debate. Of course, a Senator can make a point of no quorum at any time.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I wanted to have cleared up.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator can do it, but it is not obligatory under the rules to have a quorum call simply on a request for a limitation of debate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think I have concluded for the present.

Mr. MURRAY. I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I have my request acted on?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will have to object to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

Without objection, the last amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is agreed to.

The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 15, after the words "for the purpose of", it is proposed to insert the word "producing", and on the same page, line 25, after the word "to", it is proposed to insert the word "produce."

Mr. MURRAY. When this matter was in the House it was thought that the word "acquire" would be sufficient to allow the R. F. C. to make loans for the purpose of aiding in producing strategic and critical minerals. The words which I am asking to have inserted will permit loans to be made so that strategic and critical minerals may be produced in this country. Under the bill as it now stands the language might be so construed as to make it possible only to purchase these strategic and critical minerals from the outside or from domestic producers now engaged in their production, and not to permit the development or production of these very important strategic and critical minerals in this country. I, therefore, ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not understand that the bill as it is would in any way limit the R. F. C. or any corporation from acquiring strategic and critical materials produced in this country; but whether the Government should go into the business of mining seems to be another question; and I do not see why it should do so.

Mr. MURRAY. Under the first section of my amendment it is not a question of the Government going into mining but of loaning money so that mining concerns in this country may produce these minerals here, and we would not have to depend for them upon foreign countries. In the last war we had to depend for our supplies of manganese upon other countries, and we lost shiploads of it on the high seas while in transit to this country. We must not leave our country in the position of depending on a foreign source of supply.

Mr. TAFT. To what line does the second part of the Senator's amendment relate?

Mr. MURRAY. To line 25.

Mr. TAFT. That refers to a corporation or corporations, and that means that if the word "produce" is inserted at that place the Government may go into the mining business. I think it is bad enough for the Government to go into the manufacturing business, but I think the Government certainly ought not to go into the mining business. If it wants to loan money, I think it can loan money under the statute, as a matter of fact, to produce American manganese, and I have no great objection to putting the word "producing" in line 15, but I do object by the insertion of the amendment in line 25 to creating a Government corporation to go into the business of mining. If the Senator will modify the amendment, and confine it to line 15, I think it would be agreeable to everyone.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not desire to take the able Senator from Montana off the floor.

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the amendments offered by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are timely and proper; indeed, amongst the valuable services he has rendered, his action in this instance is one of the most if not the most valuable.

I have some trepidation in entering into a debate on a question of law with the able Senator from Ohio. I bear on my breast some scars inflicted by him in legal contests—not scars on the back, but on the breast. [Laughter.] The Senator from Ohio does not inflict scars on the back or below the belt; all the scars he inflicts are above the belt and in front. However, I do not now agree with the able Senator from Ohio.

This afternoon, Saturday afternoon, when Senators are weary, especially when 2 or 3 weeks and perhaps a month more of the session remain, for Congress will not adjourn soon, I think it would be impolite for me to take much time in arguing this question.

Mr. President, we should all read history, because we learn from the reading of history that we learn nothing from history. Let us for once learn something from history. In times of antiquity when men went out to battle, personal valor and esprit de corps frequently turned the tide of battle. In those days weapons were of iron, copper, zinc, sometimes of bronze, which is a composition of copper and tin; sometimes of brass, which is a composition of copper and zinc; and now and then a weapon was fashioned of strong wood; now and then, forsooth, from strong bull hide; now and then from a piece of volcanic glass which we call obsidian. Those days have gone. There undoubtedly was a degree of chivalry in a battle conducted under such auspices that personal valor counted for much and frequently turned the tide. But, Mr. President, in recent years we have learned that the valor of the brave is of no avail against remorseless steel engines, driven by mechanics and pointed at hearts which are only flesh and blood. We have recently seen France, with a valor beyond the range of eulogy, walk the Via Dolorosa, the path of duty, death, and glory, but her valor availed nothing against mechanized armies.

Mr. President, why do I say that the able Senator from Montana has done a noteworthy service in offering this amendment? At this time I might also refer to the work of the able junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the efforts he has put forth to procure for the Nation strategic and critical and essential metals. The able Senator from Montana spoke well when he said that during the World War we were required to depend upon importations from foreign countries for many, if not most—certainly for many—of strategic and critical minerals.

Mr. President, in time of trouble and conflict we will not be able to depend upon supplies from foreign countries. The Creator, in His beneficence and judgment, has locked into the hills of the United States nearly all, if not all, the metals and minerals necessary for industry and for defense of the United States, if we but develop them.

Mr. President, there has been some talk of an adjournment of the Congress. In the most perilous age of the world's history, when civilization is in deadly danger, there are men, serious men—they are not in the Senate; they are not in the other House—who talk of adjourning, running away and abandoning their duties. Let me say to you, Mr. President, that those who vote to go home should be kept there. If they vote to go home, that is where they should stay for the remainder of their careers, because we cannot add to the efficiency and strength of the United States by running away and abandoning the duties which we were elected, sworn, and paid to perform.

There is no remorse so inveterate, so keen, as that which comes from the consciousness of having abandoned duty in a day of national distress. There is no happiness more sustaining and complete than that which is derived from the knowledge that we have performed our duty in a manner worthy of American Senators. Fortune, success, efficiency, and safety fly upon high and rapid wings; they must be seized as they pass by; for once gone, they may not be overtaken. Therefore, Mr. President, I feel quite sure that there will be no early adjournment of the Congress. Nothing would so contribute to the depreciation of the Congress in the thought of the people than adjournment, abandonment, neglect, and precipitous flight from our duties. These may be words that should not be uttered, but they have no reference to any Senator, for I believe there is not a Senator who seriously, in his own heart, thinks that the Congress should adjourn.

Now for a personal word. I have previously said that I was a candidate for reelection. I have some fences which are in a bad state of disrepair; I should like to go home and repair them; but, Mr. President, I would be unworthy to be heard here for a moment if I put the mending of my political fences and political fortunes above the success, the efficiency, the preparation of my country for defense.

Mr. President, if we are to have such preparation; if we are to assist the President in carrying out his program of preparedness, let us at least make a gesture toward acquiring the metals and minerals which are so necessary to our national life. I will refer to one particularly—manganese. We have an abundance of manganese if it can be developed. During the World War the ship Cyclops, laden with manganese from Brazil, was sunk without trace with over 300 souls on board. Laden with manganese, she went down to the airless meadows of the cavernous deep. Nothing has been heard of her since.

Manganese, as every Senator knows, is used to sweeten pig iron and to make steel. I shall not tire the Senate by a long list of the essential and strategic minerals necessary for our defense. I will say to the able Senator from Ohio that it is not proposed to put the Government into the mining business. The miners themselves would be the first ones to object to that. The Government, forsooth, may not go out and discover a gold mine or a manganese mine. It is not equipped to do so. Nobody proposes to have that done.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. There is no difference whatever between the Senator and me in that respect; and if the amendment is put in the bill, I have no objection to the word "producing", in line 15, page 7. Since the Senator does not want the Government to do it, however, he does not want the word "produce" in line 25. There is complete agreement; there is no difference between us.

Mr. ASHURST. Just a word, and I am through.

With all due deference to the able Senator from Ohio, whom I regard as an authentic scholar, a great lawyer, and worthy of higher places, I will say that, although I am not supporting him [laughter], I think, in order effectively and properly to carry out the spirit and intent of the amendments of the Senator from Montana, the word "produce" should be inserted before the word "acquire." I do not want to put the Government into the mining business. I want the miners to conduct such enterprises; and if given a chance to acquire credit, the miners of the country will produce the necessary metals and minerals.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. In view of the debate which has just taken place, I have decided, in view of the objection of the Senator from Ohio, to segregate my amendment, and offer at this time the first proposal. On page 7, line 15, after the words "for the purpose of", I move to insert "producing"; and I withdraw for the present the second amendment, to which the Senator from Ohio has objected.

Mr. TAFT. That will be entirely acceptable to me.

Mr. MILLER and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, of course, I have not any control over the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana; but let me call the attention of the Senate to what is happening.

We shall be making the same fatal mistake and error we have made in the entire history of the present Congress and the history of the Government in dealing with the accumulation of strategic and critical war materials if we omit the amendment in line 25. The present Congress has passed a great deal of legislation. The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and other Senators have worked unceasingly in an effort to set up machinery whereby the Government would acquire a stock pile of strategic and critical war materials; but the mistake we have made in our legislation is that we have only provided for the acquisition, and not the production, of it. That is the fatal mistake we have made.

There is not a Senator here, and there is not a man in the Army or the Navy who does not know that we have in this country an abundant supply of most of the critical and strategic war materials, and that we are not a dependent nation if we utilize the resources we have at hand; yet we have been indulging in the fanciful pastime of trying to purchase such materials from foreign countries, with the result that we now have on hand, acquired under the act of 1939, a very few tons of critical materials. We have been trying to buy them from Russia and Brazil and the Gold Coast of Africa and other places. If we mean to prepare the country, let us put the word "produce" in line 25, before the word "acquire."

I do not want further to take the time of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with due deference, I repeat, to the able Senator from Ohio, I believe the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] has correctly stated the situation. There are in this country business interests which are trying to sell to the United States manganese mined in Russia under forced labor, or slave labor, as we call it. It is known as forced labor, but it is really slave labor.

I assume that no Senator would be willing to purchase from any foreign country manganese or anything else which was produced by forced or slave labor.

We must meet this issue, Mr. President, now as well as later. Success, efficiency, preparedness, are not achieved by running away from problems. In this life there are so many things that confront us that we spend much of our time trying to avoid them and running away from them when the very time thus misspent would solve the problems. We must approach and solve the problem of extracting from the bosom of our own hills the metals, the minerals, and the other things that are essential to our industry and to our protection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Kentucky. I am not limited as to time. I objected in a very stentorian voice to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Arizona did object to the agreement I proposed. I regret that he did.

Mr. ASHURST. It is rarely that I object to anything proposed or suggested by the able Senator from Kentucky. He has ably led his party. He has done more than lead his party; he has been a great American as well. I must have very strong feeling on a subject when I do not follow the leadership of the able Senator from Kentucky. I could not support him, however, if he were to move to adjourn. In these times I do not think we ought to limit debate when the matter is so important.

It may be said that I objected because I wanted to speak. That statement is sound. If I had not spoken, I should feel that I had been unfaithful to the constituency which has kept me here so long. I should have been remiss to the people of the United States if I failed to tell them how important it is that the miners should have an opportunity to be equipped to extract from the earth these important minerals and metals. The able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], in charge of the pending bill, spoke well when he said it was a matter of haste and emergency.

After this brief statement, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I thank my very dear friend from Arizona for the unmerited compliment he paid me.

Mr. ASHURST. I mean it.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I did not rise to move to adjourn, or to ask to limit debate. I did want to ask the Senator if he does not think it is more important that the Government obtain these essential materials, whether it has to produce them or buy them, than it is to be without them in order that the Government may not go into the business of producing them in competition with some private corporation?

I assume that nobody in the Government service would think of putting the Government of the United States into the mining business in competition with the producers of these essential materials if they can be obtained from private industry; but in the case of manganese, for instance, we all know that there are in this country deposits that may not be profitably developed by private industry. There are some that may be so developed. There are others that may not be profitably developed by private industry, and yet they may be needed. As I understand, the object of this amendment is only to authorize the Government to produce them in the event it cannot obtain them by purchase. Is it not more important that the Government obtain them, by whatever method, than it is to be without them in order to protect some private industry which may not be able to produce them in sufficient quantities?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish to say, in support of the statement of our able leader, that in South Dakota there are literally mountains of low-grade manganese to which the statement of the leader absolutely applies, where private industry may never enter, but where the Government, through necessity of defense, might be compelled to step in. It is our patriotic duty to see that the Nation is supplied with this strategic war material.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I merely wanted to make a suggestion, to which I was leading up awhile ago.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. In view of the fact that the Senator from Minnesota has, through courtesy to the Senator from Ohio, withdrawn, or stated that he would withdraw, his amendment to the language on line 25, I suggest that the Senator from Arizona might then offer the word "producing" on line 25, and we would clear up this entire tangle. I believe we are all about of one accord. I believe the Senator from Ohio will agree to the amendment because I know what his intention is. He wants to make every contribution to the preparedness of this country possible, and no man wants to put the United States into the business of mining as a business.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. But that is not what we are doing by the amendment. We are saying to the Government, "Now you can do it if nobody else will." That is all we are saying.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. A moment ago I suggested that I would divide my amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I think that would be wise.

Mr. MURRAY. I think it would clarify the situation to have the first part of it agreed to, and then we can proceed to act on the second part of it.

It seems to me that, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, the second part of my amendment does not require the Government to go into business, but merely authorizes the Government to create a corporation for the purpose of producing these strategic or critical minerals if it becomes necessary to do so. The Government would not have to do it. The amendment would give the Government the mere authority to act if it became necessary. So that in that view of the situation it seems to me we should fortify ourselves, protect ourselves, against the emergency which might come in the future, when we would find ourselves without a proper and adequate supply of these indispensable minerals. In order to expedite the matter I ask that we proceed to act on the first part of my amendment, and I will later present the second proposal.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. I have said all I should say in the circumstances, and with the understanding that the amendment pending is the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] to insert the word "producing" in line 15, before the word "acquiring", that then the other amendment will be in order, I surrender the floor at this point.

THE COMMITTEE TO DEFEND AMERICA BY AIDING THE ALLIES

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I desire to speak only briefly about a matter which I hesitate to discuss just at this time, because of the pendency of the bill sponsored by the Senator from New York, but I feel that the people of the country have a right to know about the background of certain happenings in this country at this time. I wish to discuss the background of and something about the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. I desire to tell the Senate where it started and something about the membership.

As I noted on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, 18 persons met secretly on the 29th day of April in the city of New York, called together by Frederic R. Coudert, and started the framework for establishing the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. I am discussing it in the Senate at this time because there has been a wholesale campaign all over the United States, from New England to the Pacific coast, by advertisements in the newspapers, full-page advertisements, by all types of propaganda of this Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, to get us involved in this war.

I have no objection to anyone who desires aiding the Allies. That is his business, just as much as it is mine to feel that we should remain neutral, but I do believe that the people have a right to know the background of the organization which is generating this propaganda for such purpose, because I honestly feel that it is not a committee to defend America, but a committee to get us into war.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

AID EVERYBODY BUT AMERICA

Mr. LUNDEEN. The committee might better have been named "Committee To Aid Everybody but America."

Mr. HOLT. Let me tell the background of some of these individuals who met. Frederic R. Coudert is a lawyer in New York City. Preceding and during the World War he was legal counselor for the British Embassy, and took part in the propaganda which helped get us into the last war, whether it was much or little. The Lansing papers show he protested to President Wilson by a telegram against changing the rules during a war.

I have no condemnation from a personal view of Frederic R. Coudert. Besides his New York office Mr. Coudert has a law office in Paris at 52 Avenue des Champs Elysees. His law office there represents certain French interests which are vitally affected in the present war. Which interest is Mr. Coudert representing, his American interest, or his French interest, as a lawyer, at this particular time? The people have a right to know the whole truth about this matter. They will find, as I have been informed, that the French connections of Mr. Coudert would startle even some individuals who are going along with him.

Who else was at the meeting? There was Frank L. Polk, who was also active in the World War period, and one of the attorneys in the firm of lawyers representing J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. He was one of those who met secretly to set up this committee to aid the Allies. I do not care to discuss the activities of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. at this time.

Who else was present? There was Thomas W. Lamont, a partner of J. Pierpont Morgan, whose record was shown to the country, long after the war occurred, by the Munitions Investigating Committee as a record wanting us to be involved in the last war. It was the Morgan firm who sent this telegram before America's entrance into the last World War:

> We want you to know that we are engaged in educational work to prepare the way for another French loan.

Is he today preparing "educationally" the American people for another loan to France and our final involvement in the war? I could proceed and discuss Mr. Lamont, but I do not desire to delay the Senate. I am sure that all my colleagues here know of the connection of Mr. Morgan's firm in Great Britain as well as in the United States. Is Mr. Lamont representing the American or the British part of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. in this committee to aid the Allies?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If I remember correctly, the Morgan firm was the British fiscal agent in the United States during the World War, and perhaps after that, and recently I noticed in the press that J. Pierpont Morgan turned over a mansion of his in Scotland or England to the British King. I have never heard of his turning over any mansions for the use of Uncle Sam.

Mr. HOLT. He also turned over his yacht to an English concern, which was what he did during the World War, to make the yacht into a submarine chaser.

Henry L. Stimson was a participant. He had a part in the matter. They did not set up one of their members as their leading name, but they picked out as a front William Allen White, who in private conversation told many individuals whose reputations are irreproachable that he feels we should go all the way.

Whom did they name as its director? I feel the people have a right to know the truth, not that I have any objection to have anyone, if he acts as an individual, aid the Allies who desires to do so; but let us have the background of these individuals. The truth should be known. Who is the director of the organization? It is Clark M. Eichelberger. Who is Eichelberger? He has been for years director of the League of Nations Association, which is trying to involve the United States of America in the League of Nations, which meant involvements abroad. That is Mr. Clark M. Eichelberger.

Where is this committee housed? I have not been there, but I have been informed that this Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies is housed in the offices of the League of Nations Association. Let me tell the Senate that next week, when I disclose to the Senate the lawyers on this committee to defend America, and show their connection as representatives of certain corporations which are profiting out of this war, it will be extremely interesting for all here.

This committee stated in the advertisement that a list of the people contributing would be found at the office of the Secretary of State. I called up the Secretary of State, and there is no such list there. They are going to file it some time in the future, they say. I do not mean to say they had to file it. We all know they are not legally bound to file it, but on the bottom of the ad it is said that the list of the individuals paying for the advertisement would be found in the office of the Secretary of State. It has not been filed with the Secretary of State.

I tell the Senate here this afternoon that some of the members of this committee are profiting personally as the result of this war, and I will name them later in the session. I have always named my man, and you will find out I will do so again.

Many of these lawyers are in legal firms which represent corporations involved in those countries, not that I object to their doing that, but why do not the people have the whole truth as to their reason for the special interest?

Also on the committee are many individuals who have openly asked for a declaration of war. They are not for peace. These individuals are for war. Many of the group may not be. I do not say they have no right to be, but, as I stated in the Senate a few days ago, if they are for war, let them enlist. I want to see the Senate and the House repeal the law so that these brave fellows, these individuals who have a cause for which they speak, can enlist in the foreign armies without losing their nationality, as they hide behind that in their advocacy of war.

Some of you have received petitions signed by individuals of this particular group. Let me read letters from two girls in New York City. We have heard much about pressure on employees in the past. Listen to this:

> A petition of the committee to defend America by aiding the Allies was circulated in our office as probably in every other office in New York, and I had to sign it together with everybody else, although not agreeing with one word of it, in order not to lose my job.

Why do not some of these individuals who have been so worried about the coercion of employees, about which we have heard so much on the floor of the Senate, check the coercion of these employees, who have had to sign these petitions or lose their jobs?

Let me read a letter from another girl in New York City:

> DEAR SENATOR HOLT: Do you know that lists are being circulated in big New York firms (the one I know of is one of the best known Fifth Avenue beauty salons), to be signed by employees, stating whether or not they are pro-Ally? The inference taken is, of course, that if not pro-Ally, they are necessarily pro-Nazi.

That is what we hear here. In other words, if you are not for the Allies, you are for Germany. Is it not time to distinguish that you can be neutral and be for the United States? That is my position with respect to this matter. I do not think one must be on either side of the question, but the United States, in order to stay out of the war, should be neutral.

Let me proceed to read from her letter:

Moreover, the employees, knowing that the head of the firm is active in the Allied cause, are afraid not to declare themselves pro-Ally, for fear of losing their jobs.

Many timid people who are against getting into this war are afraid to put their beliefs on paper, because they think that when action against the so-called "fifth columnists" comes, anyone who has signed his name to a peace petition will be persecuted in some way.

In my opinion, those who talk loudest against the Nazis are the very ones who are beginning to imitate the Nazi methods.

You are doing much for this country, and may it bear much fruit.

I am not going to give the name of the one who wrote the letter, because it might be to her disadvantage.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if we have continued to aid the Allies for some years because of our failure to insist on these billions of dollars that are due us from European nations. Think of these billions of dollars foreign countries owe us. This morning's press reports that there are in this country deposits of more than $7,000,000,000 to the credit of and available to Great Britain and France. Yet they declare war on Germany. Great Britain today, in addition to her empire, four and a half times the size of the United States, has taken over the Faroe Islands and Iceland, both islands belonging to Denmark, thus increasing her huge empire. Great Britain already has laid the basis for taking over the colonial empires of the Netherlands and of Belgium, which would make her, perhaps, five and one-half times the size of the United States.

BILLIONS OF DOLLARS DUE US FROM THE ALLIES

Yet we continue to let these huge sums, billions of dollars which are due us, go by the board. And we have the spectacle here on the Senate floor today of Senators arguing and debating about where we are going to find pennies and nickels with which to take care of our children and our hungry people—children who cannot find schoolhouses in which to obtain even primary education. We are short of money for our students in our universities, short of money for our youth, short of money for labor, short of money to take care of the 12,000,000 unemployed. But there is such tenderness for the Allies, such readiness to pour billions into Europe.

FRANCE ON THE WAY OUT

I am not sure that they are Allies any more. There will be one country left, at least, I suppose, and that is the dear British Empire, whose burdens must be loaded on the back of Uncle Sam, and he will go staggering under those burdens while his own people beg for aid.

I wonder if the Senator from West Virginia would permit me at this point in his remarks to place in the RECORD the amount due the United States today, June 15, from these foreign countries—money which we furnished them when we went out to defend democracy and save the world. We did not succeed so very well, but there are those who would like to see the United States do the same thing all over again.

I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a table showing the payments due on June 15 and July 1, 1940, on account of indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States.

Mr. HOLT. I should be glad to have the Senator do that, but I am afraid that by his remarks today he may place himself in the list of those whom Jimmy Cromwell referred to as "Trojan jackasses." He said they are in the Senate and in the House.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to say in regard to Jimmy Cromwell that I understand he wrote a book in collaboration with some one about some subject or other. I believe that by the expression referred to he gave forth a perfect description of himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table referred to will be printed in the RECORD at this point. The table is as follows:

PAYMENTS DUE JUNE 15, 1940, AND JULY 1, 1940, ON ACCOUNT OF INDEBTEDNESS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
May 22, 1940.

NOTE.—Hungary and Finland paid their full payments due on June 15, 1940. This fact has been verified by Mr. Maxwell, of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, William Allen White is the head of the Committee To Aid the Allies. What is William Allen White's belief about happenings today? I want to quote from the Emporia Gazette an article written by him after the President's speech at Charlottesville. Here is what William Allen White wrote in his newspaper. I think it is worth while for the Senate to get this, because it shows how far we have gone. He said:

The President's moving speech, which took us to the brink of war and carefully left us there, was a wise and necessary move.

Get that. That is what the head of this committee, who has been conferring and cooperating with its members, has to say about the President's speech:

The President's moving speech, which took us to the brink of war and carefully—

"Carefully." He realized we would likely be pushed over if he did not do it with care. Yes; we might slip over. That is too short in steps short of war—left us there, was a wise and necessary move. For if the Germans win and take the British Fleet, we shall have to either abandon the Monroe Doctrine or send our ships and men to defend the islands captured from the Allies that are keys to the Panama Canal and so near to the United States that they would form dangerous air bases.

He continues:

But this is indeed our war.

Remember what occurred back in 1916? Remember the slogan "Our War"? This is Mr. William Allen White, the chairman of the committee in question writing—

But this is indeed our war which the President's speech moved us into by Executive ukase.

I want to make that clear to the Senate. This is a man who is behind this propaganda drive to get us actively engaged, and here is what he said. I repeat:

This is indeed our war which the President's speech moved us into by Executive ukase.

He says that we are in the war by the President's own statement. And this very afternoon the President was quoted as saying this to Premier Reynaud:

I know that you will understand that these statements carry with them no implication of military commitments. Only the Congress can make such commitments.

Get that? The President of the United States said:

I know that you will understand that these statements carry with them no implication of military commitments. Only the Congress can make such commitments.

What other commitments has he left out? He only modifies his commitments by one word, "military" commitments, and he says that only Congress can take that step. Mr. White and the President agree. Mr. White continues:

Congress only can declare war, but a President can take us to the edge of it, stop us there—

Perhaps he can stop us there. That is the danger. We hope he can. But what if he does not? Why take that dangerous path to the brink of war?—

a President can take us to the edge of it, stop us there and let us look over into the abysm into which we might go hastily and in catastrophe if we delayed our help to the Allies and let the war come to us instead of sending aid which will let the French and British win as they fight—

And I want to accentuate that—our battles.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the Senator has noticed that radio commentators are now saying that the Army is releasing—I am not certain that this is correct—but they make the statement on the air that the Army is releasing powder facilities and powder reserves to the Allies. It is not enough to give them artillery and our war planes. Lord Lothian has demanded our ships, and we have to turn over other war materials. But we are not allowed to keep even our powder dry any more because the Allies are to have it.

CONVOYS INTO WAR

I wonder if the Senator has noticed the press speaking of proposed convoys? We are supposed to go into Europe now—into these dangerous waters, and convoy this material in order to save this world empire on which the sun never sets. That is our duty, that is our manifest destiny, to preserve them. Since when did it become American to think of everything across the ocean and forget our own people at home?

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I did not want to go into a discussion of that matter, but since it has been brought up I am going to place in the RECORD a statement of how old these so-called obsolete planes are. The President of the United States made a public statement in which he condemned individuals, saying that they were within the letter of the tax law but outside the spirit of that law; that things should be open and aboveboard; and yet, with a twinkle in his eye, according to those who were at the White House press conference, he said he was going to sell these "obsolete" or surplus planes to a factory, which, in turn, will sell them to somebody else. We knew that meant the Allies.

Here are some facts as given to me: The unit cost of these planes was $45,000, and these obsolete—I wish to underscore the word "obsolete"—these obsolete planes were sold back for $44,990. They certainly were obsolete, were they not? They were sold back to the factory for $44,990. There was only a loss of $10, which one would lose on an old tire if one traded it back to the dealer. They were not obsolete. The country knew they were not obsolete. Why the subterfuge?

What do I mean by that? Do Senators realize that of the ships which were turned over to the Curtiss Aircraft Company, the oldest one was delivered to the United States Government on May 16, 1939? Do Senators realize that 22 of the 50 planes which were traded in to Curtiss as obsolete planes were delivered to the United States Government between March 7 and April 10 of this year? Twenty-two of the 50 planes which the President of the United States called "obsolete" were delivered in March and April of this year.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I ask that a statement showing the invoice numbers and the exact dates of sale to the United States Government be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HOLT. In discussing William Allen White and his committee, as I shall do briefly, I wish to read what Mr. White said on the 6th day of February 1937 about what the President proposed to do with reference to packing the Supreme Court.

Three years ago Mr. White said:

Adroitly President Roosevelt is proposing to pack the Supreme Court. And because he is adroit and not forthright, he arouses irritating suspicions, probably needless, about his ultimate intentions as the leader of his party and the head of his Government. For his plan to pack the Court did not spring full panoplied from his brain in the last few weeks or the last few months. But flouting the democratic process of open discussion, the President revealed to the American people in the long campaign no inkling of this plan. In fact, time and again during the campaign he was charged with exactly what he is doing. His silence then in this morning's light was a little more than insincere.

Mr. White uses the word "ukase" in this article, in which he says that the Supreme Court is to be packed by Executive ukase—the very same language which he now uses in discussing the approach of the United States Government to the place from which there may be no retreat. Let us hope that the commitment has not gone that far.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate. All I want is that the people and the Senate shall have the facts.

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the complete editorial of February 6, 1937, by William Allen White, be printed in the RECORD to show that he approves now what he bitterly condemned before.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Emporia Gazette of February 6, 1937]

Adroitly President Roosevelt is proposing to pack the Supreme Court. And because he is adroit and not forthright, he arouses irritating suspicions, probably needless, about his ultimate intentions as the leader of his party and the head of his Government. For his plan to pack the Court did not spring full panoplied from his brain in the last few weeks or the last few months. But flouting the democratic process of open discussion, the President revealed to the American people in the long campaign no inkling of this plan. In fact, time and again during the campaign he was charged with exactly what he is doing. His silence then in this morning's light was a little more than insincere.

Last fall he met the charge that he was trying to become an unconstitutional leader by berating the wicked monopolists, the financial manipulators whose powers should be properly clipped and who certainly should be personally punished. But while crying against these "economic royalists" he would seem to have harbored subconsciously a seven-devil lust to become an unconstitutional royalist himself. This country can take care of those who break the laws in high places. That's comparatively easy. But those who scorn the orderly processes of democracy, those leaders who by instinctive indirection slip around our laws and annul the basic implications of American democracy, they become a menace more deadly than the economic royalists whom Roosevelt denounces. In a world challenging democracy, in a day when tyrants appearing as demagogs crying out against predatory wealth have shattered Europe's democratic institutions, this court message of the President's seems strangely like the first looming American symptom of danger.

It is not what the President is doing. Most of his recommendations are sound. At base his most drastic proposal is at least debatable. But the point is this drastic proposal has had no debate before the people. Moreover, by his power over Congress the President will deny free debate there.

It may be wise to pack the Supreme Court. Necessary economic change and social growth must not be choked by the judiciary. But how shall the judiciary be checked? This is a serious question. Whose wisdom has the President consulted? Here is a vital step down a new path amounting to a constitutional change. We should not go dancing dizzily down there overnight. Change should come in a democracy only after a considered, organized, intelligent movement of the whole people. No emergency justifies haste where liberties may be curtailed. Patience is a basic virtue in any democracy.

Every change of public opinion should be definitely reflected in a growing conviction of Congress, and finally by legislation formed after amendment and debate. But this morning we wake up and read a Presidential ukase. Surely the executive branch of the Government should not take full charge of the judicial branch of the Government between hay and grass. Surely in the long campaign last year we should have had some warning of this specific change which will affect our Government so profoundly. Surely Mr. Roosevelt's mandate from the people was to function as the President, not as Der Fuehrer.

This Presidential adroitness, this uncanny capacity to avoid the direct joining of issues in full, fair, and free debate, this seemingly instinctive lack of candor, this smiling assumption of courage while avoiding all danger, this elaborate stage play to flatter the people by a simulation of frankness while denying Americans their democratic rights of discussion by suave avoidance—these traits are not the traits of a democratic leader. These are tricks which have been played in the new game wherein other peoples have lost their democratic liberties in other lands.

How long will the people be fooled?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator speaks of facts. Here are a few facts which, with the Senator's permission, I should like to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point.

FRANCE AND BRITAIN CAN PAY

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article from the Christian Science Monitor, stating that the total resources of the Allies available for foreign purchase, as late as September 29, 1939, were $15,000,000,000. The article is headed "Fifteen billion dollar war chest estimated for Allies." The article is not long, but it gives the facts. The Christian Science Monitor certainly cannot be accused of being pro-Nazi. Then my question is, Why this talk of credit to these empires, why gifts to these wealthy countries, who still owe us billions from the last war?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of September 29, 1939]

FIFTEEN-BILLION-DOLLAR WAR CHEST ESTIMATED FOR ALLIES

NEW YORK.—The ability of Great Britain and France to pay for the raw materials and finished goods which they will undoubtedly buy in this country in increasing quantities as the war progresses has been the subject of much discussion. A survey of combined Allied resources would warrant the conclusion that resources are ample for a long time ahead. The total resources of the British Empire and France, available for foreign purchases, are close to $15,000,000,000—which will permit a considerable cash and carry business at the rate of buying from 1914 through 1918. A sizable proportion of these funds are in the United States in the form of dollar balances, gold and marketable securities, says E. J. Donahue, of the Standard Statistics Co., in an analysis of British and French funds which may be applied to war business.

FOREIGN BANKING FUNDS

At the outset it can be said very definitely that the large foreign assets of various sorts in the United States will insure a substantial volume of war business. The dollar balances, real or potential, are already being mobilized, and they will shortly undergo a process of transfer from foreign to domestic account in payment for commodities and services supplied.

The most fluid of these resources obviously are the foreign banking funds in this country. Those held by the United Kingdom, France, and Canada total close to a billion dollars.

United States securities held by foreigners represent another liquid asset readily convertible into cash. As a matter of fact, the funds raised through liquidation of these securities will exceed by a wide margin the total of foreign bank balances here. Nationals in the United Kingdom alone hold United States securities with a value of $900,000,000, Canadians own $447,000,000, while the French have $253,000,000.

The remainder is held largely by citizens of neutral countries, particularly the Netherlands and Switzerland, whose balances are valued at $589,000,000 and $355,000,000. The value of American securities held by all other Europeans is about $390,000,000.

The British are now required to register their holdings of foreign securities with the Bank of England, and it is reasonable to assume that these assets will be expropriated. Other warring nations undoubtedly will take similar steps, creating a potential $1,600,000,000 which may be spent in the United States by Great Britain and France.

BALANCES IN UNITED STATES

In addition to the banking funds and securities held in this country, which have been almost steadily accumulating here for the past 5 years, foreigners can also draw upon their brokerage balances in the United States to pay for our merchandise. The total of these funds is relatively small ($72,000,000); but again the lion's share is held by the democratic powers. The United Kingdom, France, and Canada have more than half of the total, Germany and Italy combined have nothing, while the remainder is held by neutrals.

A much more important source of funds is the earmarked gold held in this country for the account of foreign central banks. Because of the threat of war which hung over Europe for many months huge quantities of gold bullion were shipped to the United States for safekeeping. This gold is held in the vaults of the New York Federal Reserve Bank under special license from the Treasury.

Earmarked gold virtually enjoys extraterritorial rights. It is not a part of our monetary gold stock, nor can it be acquired in any way by the Treasury. It is instantly available for conversion into dollar balances.

The value of the earmarked gold in American dollars is $1,400,000,000. No break-down of its ownership will be made public, but it is a foregone conclusion that none belongs to Germany or Italy. It is certain that a major portion is the property of the democratic nations.

The ability of the belligerents to buy in this country is by no means limited to their liquefiable American assets. They may also ship gold to us in payment for commodities purchased. In this respect England and France have a huge advantage over their adversary.

SOUTH AFRICAN GOLD

The famous Rand mines in South Africa represent the most prolific source of gold at this time. The value of their production in 1938 was $426,000,000. The United States ranked second with $178,000,000, followed closely by Canada with $165,000,000. Production in other countries is relatively small, although it is believed that Russian output last year was around $180,000,000.

The significant feature of this situation is that gold production in the British Empire last year was about $700,000,000, or more than half of the total, including Russia. Sale of this gold will be an important factor in helping the British to secure necessary war supplies abroad.

* * * * * * *

FRANCE'S HUGE HOARD

France has the larger gold hoard of the two; it is estimated at $3,100,000,000. The United Kingdom has an estimated $2,400,000,000. The rest of the British Empire holds gold of a dollar value of $950,000,000.

In all, the British and the French are in a position to mobilize $6,000,000,000 in gold. In contrast, Germany officially reports gold holdings of only $29,000,000, and while she may have a secret cache, it cannot be large. She also has control of Czechoslovakian gold, but the total of this is only $60,000,000. Italy's entrance on Germany's side would help in this respect, but Italian gold holdings, reported at $193,000,000, are still insignificant in relation to those of the democratic nations.

Gold has often been labeled as the most important of the war's munitions. It is certainly true that, in any long war, it is economic power that determines the outcome. In this respect, the impressive war chest of gold held by Britain and France gives them a very definite edge over the Reich.

Existing gold supplies are not the only factor to be considered in this connection. The ownership of newly mined gold is also an important consideration. At present, the world is producing gold at the rate of over a billion dollars annually, and the division of this commodity wealth may have an important bearing on the outcome of the hostilities.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I have another short article, from the Willmar Daily Tribune, entitled "England Can Pay Her War Debt," a brief article written by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] on the subject of these empires' ability to pay. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Willmar Daily Tribune of January 8, 1938]

ENGLAND CAN PAY HER WAR DEBT—SENATOR SHIPSTEAD POINTS TO PRACTICAL MEANS ALREADY IN AGREEMENT

In the Washington Times of December 20 there appears an article by Senator HENRIK SHIPSTEAD in which he replies to a British economist who had given out reasons why England was unable to pay war debts to the United States. The article was accompanied by his portrait. Senator SHIPSTEAD is a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, says the Times, "during his service in that body has gained an international reputation as an authority on economic problems." The Senator's article follows:

ENGLAND CAN PAY

(By HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, United States Senator from Minnesota)

The "distinguished economist" quoted by the Times has decided that Great Britain cannot sell $200,000,000 worth of additional goods annually to the United States, and therefore the only way she could pay her war debt would be to reduce present purchases here by that amount and build a balance of trade favorable to herself. This is not all that could be done, however.

Granted that Great Britain cannot meet her war obligations to us through the export of gold, and we would not want her to do so if she could. But that is not the only answer to the dilemma.

In the funding agreement with Great Britain of June 1923 I find that the British Government has agreed to issue "definite engraved bonds in form suitable for sale to the public" in exchange for those issued under the agreement with our Government. These bonds are to be in bearer form and carry the same exemption from taxation as those issued under the existing debt agreement.

NO EFFORT TO DO IT

Why has the United States Treasury never called this alternative into use? The agreement specifically states that they will be issued "at any time" or "from time to time" at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

During all the default history of this debt agreement no attempt, to my knowledge, has been made to use the alternative. Yet it is obvious that it might well be used to provide both Great Britain and the United States with a way out of the dilemma in which they now find themselves.

It should not be difficult to imagine what could take place if British bonds "suitable for sale to the public" were made available in this country under this agreement. Placed in the hands of American tourists who spend about $15,000,000 a year in England alone, they could be liquidated and put in the hands of the British people through the normal process of providing these services. Or given into the hands of American tourists who spent over $225,000,000 in Canada, the Dominion could provide the mother country with assistance in discharging its obligation.

TRADE RAMIFICATIONS

Then there are the unlimited ramifications of triangular and multilateral trade. Suppose Brazil needs British exchange to buy goods from Britain. Brazil could trade coffee to an American holder of these British bonds and acquire the needed exchange, and thus the debt would be transferred. The Brazilian businessman would use the bond to pay for British goods. That would liquidate the bond and make it unnecessary for England to buy dollars. This is only one example of hundreds that might be cited.

There would be no difficulty in making a transfer of this kind. British bonds and British exchange are salable all over the world.

Such a mechanism might be used to stimulate trade and travel with Great Britain, its dominions, and throughout the world as a whole. Some special inducement might well be made as to direct the use of these obligations in these channels. Not only would the Federal Treasury thus be replenished but so would world commerce. In part, the success of a plan of this kind depends on its capacity to stimulate international business.

TRANSFER ISLANDS?

If Great Britain is ready to live up to its agreement, if it means what it says and that it is only asking for someone to point the way out, does not its own "sacred treaty" of 1923 show it that way?

On the other hand, a few miles from our own coast are the beautiful Bahamas. Also Bermuda, with a naval base, close to our shore; Jamaica, Trinidad, and British Honduras, in addition to all these innumerable islands strung along in the sea east of the entrance to the Panama Canal that we are obligated to protect. This group of islands could furnish a base for negotiating with a view to a transfer to the United States in payment of all or part of the debt. England has always paid its debt with interest whenever possible, and here are opportunities for doing so.

If Great Britain thinks so much of the sacredness of its agreements and treaties, that she can spend more than a billion dollars in a year in preparation for another holy war to enforce the sacredness of treaties, what should it not be willing to do to make good on its promise to us?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article from the Washington Post of February 27, 1940, entitled "Ten Thousand Families in the East Living in Grapes of Wrath Conditions, United States Agencies Learn."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of February 27, 1940]

TEN THOUSAND FAMILIES IN THE EAST LIVING IN GRAPES OF WRATH CONDITIONS, UNITED STATES AGENCIES LEARN

(By Alfred Friendly)

The eastern seaboard has its own Grapes of Wrath.

From Florida to New Jersey it is faced with a steadily growing migrant farm-labor problem whose victims live in economic wretchedness as desperate as that of the California-bound "Okies" of John Steinbeck's novel.

At least a dozen Federal agencies are concerned with the situation, it was learned yesterday. The Labor Department Labor Standards Division and the Farm Security Administration are already deeply involved.

Farm Security Administration estimates that 10,000 to 20,000 migrant families will progress northward from Florida this spring, "working peaches" in Georgia, going to the strawberry, potato, and vegetable areas in the Carolinas, thinning apples in the Shenandoah Valley, and working the truck farms on the Maryland and Delaware shores.

They travel in "jollopies," live in ditch-side camps with complete absence of sanitary conveniences, reports show. More often than not their small wages are further reduced by predatory labor brokers, "row bosses," and "padrones." The fields where they work are the scene of some of the country's greatest exploitation of child labor.

According to one informed F. S. A. official, conditions of migrant labor groups now in Florida are "worse than California."

Most of the migrant laborers, Federal officers believe, are colored. Almost all—colored and white—have been "tractored out" of Georgia and Alabama farms, or were sharecroppers or day laborers displaced by machines or crop curtailment.

When the migrant groups came north it is said they were joined by part-time industrial workers, mainly Italian, Polish, and Lithuanian, from Baltimore, Camden, and Philadelphia, who are recruited to work in the fields by "padrones." These collect fees from farmers for supplying labor and take part of the worker's pay for getting him the job.

"Row bosses," on the other hand, are those who arrange for the transportation of the southern workers. Often, it has been reported, they bring a group to a farm, collect their fee from the owner, and in the middle of the night move their group out to another location.

In New Jersey an F. S. A. report found "housing consists of crude barracks, particularly in the cranberry bogs, designed to house 10 to 30 families. Absolutely no comforts or conveniences. No bathing or laundry facilities."

"Typical housing for migrants" in Florida, another report says, consists of a "14-room shelter, each room containing a family numbering from 2 to 10 people, each room renting from $1.50 per week. During the 8-month season the landlord receives $819. The cost of building this shelter was $400. For each 4 to 8 such shelters the common practice is to have a single open-pit toilet.

Two major concerns to Federal officials is that children of the migrant families can obtain no education and that local "settlement laws" prevent migrants from receiving relief. The workers usually have no money between jobs and are frequently stranded.

A Palm Beach County, Fla., school-board member reported that in his area "education was in competition with beans, and beans are rapidly winning out."

Children too small to work in the fields have been left for periods of several days in disorderly houses for lack of any other place where they might be cared for, F. S. A. investigators found.

Other investigations have found that 50 percent of such migrants now in Florida are syphilitics, and in certain areas more than 80 percent. Officials have said it is "nothing less than a miracle" that there have not been epidemics of other diseases, since the migratory families drink polluted water.

At a conference last week in Baltimore, labor commissioners from Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, and New Jersey recommended that attempts be made to obtain relief for stranded families.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, all I desire to say is that the people of the United States have a right to know the facts. They have a right to know what is behind these organizations. Almost every time an organization has been started to oppose the administration it has been investigated by some branch of Congress. But we shall find behind this committee, acting as a so-called patriotic committee to defend America, the tentacles of British and French finance. I think history will prove that behind this committee is English and French money. In my mind there is no doubt about it. They are not interested in defending America.

I do not blame those in France who want us to come over; but I do blame individuals here who want our country to go over, with someone else's sons doing the going.

The Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. Why are they not honest with the people and why do they not limit the name to two words—"Allied Committee"?

As I have said, I have not told the whole story. I have much information on the question. Later I shall take up for consideration some of the individual members of the committee and tell the Senate their background, their connection with international finance, their international background, their pressure on newspapers, why they have that pressure. That may show why almost all references to staying out of involvement have been kept out of the newspapers. I intend to show the Senate the fact that some of these individuals, as I said earlier, are making a profit out of war. Some say it is undemocratic to tax war profits, and that to do so would destroy our democracy in this country. However, they feel it is perfectly democratic to confiscate a boy's life by sending him over as a member of our naval convoy, about which they are now speaking. Any man who knows anything about history knows that a naval convoy of the type mentioned in the papers means actual war.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will someone please tell us how we are to defend America by stripping America of her defenses and her armament, and sending them over to foreign countries, when all our experts tell us that we cannot replace them in less than 18 months, or perhaps 2 years? During that interval of time, where is our defense? Who is going to defend us?

Mr. HOLT. That question dovetails into the facts which I gave the Senate a moment ago. Fifty planes, the oldest of them delivered last year, have been sent across the ocean, and in their places we have blueprints. I do not know whether or not any Senators have ever gone up in the air on a blueprint, but I can assure the Senate that a blueprint will not stop an air force from coming over here. Last night I heard a speaker say that he had shot many rifles, but that he had never shot a rifle "on order."

The situation is that we are stripping our defense of things which we may need. Before I came into the Chamber, it was stated over the radio that some of the very planes which we have sent over there have been taken. In other words, they may be turned over to the Germans. Some are afraid of their turning over their fleets. With the same reasoning, if the speedy victory of the German Army continues, we shall be giving to the Germans the planes which we may need for ourselves.

Mr. President, I think the time has come for America to have a committee to aid America by taking care of Americans. When we have such a committee, we shall have fewer armchair patriots who are financially and politically involved in this war—politically because they think it will give them a wave to ride upon, and financially because of actual involvement in stocks which represent sales of certain materials.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3938) to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended; and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope we may proceed to the conclusion of the pending measure. To that end, I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall have to object. I shall require somewhat longer than 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The suggested agreement would give the Senator 20 minutes, because he may speak 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; but I should like to speak longer than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I modify the request by making it 15 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. TAFT. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the amendment now before the Senate relates to the production of strategic and critical materials. I should like to discuss the whole bill and the amendments at this time.

The first section of the bill relates to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That section really is wholly and completely unnecessary today. It is part of the plan by which $700,000,000 is to be returned to the Treasury in order that we may not have to lift the debt limit. Now we propose to go ahead and lift the debt limit by $4,000,000,000, so that this section is really unnecessary today. It is, in my opinion, a mere subterfuge. It provides that instead of issuing $300,000,000 of Government bonds to pay for Government expenses we shall have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation borrow $300,000,000 on the market with its notes—which I think are in effect guaranteed by the Federal Government—and then turn over to the Treasury the $300,000,000.

The only difference is that the $300,000,000 does not technically come within the debt limit, whereas $300,000,000 of Government bonds would do so.

The necessity for this section has entirely disappeared; and, so far as it is concerned, there is really no purpose in it. There is no more reason why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should own the stock of the home-loan bank than that the Treasury should own the stock of the home-loan bank. There is no reason why it should be transferred from the Treasury to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, except to avoid the necessity of lifting the debt limit. Now we propose to lift the debt limit anyway. So it seems to me that all of the first section of the bill is unnecessary.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. While the pending tax bill does provide for lifting the debt limit by $4,000,000,000, nevertheless it is being lifted for the purpose of providing national-defense funds; that is, to take care of expenditures or to provide funds to be expended for national-defense purposes.

Mr. TAFT. I do not want to differ with the Senator, but the reason for increasing the debt limit is that the peacetime deficit will amount to $4,000,000,000, or something over $3,000,000,000, without any additional defense funds; and the real reason why we should have to increase the debt limit would be to take care of that debt, and not to take care of the additional defense measures.

Mr. GEORGE. Some part of it might be used for general purposes, but the provision now in the bill for lifting the debt limit is intended not to lift the debt limit for ordinary and usual expenditures of the Government but for the purpose of taking care of national-defense costs.

Mr. TAFT. That will only postpone until next year the raising of the debt limit for other purposes, because we are running over $3,000,000,000 behind for peacetime expenditures every year, and we have reached the debt limit; so we cannot go on with that deficit, and yet apparently we are going on. We added another $100,000,000 to the deficit yesterday in the Senate. We cannot go on without raising the debt limit; and the terms of the bill, as I understand it, are such that it is just beating the devil around the bush as to whether the money is used for one purpose or another. There is no necessity for this particular provision, so far as I can see, during the current year at least.

Going on to the provision for the creation of corporations, when this provision was presented to the Banking and Currency Committee the R. F. C. asked for almost unlimited power to do anything. The original amendment presented by the R. F. C. provided that the Corporation was authorized to create or organize a corporation or corporations with such powers as it might deem necessary to aid the Government of the United States. As so requested, the R. F. C. could have gone into the electric-power business; it could have gone into the railroad business; it could have gone into the transportation business, or farming, or any other activity. The present amendment was offered in committee, and partially accepted, to cut down that power.

It was stated that what the R. F. C. really wanted the power for was to buy strategic and critical materials. There is a plan on to do so at once, and certainly that is a worthy purpose and one to which we can have no objection; but it was also insisted that the Corporation be authorized to manufacture war supplies, and the committee insisted on putting in that provision. Personally, I think it is unnecessary. I think it is particularly unnecessary because since the committee considered the bill we have already given that power to the Army of the United States. The Sheppard bill, recently passed, provides that the Army may build plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances, including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants, for the manufacture of military equipment, munitions, and supplies. We have already created this power for the Government to manufacture munitions; and now we proceed to give to an entirely different department of the Government the same power to go out and manufacture more munitions.

Will they coordinate their efforts? Why should two different departments of the Government have the same function, which, after all, is a fairly dangerous function, and one that ought to be closely watched?

Personally, I prefer to give the power to the War Department, in whose hands it will be subject to the control of the Appropriations Committee, and we shall know what is being done. If we create a corporation of this kind, the corporation will be gone forever from the care of Congress. The corporation may do anything. So far as I can see, there is not any check on it. I suppose some report will be made by it, but I do not think there is any legal requirement for a report by the corporation. It may borrow money and run a business just exactly like a private business.

I do not think that is desirable. It may be necessary in some cases, but in this case I really do not think it is necessary. The Navy Department builds many of its ships. We have given the War Department power to make munitions. It seems to me that if we are going to do this sort of thing, that is the way to do it, and not to create a corporation which none of us will ever hear from again, which will go out and buy real property. We hesitate a great deal about appropriating money to let the Government buy real property; but this corporation will buy real property, and buy plants, and do all kinds of things of which we shall never hear, which no committee of Congress will ever know, and the check on which, at least in this bill, is exceedingly remote and tenuous.

The committee were so overwhelmingly in favor of going ahead with any measure proposed that I do not know that they could be stopped. I tried to cut down, as far as I could, the powers proposed to be conferred; and we cut them down to acquiring and carrying strategic and critical materials, and then to purchasing land and buildings for plants, leasing those plants, and engaging in manufacturing, if the President found it necessary, through a corporation, but only in manufacturing equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense. Even that power, it seems to me, is very much too broad under any circumstances, because "equipment and supplies" may cover food and clothing. The Government may establish clothing plants. It may establish food plants. It may manufacture flour. It may set up flour mills. It may engage in all kinds of business.

So, when the time comes, I shall offer an amendment cutting down those words to "arms, ammunition, and implements of war," which I understand, with some modifications, is satisfactory to the Senator from New York.

I do not believe there is any necessity for this particular power. I think it emphasizes the necessity for something else which I propose to offer as an amendment—the creation of a War Resources Administration. I have on the table an amendment proposing that all powers to manufacture goods and to buy supplies for the Army and Navy shall be centered in a War Resources Administration—a single administration with a single head—with power to manufacture, power to buy, and power to create the capacity which will be necessary if we are to set up an effective defense. That power today is utterly and completely scattered. We ourselves are scattering it. One day we give the power to the War Department and the next day we give the power to the R. F. C. It also rests in the Navy Department. Mr. Hopkins also has something to say about it. Mr. Knudsen apparently is doing most of the work toward planning some kind of industrial preparedness, and Mr. Knudsen has no legal authority except as the President may approve what he recommends. His power is purely advisory. In addition to that we have the Procurement Division of the Treasury. Just what their function is I do not know.

So we have six different departments dealing with the question of furnishing equipment and military supplies. I think it ought to be concentrated in one department, and that department ought to be given power. Today there is no person who can coordinate the activities of the several departments except the President of the United States and he has not time. Furthermore, the uncomfortable position is presented that at any time one department may find that the President has approved something which Mr. Hopkins recommends which the department did not know anything about, and which conflicts with some policy it has been pursuing. I believe the only way in which we can hope to create an efficient capacity in the United States is by creating a single department to deal with these matters, and giving to that single department these powers to manufacture, order, and create capacity, if you please.

I do not know that this bill makes the matter any more confusing than it already is; but who in the United States will decide whether we shall go into manufacturing war supplies? Who will do it? Is Mr. Jesse Jones to do it? Is the Secretary of War to do it, or is Mr. Hopkins to do it, or Mr. Morgenthau? Apparently, the only person to whom they head up, as I said, is the President, and the President's decisions necessarily must be hastily made. They must often be made without consideration of all the other things that are being done in the same field.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. MILLER. On that question, could the President, under the Reorganization Act—and I am asking purely for the Senator's opinion about the matter—transfer part of the duties of the various agencies to which the Senator has alluded, to the Defense Council recently composed and set up by him?

Mr. TAFT. I am sorry to say I do not really know. As set up and provided in the statute, it is purely an advisory body, and I would rather question whether he could transfer powers to it. But I am afraid I cannot answer the Senator's question.

Mr. MILLER. I myself do not know, but I was interested in the question raised by the Senator. I do not know the answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I will add only a word. While I do not desire to object to the granting of any powers which are sought, I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is probably the best body to buy the critical and strategic materials. I do not think they are the best body to manufacture airplanes, or to manufacture powder or munitions, but if Congress wants to give them the power, we will hope the powers will in some way be coordinated. I think, however, we should go on affirmatively and create one department which will undertake this whole process, because today war is a matter of machinery. Our defense is going to depend far more on the successful mobilization of American industry; on the creation of capacity for the production of thousands of planes; on the creation of capacity for the production of tanks which can be turned out, when war requires them, in great numbers.

A great many people have talked about aiding the Allies. I do not know any more effective way than by the creation of capacity, creating capacity through private manufacture, which will in no way, when it does aid the Allies, violate the neutrality of the United States.

I hope very much that, whether my amendment regarding the War Resources Administration is accepted now or not, the administration and those in charge in this body and in the House of Representatives will seriously consider the wisdom of creating the office of War Resources Administrator, with full power to mobilize the industries of the United States.

With regard to the particular amendment now pending, I myself feel that acquiring and carrying strategic materials is a fairly simple thing. When we ask the Government to go out and set up a corporation which can actually mine materials, incidentally open mines, and establish companies which can operate in competition with private enterprise in some cases, I think we are going a little further than we need to go until some plan is presented. No one has come to us and said we had to produce a particular strategic material in this country, and that the Government should do it, that it cannot be done through private enterprise. It seems to me we should grant the Government power only where someone has come and said that the particular activity cannot be carried out through private enterprise. When that is done, I should be perfectly willing to grant the power.

While I have no objection to subdivision (1), line 14, page 7, which relates to making loans to private companies, I do see an objection to the amendment in line 25, which authorizes the Government to go into the mining business and into manufacturing, possibly into agriculture, even, if an agricultural material proves to be strategic. I would be in favor of accepting the proposal of the Senator from Montana, accepting his first amendment in line 15 and rejecting the amendment in line 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, on page 7, line 15, of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I now offer as an amendment the second part of my proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 25, after the word "to", it is proposed to insert the word "produce" and a comma.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to record myself as against the amendment. I do not care to discuss it. I am opposed to the policy involved in this whole provision, subsection 2, and, at this time, since an opportunity may not be offered for a record vote, I desire to say that I shall vote against the bill on account of the attempt to delegate power to a corporation to create another corporation. I have had opportunity to read briefly the memorandum which was handed to me, and which has been placed in the RECORD, and such study as I have made of it does not convince me that a State may delegate to a corporation power to create another corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], on page 7, line 25, of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "arms, ammunition, and implements of war."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the amendment is quite agreeable to me, with certain additions which I have asked the Senator to accept. They are on line 1, page 8, after the word "purchase" to insert the words "and lease"; in line 2, before the world "build", to insert the word "lease" and a comma; in the same line, line 2, after the word "purchase", to insert the words "and produce", and in the same line, after the word "equipment", to insert a comma and the word "supplies."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have seen these amendments, and my understanding of them is that in effect they add to the possibility of manufacturing arms, ammunition, and implements of war, the manufacture of machine tools and similar materials necessary to make arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and I am willing to accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator modifies his amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified.

The amendment as modified to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) As provided in the Industrial Mobilization Plan, Revision of 1939 (S. Doc. No. 134, 76th Cong., 2d sess.), there is hereby created a War Resources Administration (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Administration") to be composed of an Administrator and an Advisory Council. The Advisory Council shall be composed of representatives of the War and Navy Departments, and such other departments, commissions, and independent agencies as the President may find necessary, such representatives to be appointed by the President, and hold office at his pleasure. The salary of the Administrator shall be fixed by the President but shall not be at a rate in excess of $10,000 a year.

(b) The Administrator is authorized and directed (1) to formulate the basic policies for the mobilization of the economic and industrial resources of the country to meet the requirements of a major war; (2) after consultation with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, to formulate detailed plans (a) for the acquisition, purchase, and storage of all raw, semiprocessed, and finished materials and supplies necessary for the national defense, and (b) for the creation of adequate manufacturing capacity to manufacture arms, ammunition, implements of war, and other equipment and supplies in such quantities, and at such rates as may be necessary in time of war; (3) to make plans for the reduction of the activities of nonessential industries in time of war, or when war is imminent, and for their partial or total conversion to more useful war purposes; (4) to coordinate the requirements submitted by the Army and the Navy for military equipment, munitions, and supplies, with the essential needs of other Government agencies and those of the civilian population; (5) to make recommendations for legislation required to carry out the plans made; (6) to exercise all powers heretofore conferred on any official or department of the Government to purchase, store, or carry strategic and critical materials; (7) to exercise all powers conferred on any official or department of the Government to manufacture arms, ammunition, implements of war, and other equipment and supplies necessary for the national defense; (8) to exercise all powers conferred on any official or department of the Government to construct Government facilities at privately owned plants, or to lease Government facilities to private manufacturers.

(c) The Advisory Council shall advise and assist the Administrator in the performance of his duties under this section.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no military equipment, munitions, or supplies shall be contracted for by the War or Navy Department or manufactured for such Departments without the approval of the Administrator, and such approval shall be given only in accordance with the plans formulated by him.

(e) The Administrator is authorized to appoint such attorneys and other experts, without regard to the civil-service laws, and to appoint, subject to the civil-service laws, such other officers and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section. The Administrator is further authorized to utilize such of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government as he may deem necessary. The Administrator shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(f) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to add only one word, and that is that we have had an industrial mobilization plan in the United States, approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, since 1931. Senate Document No. 2, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, sets out the first revised plan. In 1936 it was again revised and approved, jointly, by Harry H. Woodring, Acting Secretary of War, and Claude A. Swanson, Secretary of the Navy. In 1939 another revision was made—Senate Document No. 134, Seventy-sixth Congress, second session, which sets out this plan, the essential feature of which is the creation of a War Resources Administration.

The amendment is drafted in accordance with the industrial mobilization plan. It is the plan which is recommended to the Army and Navy of the United States. It is the plan which all who have studied our set-up under war conditions recommend, and it seems to me that that is itself a sufficient recommendation for the adoption of this policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the amendment is almost identical with an amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the military bill, and which was rejected by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. The purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was the same. I offered no amendment to the bill referred to.

Mr. WAGNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I meant to say the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. TAFT. This amendment, however, carries out in more detail, certainly, the industrial mobilization plan which the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont did not.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to correct my statement. In effect, its purpose is the same as the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the military bill, which was before us, and the amendment was rejected by the Senate. We now have a board which is effectively coordinating the industries of our country, mobilizing them for this very important work, and it seems to me it would be futile to create another board to supersede the board which is now in existence and which is doing this work admirably.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended. Without objection——

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President; I desire to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended. [Putting the question.]

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that House bill 9958 be laid before the Senate and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9958) to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I move that all after the enacting clause be stricken from the House bill, and that the Senate bill, as amended, be substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed——

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President; I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill (H. R. 9958) was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3938 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to House bill 9958, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WAGNER, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERFERENCE WITH MILITARY DISCIPLINE AND FINGERPRINTING OF ALIENS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, with the consent of the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5138, Calendar No. 1802.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to find out what the bill is.

Mr. CONNALLY. This is the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee relating to aliens.

Mr. AUSTIN. Having to do with the fingerprinting of aliens?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this House measure came to the Senate last July or August, in the closing days of the session, and the Judiciary Committee very hurriedly reported it favorably without amendment. Subsequently the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on the 29th of May the bill was reported with amendments, as is shown by the printed copy of the bill. Thereafter we examined the bill, and, while we did not decide to change any of the substance of it, we concluded, after consulting the departments and the legislative counsel, that the whole measure should be rewritten.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the amendment reported on June 10, in the nature of a substitute for House bill 5138, be considered in lieu of the committee amendments as carried in the original report of the bill. I may say that the committee on June 10 also reported an amendment to the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"TITLE I

"SECTION 1. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, with intent to interfere with, impair, or influence the loyalty, morale, or discipline of the military or naval forces of the United States—

"(1) to advise, counsel, urge, or in any manner cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States; or

"(2) to distribute any written or printed matter which advises, counsels, or urges insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term 'military or naval forces of the United States' includes the Army of the United States, as defined in section 1 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (48 Stat. 153; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 2), the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserve, and Marine Corps Reserve of the United States; and, when any merchant vessel is commissioned in the Navy or is in the service of the Army or the Navy, includes the master, officers, and crew of such vessel.

"SEC. 2. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) to knowingly or willfully advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence, or by the assassination of any officer of any such government;

"(2) with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States, to print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, sell, distribute, or publicly display any written or printed matter advocating, advising, or teaching the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence;

"(3) to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence; or to be or become a member of, or affiliate with, any such society, group, or assembly of persons, knowing the purposes thereof.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term 'government in the United States' means the Government of the United States, the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or the government of any political subdivision of any of them.

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to attempt to commit, or to conspire to commit, any of the acts prohibited by the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 4. Any written or printed matter of the character described in section 1 or section 2 of this act, which is intended for use in violation of this act, may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found, or from any person in whose possession it may be, under a search warrant issued pursuant to the provisions of title XI of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 18, ch. 18).

"SEC. 5. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(b) No person convicted of violating any of the provisions of this title shall, during the 5 years next following his conviction, be eligible for employment by the United States, or by any department or agency thereof (including any corporation the stock of which is wholly owned by the United States).

"TITLE II

"SEC. 20. Section 19 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 155), as amended, is amended by inserting, after 'Sec. 19.', the letter '(a)', and by adding at the end of such section the following new subsections:

"'(b) Any alien of any of the classes specified in this subsection, in addition to aliens who are deportable under other provisions of law, shall, upon warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported:

"'(1) Any alien who, at any time within 5 years after entry, shall have, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(2) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have on more than one occasion, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien or aliens to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(3) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted of possessing or carrying in violation of any law any weapon which shoots or is designed to shoot automatically or semiautomatically more than one shot without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger, or a weapon commonly called a sawed-off shotgun.

"'(4) Any alien who, at any time within 5 years after entry, shall have been convicted of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.

"'(5) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted more than once of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.

No alien who is deportable under the provisions of paragraphs (3), (4), or (5) of this subsection shall be deported until the termination of his imprisonment or the entry of an order releasing him on probation or parole.

"'(c) In the case of any alien (other than one to whom subsection (d) is applicable) who is deportable under any law of the United States and who has proved good moral character for the preceding 5 years, the Attorney General may (1) permit such alien to depart the United States to any country of his choice at his own expense, in lieu of deportation, or (2) suspend deportation of such alien if not racially inadmissible or ineligible to naturalization in the United States if he finds that such deportation would result in serious economic detriment to a citizen or legally resident alien who is the spouse, parent, or minor child of such deportable alien. If the deportation of any alien is suspended under the provisions of this subsection for more than 6 months, all of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the case shall be reported to the Congress within 10 days after the beginning of its next regular session, with the reasons for such suspension. The Clerk of the House shall have such report printed as a public document. If during that session the two Houses pass a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the suspenion of such deportation, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law. If during that session the two Houses do not pass such a resolution, the Attorney General shall cancel deportation proceedings upon the termination of such session, except that such proceedings shall not be canceled in the case of any alien who was not legally admitted for permanent residence at the time of his last entry into the United States, unless such alien pays to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a fee of $18 (which fee shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts). Upon the cancelation of such proceedings in any case in which such fee has been paid, the Commissioner shall record the alien's admission for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States and the Secretary of State shall, if the alien was a quota immigrant at the time of entry and was not charged to the appropriate quota, reduce by one the immigration quota of the country of the alien's nationality as defined in section 12 of the act of May 26, 1924 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 201), for the fiscal year then current or next following.

"'(d) The provisions of subsection (c) shall not be applicable in the case of any alien who is deportable under (1) the act of October 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes," as amended; (2) the act of May 26, 1922, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes,' approved February 9, 1909, as amended" (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175); (3) the act of February 18, 1931, entitled "An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics," as amended (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a); (4) any of the provisions of so much of subsection (a) of this section as relates to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other immoral persons, the mentally and physically deficient, anarchists, and similar classes; or (5) subsection (b) of this section.'

"SEC. 21. The act entitled 'An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics,' approved February 18, 1931, is amended—

"(1) By striking out the words 'and sentenced';

"(2) By inserting after the words 'any statute of the United States' the following: 'or of any State, Territory, possession, or of the District of Columbia,'; and

"(3) By inserting after the word 'heroin' a comma and the word 'marihuana.'

"SEC. 22. No alien shall be deportable by reason of the amendments made by section 20 or 21 on account of any act committed prior to the date of enactment of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. If Senators will obtain copies of the amendment in the nature of a substitute bearing date of June 10, they will see the particular form in which I desire to present the bill at this time.

Mr. President, briefly, I wish to state the nature of the bill. It deals with offenses relating to undertakings to influence members of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard, and merchant ships when in the service of the Navy or the Army. It makes it a criminal offense for anyone to advise, counsel, urge, or in any way or manner cause insubordination, disloyalty, muting, or refusal of duty, and so forth, the purpose being to prevent subversive influences from building up, as it were, a "fifth column" among our own troops and our own naval forces.

It also makes it an offense to distribute any written or printed matter which advises, counsels, or urges insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

Section 2 makes it unlawful for any person knowingly or willfully to advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence.

In other words, it is an offense under the bill for anyone to advocate the overthrow by force or violence of any State government, any municipal government, or the Government of the United States. The term "any government" is defined in another section of the bill as being any State government, municipal government, or the Government of the United States.

Another provision makes it unlawful for any person, with intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States, to print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, sell, distribute, or publicly display any written or printed matter advocating the overthrow of the Government by force or violence.

Another provision makes it unlawful to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who seek, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence. That is probably the broadest provision in the bill. It makes it unlawful to join or to organize any society which advocates the overthrow of the Government by force or violence. That applies to such organizations as those of the Communists and others who openly advocate the overthrow of the Government by force or violence. That is probably one of the most stringent provisions of the bill; but it should not disturb anyone, because it relates only to those who advocate, not a change of the Government under constitutional processes, not a change of the Government under democratic institutions, but the overthrow of the Government by force or violence.

Another provision makes it an offense to conspire to do any of the things which are prohibited. That, of course, is customary in criminal statutes.

Offenses are punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both, within the discretion of the court.

Title II amends the immigration laws with reference to the deportation of aliens. It does not repeal existing law, but superadds and superimposes additional provisions on existing law. It provides that any alien of the classes specified shall, upon warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported.

The classes of aliens specified are the following:

Any alien who, at any time within 5 years after entry, shall have, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law. It must be for gain. If a father should be found guilty of slipping into the country, his son, his wife, or another member of his family, he would not come within the prohibition; but if an alien should sell a passport to another man, and the other man should enter the country on it, the alien would be guilty, and would be deportable.

Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have on more than one occasion, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien or aliens to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law. In other words, if, on account of love and affection, an alien should commit the offense once, he would not be liable, but if he should do it the second time he would be liable to deportation.

Any alien who, after entry, shall have been convicted of possessing or carrying, in violation of law, any weapon which shoots or is designed to shoot automatically or semiautomatically, such as sawed-off shotguns, automatic machine guns, and things of that kind.

Any alien who, at any time within 5 years after entry, shall have been convicted of violating the Alien Registration Act.

Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted more than once of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act. That is the proposed act.

The bill provides that no alien who is deportable under the provisions of paragraphs 3, 4, or 5 of subsection (b) of section 20 shall be deported until the termination of his imprisonment, or the entry of an order releasing him on probation or parole.

Those are substantially the changes in the deportation law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am extremely interested in the success of what the Senator and his committee aim to do. I call attention to the provision specifying deportation. As of the present time, there is an evasion of the requirement for deportation of aliens, under the argument that many aliens whom we desire to deport no longer have any country to which they may be deported. Has the committee taken into consideration that contingency?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is simply a physical difficulty which the deporting authorities have to face. Sometimes they put a deportee on a ship, and he travels back and forth three or four times.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that there is now on the calendar a bill which was enacted by the House, to which some objection has been made upon the call of the calendar. That bill deals with the question raised by the Senator from Oregon. The pending bill does not deal with that particular question; that is, finding a place to land the alien after the order of deportation. However, there is on the calendar a bill dealing with that question.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oregon has put his finger on a very troublesome question. We cannot always deport aliens to the countries from which they came because frequently the countries will not receive them. A country may have been wiped out overnight by conquest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Regulations have been put into effect by the immigration authorities under the terms of which, when the evidence is conclusive that the deportee would not be permitted to reach his own country, the enforcement provisions shall be suspended for a rather indefinite period.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that on page 9 of the bill there are some sections in which I am sure he will be interested. We propose to amend the existing law to read as follows:

> That any alien who, at any time, shall be or shall have been a member of any one of the following classes shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

That is an amendment to existing law. The existing law applies to anarchists and others who advocate the overthrow of government by force or violence.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Inasmuch as the Senator is discussing page 9, let me say that section 22, on page 9, reads:

> No alien shall be deportable by reason of the amendments made by section 20 or 21 on account of any act committed prior to the date of enactment of this act.

Was that provision inserted for constitutional reasons? It would appear that if it were not there, persons who at the present time are known to the Government to have conspired in the past might be immediately rounded up. I was wondering whether or not that language was inserted for constitutional reasons.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that sections 20 and 21 deal with violations of the narcotic laws, prostitution, and things of that kind; so we made the sections applicable only from the date of the enactment of the bill, because it involves criminal punishment, and we did not desire to enact a retroactive measure.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that on page 9, line 16, there is a clause which will probably operate automatically to deport some of the persons who have been causing trouble out on the Pacific coast. The existing law is amended by striking out the words "or to have become thereafter" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or to be or to have been at any time thereafter."

This provision refers to membership in communistic or other societies which advocate the overthrow of government by force or violence. In other words, if an alien seeks entry into the United States, and he is at the time a member of a communistic or anarchistic organization which advocates the overthrow of government, we exclude him; but if he enters anyway, and thereafter joins one of these organizations, he is then deportable, and he cannot avoid prosecution by saying, "Well, I have quit," because if he ever has been a member since coming into the country he is deportable.

Mr. President, title III relates to the registration and fingerprinting of aliens. Under this part of the bill it is provided that no immigrant may come to the United States until the officer issuing his visa shall have registered him and fingerprinted him, and given him a copy on his visa, and forwarded a copy to the Department of Justice. I do not think there is any question about that portion of the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I notice that the penalty clause for failure to register is contained in section 36. This section provides that—

> Any alien required to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted who willfully fails or refuses to make such application or to be fingerprinted, any parent or legal guardian required to apply for the registration of any alien who willfully fails or refuses to file application for the registration of such alien, any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien who files an application containing knowingly false statements or who procures or attempts to procure registration of himself or another person through fraud, or any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien who fails to give written notice to the Commissioner of change of address as required by section 35 of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not to exceed $100 or be imprisoned not more than 30 days, or both.

That penalty might be sufficient for failure to give to the Commissioner written notice of change of address; but, to my mind, it is woefully inadequate to deal with fraud on the part of any alien in attempting to deceive the Government in the registration. The very aliens for whom the registration is designed will be those most likely to be guilty of some fraud in registering, and they will not be deterred by any powder-puff penalty of a 30-day sentence or a $100 fine.

I ask the Senator from Texas if he would not be willing to accept an amendment providing that an alien who is guilty of fraud, and who willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of the act, shall be forthwith deported to the country of his origin.

I think if one willfully and knowingly and fraudulently seeks to evade this registration law, he should be deported. I do not think we should deal with him by saying we are going to put him in jail for a week or a month and fine him $25 or $100.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, allow me to say to the Senator that that was a matter of discussion. We had before us the Solicitor General and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. The Solicitor General objected to making the penalty any more stringent—and they are administering the present law—for this reason: He says that since the only object is to obtain registration and fingerprinting, if the alien has committed no other crime, and we punish him for not reporting, and then he does not report, the next day, or the day after that, we may keep on punishing him until he does register. The object of the bill is to have him registered or fingerprinted.

The Solicitor General objected to adding on deportation because, he said, there were so many worse cases calling for deportation that we might as well put in our time on getting rid of the criminals and others. If a man should simply fail to register, either through ignorance or through carelessness, or even willfully, he thought a punishment of $100 or not more than 30 days in jail would be sufficient, with the further provision that he would still have to register, or, if he did not register, he would be guilty of another offense. That is why we incorporated in the bill this penalty.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; but, Mr. President, of course the very persons this bill is designed to affect, the very ones it is important that we know something about, are the ones who will resort to fraud in connection with registration. Hundreds of thousands of aliens in this country will gladly comply with the provisions of this bill. From aliens of that type this country has nothing to fear; but those who are going to resort to fraud, and willfully and knowingly refuse to register, certainly should be dealt with more harshly than some little justice-of-the-peace or municipal-court or police-court punishment of $100 or 30 days in jail.

This provision says "willfully refuses." We would not punish for willfully refusing a man who did not file any application because he did not know about the necessity of doing it. It will be necessary to prove intent to perpetrate a fraud on the Government of the United States. If that is done, I think the man should be deported.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. HATCH. In line with what the Senator from Georgia has said, I call the Senator's attention, on page 13, to the fact that section 34, subdivision (c) provides, in the last sentence:

> Any person authorized to register aliens under this title shall be authorized to administer oaths for such purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. He would be guilty of false swearing in addition to failing to register.

Mr. HATCH. He would commit perjury; but, under this particular statute, if he should make a false statement and commit perjury, he would be punished only by a $100 fine or 30 days in jail.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would he not be punished under the general statute on false swearing?

Mr. HATCH. I think not. This is a specific penalty for a specific offense. I am asking the Senator for his interpretation of the provision.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is possible that the Senator from New Mexico may be right. I have no objection to his offering an amendment to deal with that subject.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment——

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from New Mexico wait until I conclude my statement on the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the remaining sections of title III provide that every alien within the United States is required to be fingerprinted and registered—all of them.

In the case of children under 14 years of age, their parents are required to register for them. I shall not go into details about the forms. The aliens will be registered at post offices throughout the country, and at such other places as the Attorney General may designate. We have provided that they shall be registered at post offices because post offices are scattered all over the country and are convenient and accessible to those to be registered.

The House bill provided that the aliens must register with a Federal court. We thought that would be inconvenient. At many places the Federal court is a hundred miles or a hundred and fifty miles from the residence of the alien. We also thought that if we made it possible for aliens to be registered by postmasters, informers and others would see to it that the postmasters registered all the aliens. I can imagine such a man calling up the postmaster and saying, "Has Old Man Bohunk over here ever registered as an alien? If not, we want to know, and we will see that he comes in." That was a very practical consideration which operated on our minds.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The suggestion has been made to me by persons interested in this subject that there are in this country a good many aliens who came from countries abroad to which they are not now, for practical reasons, subject to deportation, and that there are considerable numbers of such persons whose conduct has made them something of a menace to the safety and security of this country, so that administratively we cannot deport them, and yet it constitutes a menace for them to remain here.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Florida that that matter was discussed a short time ago, when the Senator from Florida was not in the Chamber.

Mr. PEPPER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] pointed out that there is now pending on the Calendar of the Senate a House bill making provision for taking care of those particular cases.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I was interested in.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, there was practically no disagreement in the subcommittee, and none in the full committee. The Senator from Connecticut did have an objection to one section, I believe on page 3, subsection (3). Is that correct?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. When subsection 3, which is found on page 3, lines 8 to 14, inclusive, was under consideration we found that it was proposed in the bill, in the language of its authors, not my language, to legislate against those who would "organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States."

That is the way the language came before us.

The words "by force and violence" were added after we had had considerable discussion. As the language stood in the committee, I was opposed to it entirely, because the Supreme Court has several times said that in times of peace, when there is no emergency, the constitutional protection of the right of free speech is more than ample to protect people, even if they were to go out and undertake to organize a society to overthrow the Government. In other words, the Supreme Court held, in essence, and Mr. Justice Holmes, writing for a united Court, expressly so stated in the case of Schenck v. The United States (249 U. S.), that in the absence of emergency the constitutional protection was broad enough to protect an individual in his right of free speech.

It seemed to me that we should very properly preface this particular section with language which would provide that in time of war, or whenever the President shall have declared the existence of a national emergency by proclamation, as he did last September with reference to our present situation, having established a status when the constitutional protection would be suspended, then the law would be adequate and constitutional and valid. In other words, I wish very carefully to avoid, in our desire to attain a desirable objective, walking into what actually would be a suspension of the right of free speech, and therefore attain an unconstitutional status. Because of that I expressed these views in the committee.

By the inclusion of the words "by force or violence" in line 11, I believe most, if not all, of my objection has been met, chiefly for the reason that if there be any question as to the constitutionality of someone undertaking to organize a society to overthrow the Government of the United States by force or violence, I would much rather err in favor of the public policy of sustaining the Government's right to protect itself than I would to protect the rights of an individual who had that particular criminal and, in my judgment, unlawful intent.

I think I have stated for the RECORD the views I expressed in the subcommittee, and I think the subcommittee has in essence met the objection by joining with me in including the words "by force or violence" in line 11. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Connecticut, and I desire to say that the Senator from Connecticut worked very diligently and industriously in the subcommittee on the bill. He is entitled to great credit, and I appreciate the fact that we were able to meet the objections which he then had, and I am gratified that he is making no objection to this section at this particular time.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] paid a just and well-deserved tribute to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. But the modesty of the Senator from Texas precluded him from going further, and I myself am going to say that the Senate, and the country as well, owe to the subcommittee which considered this proposed legislation a debt of thanks. The chairman of the subcommittee was the Senator from Texas. The other members were the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and, as has been said, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

It so happens that I am able to testify to the many hours of diligent work the subcommittee performed in framing this bill. They called in the heads of various bureaus and secured information and light from every proper source. I wish to thank them, not only on my own behalf, but I am sure I but speak the voice of the entire Committee on the Judiciary when I say they are entitled to the gratitude of the entire country.

Let me refer to one other matter. So many letters have been received that it is not within my power, or within the power of any other Senator, to answer all the communications which have come to the Committee on the Judiciary respecting this bill. I do not say this for the enlightenment of Senators, or of any Member of the House of Representatives, because they know it; but I am speaking to the country. This measure does not propose such a thing as a bill of attainder. The bill in no sense is in the nature of an ex post facto law. It is not even retroactive, although retroactive laws are constitutional. Many persons have written saying they are surprised that we should attempt to pass a bill of attainder. There is nothing in this measure in the nature of a bill of attainder.

Congress never passes bills of attainder, and even before the Constitution was formed many of the American colonies had provisions against bills of attainder. I wish to make it emphatic that the pending bill contains no such suggestion as a bill of attainder or ex post facto law.

Mr. President, there has not been a bill of attainder passed in England, if I remember correctly, since the reign of William and Mary, or of William the Third, when St. John Fenwick was attainted. The pending bill takes care of the legal rights of persons who are here as guests, and we will clear away much underbrush by remembering that an alien is nothing more nor less than a guest of the United States.

The United States has plenary power to invite any alien here it chooses to invite, and to exclude an alien at any time for a good reason, for a bad reason, or for no reason at all. The United States has full power, acting within its sovereignty, and it is not a breach of any alien's constitutional rights, to bar him at any time for any reason, or for no reason. In other words, a citizen need not give a reason why he invites a guest, and upon a guest there is certainly imposed the duty of behaving himself as well as the family behaves itself, and if an alien misbehaves, the sovereign plenary power of the Government is complete and full to exclude him at any time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arizona very deeply.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think it is proper for me to say at this point, following the very eloquent remarks of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], that I have polled the Members of the minority who are present, and I am able to say that the minority unanimously support the pending measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very much gratified at the assurance of the Senator from Vermont, and I thank the Senator from Arizona for his generous and cordial remarks. A further word, and I shall be through. We regretted very much that we had to discard entirely the bill passed by the House and substitute a new bill after the enacting clause. However, we called in Mr. Murphy, of the Drafting Service, who worked with us some 2 weeks every day in putting the bill into shape. We called on the Department of Justice, and had the Solicitor General with us. We called in the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and together we went over all the existing laws, and worked the new provisions into the existing laws, so as to make a harmonious whole. We thought it was best to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and present a complete text, as we have done. I believe that is all I care to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 14, line 1, after the word "fraud" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "shall upon conviction thereof be fined not to exceed $100 or be imprisoned not more than 30 days, and shall be deported to the country of his or her origin."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this amendment would make only those guilty of the offense of willful fraud deportable. It would not make the failure to notify the Commissioner as to a change of address a deportable offense. It merely includes those who willfully fail and refuse to comply with the law or those who willfully are guilty of making false and fraudulent statements in their registration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not disposed to resist the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Texas. I do not really know what the term "willful failure" means. It seems to me that the two words are contradictory. It seems to me that if a man tries to do something and fails to do it, it could not be called a willful failure.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would not be.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me that language something like this—as I hastily put it together—would cover the situation:

Any alien applying for registration and to be fingerprinted, who with knowledge of such requirements, fails or willfully refuses.

Refusal contains in it the meaning of the word "willful"; but it seems to me that "failure" is something with which the will does not have very much to do. It seems to me the language could be made somewhat clearer.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, if the Senator will look at the bill on page 13, he will find in line 18, and also in line 21, and running through the entire section, that the expression "willfully fails" also means "willfully refuses." Of course, a man cannot willfully refuse to do something about which he does not know anything. I believe the whole context of the section will meet the objection or suggestion made by the Senator.

I will say to the Senator that the bill has to go to conference, and if it is necessary to clarify that matter, I believe the conferees will give it attention.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Michigan that to my mind "willfully," in law means with an evil intent, with an improper purpose. It is wholly distinguishable from "willingly." It means with some improper purpose and some illegal intent. I think it will be found that the law dictionary so defines it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, what is really meant here, it seems to me, is that the alien, with knowledge of the fact that there is such a requirement, fails to appear and be registered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; that is the effect of it. But we do not want to require the Government to prove that he knew it, because it is very hard to prove what is in a man's head. If we can prove that he had knowledge, or should have had knowledge, and then innocently failed, he is not guilty. If he did not have knowledge, and failed to comply, he is innocent. But "willfully" implies a wrongful purpose, to evade, not to comply with the law.

Mr. BROWN. I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, and let is go to conference.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I think the Senator from Georgia has a wholly laudable purpose in the suggestion of the proposed amendment, but I wish to call to his attention that what he has now done is to make three single offenses subject to an order of deportation, namely, if the accused alien, or the person in charge of such alien, shall fail to register, shall refuse to register, or shall falsely register. With deportation such a dire and drastic penalty at a time when this whole matter is in an experimental stage, I submit to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senate as a group, that that subject was thoroughly canvassed with the Solicitor General, with the representatives of the Department of Justice, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and that after most careful thought we eliminated the language which was submitted to us by the House Members, the idea of deporting the alien in the event of a conviction for the offenses listed.

Let me call to the attention of the Senator from Georgia that it will take about 6 months for this vast plan to get under way. It reaches from one end of the United States to the other; it reaches into our territories and our insular possessions; it will cover hundreds of thousands of Chinese and Japanese, as the Senator will realize, in the Hawaiian Islands and in similar places.

Mr. President, under such circumstances deportation on top of a criminal penalty is a most drastic thing, and I submit to the Senator from Georgia that, if we can get the experience that will be gleaned between now and January, in the 6 months needed to set up the machinery and get this thing in operation, we will be able, in the light of the facts, in the light of the report of progress that will be available to us, when we come back to the Congress, adequately then to deal with the situation that is represented by that report.

I earnestly urge the Senator from Georgia to withdraw his proposed amendment at this time. I believe the provision goes too far to be included in the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish merely to say that, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the entire bill will go to conference. I believe someone stated that the Senator from Connecticut is a member of the subcommittee, and undoubtedly he will be one of the conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; he will.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not propose to work any hardship on anyone. The bill, in my opinion, is not nearly drastic enough, but I am willing to go along with it provided it carries a sufficient penalty to make the bill workable.

I know, and every other Member of the Senate knows, that if the penalty provided for false statements or perjury is only 30 days in jail or $100 fine, the bill will not reach the aliens in this country which it is designed to reach. It will not reach the aliens against whom we want to protect this country, because they will not pay any attention to a little police-court fine of $100 or 30 days' stay in jail.

This amendment is designed to reach those who file false and fraudulent statements. Who is going to file false and fraudulent statements? It is the aliens who are in this country for no good purpose and who do not want the Government of the United States to know the true facts concerning them.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. Let me point out that, while that objective is wholly desirable, the Senator's draftsmanship has made this deportation penalty apply to a willful failure, if you choose, or a refusal to register. Mr. President, if, after registering these aliens, we find that there are 100,000 of them who entered the United States illegally, they are deportable anyway, and that is what we are trying to establish. If the Senator's amendment reaches only that class of aliens who willfully commit perjury, who knowingly file false statements as to their entry, then there would not be any objection to deportation as to that type. Of course not; but the Senator's amendment as drafted reaches the whole class defined in the particular section 36.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; it does not. I specifically exempt from this penalty those who refused to notify the commissioner of a change of address, because I thought in that case the penalty was too drastic.

Mr. DANAHER. I agree. But I——

Mr. RUSSELL. An alien in this country is a guest of the United States. If he refuses, with knowledge of the facts, to comply with our laws, then he should be deported to the country of his origin. I think that this deportation clause should apply to that group of aliens. They are here as visitors. We have passed laws in time of war which have resulted in sending citizens of the United States to the penitentiary—laws which subjected them to the scorn of their neighbors if they did not walk in and register when the Congress of the United States said that every American citizen within certain ages should register. Certainly when an alien is a visitor in the United States, enjoying the blessings of peace, and the blessing of being permitted to be in this country, if he willfully flouts the law of the land and says, "I, with full knowledge of the facts, refuse to register," he ought to be deported to the country of his origin.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], on page 14, line 1, of the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 1, after the word "fraud", it is proposed to change the comma to a period, strike out the words "or any", and insert the word "Any."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 7, line 24, which is purely textual in character. The language refers to section 201. I move to amend that language by changing "201" to "212". The purpose of the amendment is merely to correct a clerical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 5138) was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to prohibit certain subversive activities; to amend certain provisions of law with respect to the admission and deportation of aliens; to require the fingerprinting and registration of aliens; and for other purposes."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. DANAHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are one or two routine matters which I should like to clear up.

On the 1st of August 1939 the Senate passed Senate bill 2712, which authorized refunds or reimbursements for internal-revenue stamps destroyed or damaged, the exchange of damaged stamps, and so forth. The House passed and sent to the Senate yesterday an identical House bill—H. R. 9909—which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from further consideration of House bill 9909 and that it be now taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, representing the minority, I have looked at the subject, and I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee is discharged from further consideration of the bill.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9909) to amend sections 2803 (c) and 2903 of the Internal Revenue Code was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF TAX BILL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets on Monday it proceed immediately to the consideration of House bill 10039, the tax bill which was today reported from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASSURANCES BY HITLER TO THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, at this late hour I shall not detain the Senate for more than a word or two, and then I wish to incorporate some data into the RECORD, if I may have permission to do so.

I did not want the day to pass without making some reference, at least, to the statement which has already been adverted to by the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], relative to the assurances which were given the Western Hemisphere in a recent statement by Herr Hitler, the leader of the Third German Reich.

Mr. President, as some Senators have expressed it, they did not really become concerned about Hitler's designs upon the Western Hemisphere until he unequivocally stated that he had no designs. As the President so well stated, that statement arouses unhappy recollections in the mind of every living person who for the past few years has been hearing those assurances given, only to see them flagrantly and inhumanely violated in the course of a few months, and in some instances a few days after they were solemnly given.

Mr. President, in order that the matter may not be unduly protracted, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a brief summary appearing in the New York Times of May 12, 1940, covering the period from January 30, 1933, to May 10, 1940.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PEPPER. Following that, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement headed "The roll of dishonor," which sets out in greater detail the statements made by Hitler relative to his designs on other countries, and the violation of those assurances.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ROLL OF DISHONOR

Within the space of a few months the liberties of six nations of Europe have been overwhelmed by Adolph Hitler, the German leader. As in 1914, the German Government has again brought dishonor upon the German people, for each one of these countries had received his solemn assurance, as head of the German Government, that he would respect its independence. Every pledge has been broken, and the faith of the civilized world in the word of Germany has been utterly destroyed.

Here is the record:

1. TREATY OF LOCARNO AND THE RHINELAND

In his speech to the Reichstag on January 30, 1934, Herr Hitler announced, in reference to the Saar problem:

"This is the only territorial question which is still open between the two countries. After it has been settled the German Government is prepared and determined not only to accept the letter but also the spirit of the Locarno Pact, since there are no other territorial questions outstanding between France and Germany."[1]

After the plebiscite, which showed a clear majority for Germany, the Saar territory was handed back to Germany on March 1, 1935. On May 21, 1935, Herr Hitler repeated his assurance with regard to the Locarno Treaty:

"The German Government will therefore unconditionally respect the articles concerning the mutual relations of the nations in other respects, including the territorial provisions, and those revisions which shall be rendered necessary in the course of time will be put into effect only by the method of peaceful understanding * * * they (German Government) will scrupulously maintain every treaty voluntarily signed, even though it was concluded before their accession to power and office. In particular they will uphold and fulfill all obligations arising out of the Locarno Treaty, so long as the other partners are on their side ready to stand by that pact."[2]

This pledge was given after the conclusion and with full knowledge of the Franco-Soviet Pact, which Germany was later to put forward as releasing her from the Locarno Pact. Less than a year after this unequivocal pledge German troops, on March 7, 1936, reoccupied the Rhineland in direct violation of article 1 of the Locarno Pact, and thereby tore up the treaty which Herr Hitler had so recently reaffirmed.

2. AUSTRIA

When reports began to circulate in Europe that Germany was planning to seize Austria Herr Hitler denied such intentions in his Reichstag speech on January 30, 1934, in the following terms:

"The assertion that the German Reich intends to violate the Austrian State is absurd and cannot be substantiated or proved * * * I must categorically deny the further assertion of the Austrian Government that an attack will be made on the Austrian State or is even being planned by the Reich."[3]

Despite this vigorous denial of aggressive intentions the terrorist activities of the National-Socialists in Austria continued, culminating in the abortive Nazi putsch of July 25, 1934, and the brutal murder of Dr. Dollfuss. Herr Hitler, however, reiterated his declaration that he had no designs on Austria and gave categoric pledges in his speech to the Reichstag on May 21, 1935, when he affirmed:

"Germany neither intends nor wishes to interfere in the internal affairs of Austria, to annex Austria, or to conclude an anschluss."[4]

Further explicit assurances were given in the Austro-German agreement which was signed on July 11, 1936:

"Following on the declarations made by the Fuehrer and Chancellor on May 21, 1935, the Government of the German Reich recognizes the full sovereignty of the Austrian Federal States (art. 1). Each of the two Governments considers the internal political structure of the other country, including the question of Austrian National Socialism, as part of the internal affairs of that country over which they will exercise no influence, directly or indirectly" (art. 2).[5]

These pledges, categorical as they were, proved of no more value than his earlier assurances with respect to the Rhineland. On February 12, 1938, Dr. Schuschnigg went to Berchtesgaden, where Herr Hitler demanded that the Austrian Cabinet should be reconstructed, giving the key positions of Minister of Foreign Affairs and of the Interior to Ministers with pronounced German sympathies. This was done, but it was not sufficient for Herr Hitler, and when it was announced that a plebiscite was to be held in Austria on the issue of "Are you for a free and German, independent and social, Christain and united Austria * * *," Herr Hitler waited no longer and on March 11, 1938, after the resignation of Herr Schuschnigg had been forced by the threat of German invasion, German troops marched into Austria. On March 13 the incorporation of Austria with the Reich was announced.

3. CZECHOSLOVAKIA

The protocol of the Locarno agreement, initialed on October 16, 1925, had provided that all disputes arising between the contracting parties, of which Germany and Czechoslovakia were two, should be submitted to means of pacific settlement, and this provision was specifically implemented by a German-Czech arbitration treaty of even date. In a speech to the House of Lords on March 14, 1938, Lord Halifax revealed that—

"Field Marshal Goering on March 11 gave a general assurance to the Czech Minister in Berlin—an assurance which he expressly renewed later on behalf of Herr Hitler—that it would be the earnest endeavor of the German Government to improve German-Czech relations."

In the same speech Lord Halifax stated that on March 12, 1938, "the Czechoslovak Minister in Berlin was assured that Germany considered herself bound by the German-Czechoslovak arbitration of October 1925."

The sequel is well known. Throughout the summer of 1938 German demands on the Czechoslovak Government were increased, and no further mention was made of submitting any difficulties to arbitration. The tension culminated in the Munich agreement of September 30, 1938, whereby the Sudetenland was ceded to Germany.

In acceding to the German demands on this occasion the British Government showed that so long as there was any justification for the German claims, it was prepared to go to almost any lengths to secure peace with Germany. Despite Herr Hitler's intransignet attitude in the course of his conversations with the British Premier, Mr. Chamberlain hoped that by granting the German claims it would be possible to begin a new period of cooperation in Europe, a hope that was largely based on Herr Hitler's earnest declaration that "* * * after the Sudetenland German question is regulated we have no further territorial claims to make in Europe. I have promised that when the claims of the other minorities in Czechoslovakia have been satisfied we will guarantee the integrity of the Czech state."[6]

A similar assurance had been given to Mr. Chamberlain at Berchtesgaden and Godesberg, when Herr Hitler had emphasized also that "he had no wish to include in the Reich people of other races than Germans."[7]

These pledges also were only a prelude to further aggression. On March 14, 1939, Dr. Hacha, President of the Czech Republic, was summoned to Berlin to receive the commands of the Fuehrer that Bohemia and Moravia be placed under "German protection." The next day German troops occupied Prague, and Germany proceeded to absorb Czechoslovakia.

As before, categoric German assurances were "thrown to the winds" and confidence in Herr Hitler was now completely destroyed. It was this fact which forced Great Britain to depart from her traditional foreign policy of avoiding specific Central European commitments and to guarantee the independence of Poland, Greece, and Roumania, and declare her determination to resist any further attempt to dominate the world by force.

4. POLAND

Herr Hitler's record with regard to Poland displays a similar technique, with specific assurances prefacing a violent solution of the issues at stake.

On January 26, 1934, a German-Polish agreement was signed providing that should any disputes arise between Germany and Poland "and agreement thereon not be reached by direct negotiation, they will in each particular case, on the basis of mutual agreement, seek a solution by other peaceful means. * * * In no circumstances, however, will they proceed to the application of force for the purpose of reaching a decision in such disputes."

For 5 years—and as late as January 30, 1939, only 7 months before the outbreak of war—this agreement was constantly praised by Herr Hitler and his lieutenants as one of the outstanding achievements of German diplomacy. But the moment he felt that he could force the Polish issue the Poles became the target for an insulting campaign of official propaganda similar to that directed at the Czechs in the previous year. It is interesting to compare Herr Hitler's references to Poland during these two phases.

[7] Mr. Chamberlain, House of Commons, September 28, 1938 (Hansard).

In his speech to the Reichstag on October 6, 1939,[8] for instance, Herr Hitler referred to Poland as a state "who for centuries past had proved herself incapable of existence, was in 1916 artificially begotten and in 1919 no less artificially born by a German Government just as incapable of existence." [9]

This opinion of the nature of the Polish state hardly agrees with Herr Hitler's former utterances. On May 21, 1935, he had informed the Reichstag that "we recognize Poland as the home of a great and nationally conscious people," [10] whilst again on January 30, 1937, he had announced that "for my own fellow citizens I should like to state that the Polish nation and the Polish state have also become realities." [11]

On February 20, 1938, Herr Hitler gave the soothing assurance to the world that "this most dangerous spot (Danzig) from the point of view of European peace has entirely lost its menacing character," and on September 26 of that year he reiterated the stability of relations between Germany and Poland:

"In Poland there ruled no democracy, but a man; and with him I succeeded in precisely 12 months in coming to an agreement which, for 10 years in the first instance, entirely removed the danger of a conflict. We are all convinced that this agreement will bring lasting pacification. We realize that here are two peoples which must live together and neither of which can do away with the other. A people of 33,000,000 will always strive for an outlet to the sea. A way of understanding, then, had to be found; it has been found; and will be ever further extended."

Seven months later, on April 28, 1939, this much vaunted pact was denounced by Germany, and in less than a year German troops were invading Poland, and another of Herr Hitler's declarations had gone with the wind:

"Whatever may be the differences between the two countries (Germany and Poland) in the future an attempt to remove them by warlike actions would have disastrous effects which would bear no relation to any possible gain." [12]

5. UNITED KINGDOM

On June 18, 1935, the Anglo-German naval agreement was concluded whereby Germany agreed that the total tonnage of the German Fleet should "never exceed a percentage of 35 of the aggregate tonnage of the naval forces * * * of the British Commonwealth of Nations." [13]

At that time the German Government characterized the agreement as "permanent and definite," but on April 28, 1939, Herr Hitler summarily denounced the agreement, declaring that owing to the "policy of encirclement, the basis for the naval treaty has been removed." [14]

6. SCANDINAVIA

On April 14, 1939, President Roosevelt addressed an appeal to Herr Hitler and Signor Mussolini, in which [15] he asked them whether they were willing to give assurance that their armed forces would not "attack or invade the territory or possessions" of some 30 named states, among them Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, and the Netherlands.

Replying to Mr. Roosevelt on April 28, Herr Hitler told the Reichstag:

"All states bordering on Germany have received assurances and much more binding proposals than Mr. Roosevelt asked me for in his curious telegram." [16]

Germany signed a nonaggression treaty [17] with Denmark on May 31, 1939. It was ratified on June 2.

Article 1 stated that "the German Reich and the Kingdom of Denmark will under no circumstances resort to war or any other form of violence against each other."

In article 2 it was stated that "the pact comes into force with the exchange of instruments for ratification and is valid from then on for a period of 10 years."

The position with regard to Norway may be outlined by direct quotation from the German Official Communique of May 19, 1939:

"As a result of the declaration of the Fuehrer in his Reichstag speech of April 28, concerning Germany's readiness to conclude nonaggression pacts, negotiations with a view to the conclusion of such pacts have taken place between the German Government and the Governments of Esthonia, Latvia, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Finland. * * * Exchange of views with Sweden, Norway, and Finland reached the following conclusion: The Swedish and Norwegian Governments have declared anew to the German Government that their countries do not feel menaced by Germany and that in the maintenance of the principle of neutrality, integrity, and independence they do not intend to conclude nonaggression pacts with any country. They consider an agreement of this kind unnecessary and have agreed with the German Government to abstain from further pursuit of the plan. * * * [18]

It is clear from the above that, although Norway did not follow Denmark in concluding a nonaggression pact with Germany, Germany herself was ready to conclude such a pact, having initiated conversation for that purpose. Norway's refusal of a pact did not in any way detract from the obligations assumed by Herr Hitler in his speech of April 28; her refusal was in fact merely an indication that she assumed his assurances were genuine.

On August 29, 1939, Denmark received an assurance from Germany that she would respect her neutrality.[19] A similar assurance was received by Norway.[20]

In his speech of October 6, 1939, Herr Hitler said:

"In former times Germany never had any conflict with the northern states and she has none today either. * * * We have concluded a nonaggression pact with Denmark; our relations with that country are directed toward unswervingly loyal and friendly cooperation." [21]

Nevertheless on April 9, 1940, Germany occupied Denmark and invaded Norway.

7. LOW COUNTRIES

Speaking before the Reichstag on January 30, 1937, Herr Hitler said:

"The German Government has assured Belgium and Holland that it is ready to recognize and guarantee these states as inviolable neutral territories." [22]

On October 13 of the same year the German Foreign Minister declared to the Belgian Minister that:

"The German Government holds strongly that the inviolability and integrity of Belgium is of common interest to the western powers. It confirms its resolve not to prejudice this inviolability and integrity under any circumstances and at all times to respect Belgian territory, excepting, of course, in the event of Belgium's cooperating with a military action directed against Germany in an armed conflict involving Germany." [23]

The Dutch response to Herr Hitler's offer of guaranties was given by Foreign Minister de Graeff in the Dutch Parliament on March 17. His speech was reported by the German Minister in The Hague, as follows:

"There must be no impression that any doubts persist in Holland as to the inviolability of Dutch territory. The conclusion of a treaty meant the undertaking of obligations for both sides and Holland could undertake no obligations of any kind. The German Government fully understood and appreciated the Dutch standpoint." [24]

On August 26, 1939, the German Ambassador reassured the King of the Belgians that the Reich would in no way infringe the integrity of Belgium and would respect her frontiers so long as Belgium observed an attitude of strict neutrality. The Dutch Foreign Minister on the same day, and the Luxemburg Minister of State 2 days later, received similar assurance.[25]

These assurances were repeated in a German official broadcast on November 13.[26]

After the campaign against Poland Herr Hitler returned to the theme of his benevolence toward Germany's neighbors in his speech of October 6, 1939, saying:

"The new Reich has endeavored to continue the traditional friendship with Holland; it did not take over any differences between the two states nor did it create new ones. * * * Immediately after I had taken over the government I tried to establish friendly relations with Belgium. I renounced any revision as well as any desire for revision. The Reich has put forward no claim which might in any way have been regarded as a threat to Belgium." [27]

The tragic faith which the Low Countries placed in Herr Hitler's assurances was voiced by Belgian Foreign Minister Spaak as late as April 16, 1940, when he said:

"We shall remain faithful to our moral agreement with France, Germany, and Britain, which have guaranteed the integrity of our territory, and we shall never throw away the trump card which our loyal observance of our obligations has placed in our hands." [28]

On May 10 following, Germany invaded both Belgium, Holland, and Luxemburg.

Such is the catalog of Herr Hitler's promises, guaranties, and assurances, and such is the record, up to the present date, of how he has fulfilled them. So many pledges broken in the short space of 6 years have destroyed all confidence in his word.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall read only a few of the statements of Hitler, contained in a few brief sentences.

Relative to the subject of rearmament, the following is a quotation from a speech made in the Reichstag on May 17, 1933:

Germany will tread no other path than that laid down by the treaties. The German Government will discuss all political and economic questions only within the framework of the treaties (Reichstag).

On October 14, 1933:

Germany left the League and the Disarmament Conference just when Sir John Simon at Geneva was attempting a compromise between French and German views on armaments.

On March 10 and 16, 1933:

An air force and army were announced after Herr Hitler's cold had delayed the visit of Sir John Simon, who was to have attempted a general settlement involving German arms equality.

2. Locarno—January 30, 1934: "After the Saar has been settled the German Government is ready to accept not only the letter but the spirit of Locarno" (Reichstag).

March 13, 1934: "The German Government have never questioned the validity of Locarno" (Note to France).

That was in a note to France.

May 2, 1935: The Franco-Soviet pact was signed.

May 21, 1935: "The German Government will scrupuously observe every treaty voluntarily concluded. In particular they will hold to all obligations arising out of Locarno so long as other parties are ready to stand by that treaty" (Reichstag).

March 7, 1936: Germany denounced Locarno and reoccupied the Rhineland opposite France and Belgium. The excuse given was the Franco-Soviet pact, to which Belgium was not a party.

3. Austria—May 17, 1933: "The German people have no thought of invading any country" (Reichstag).

October 14, 1933: "When the Saar has been returned to Germany only a madman could consider the possibility of war between France and Germany. No one would demand that millions of men should be annihilated for a readjustment of our present frontier" (Reichstag).

May. 21, 1935: "Germany neither intends nor wishes to interfere in the internal affairs of Austria, to annex Austria, or to conclude an Anschluss" (Reichstag).

March 7, 1936: "Germany will never break the peace of Europe. After 3 years I can regard the struggle for German equality as concluded today (after the Rhineland occupation). We have no territorial demands to make in Europe" (Reichstag).

July 11, 1936: Austro-German agreement recognizes Austrian sovereignty.

January 30, 1937: "The period of so-called surprises is now over" (Reichstag).

February 12, 1938: Hitler reaffirms to Schuschnigg at Berchtesgaden the agreement of July 11, 1936.

March 11, 1938: Germany annexes Austria.

January 1, 1939: "In January 1938 I finally resolved that during this year I would, in one way or another, win the right of the six and one-half million Germans in Austria to self-determination" (Reichstag).

4. Czechoslovakia.—September 22, 1938: Mr. Chamberlain, in the House of Commons on September 28, referring to the meeting at Godesberg, said: "Hitler repeated to me with great earnestness what he had already said at Berchtesgaden—namely, that this was the last of his territorial ambitions in Europe and that he had no wish to include in the Reich non-Germans * * *. I have no hesitation in saying, after our personal contact, that I believe he means what he says."

September 26, 1938: "The last problem which must be solved confronts us. It is the last territorial claim which I have to make in Europe, but it is one I will not renounce * * *."

"We do not want to see other nations among us. We want to live our own life and we want other people to do the same. Our foreign policy aims are thus limited. * * * We do not want any Czechs."

A speech at Berlin, of course, by Herr Hitler.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1938.—The Munich agreement said that as soon as Czechoslovakia had satisfied Hungarian and Polish claims Germany would be prepared to guarantee the new frontiers.

October 9, 1938, Herr Hitler speaking:

Now as a strong state we can be ready to pursue a policy of understanding with surrounding states. We want nothing from them. We have no wishes, no claims.

That is from a speech made by Herr Hitler at Saarbrücken.

MARCH 14, 1939.—The German Foreign Office told the French and British Ambassadors that Germany intended no drastic move.

On March 15, 1939, the next day, Czechoslovakia was invaded and annexed.

That is a partial summary; and the other material which I have offered for the RECORD states the matter more in detail.

Apropos of that subject, now that Herr Hitler has stated that he has no designs on the Western Hemisphere, I hope the record of the violation of his past assurances will arouse every man and woman in the United States to a consciousness of the danger that lurks upon the American horizon.

Mr. President, in the past few days and weeks some of us have been speaking on this floor about this subject. Some persons have said we were trying to get the country into war. Some have said we were trying to cause American boys to be sent abroad to fight upon foreign battlefields and die on foreign soil. I know I speak the sentiment of every man who has opened his mouth on this floor in advocacy of aid for the Allies by means short of war in saying that that was the exact contrary of what we had in our thought. We honestly and sincerely believe this country today faces the greatest danger it has faced in its whole national history, not excluding even the Civil War days, excepting only the period when our independence was in jeopardy. Aside from that period, we have never had such threats to our economic security, to our territorial integrity, to our philosophic standards, as we experience today on account of the situation Herr Hitler has created in the world in the incredible period of 6 years.

That period will stand out as the most colossal, the most immeasurable, the most unimaginable epoch in world history. With a man of Hitler's dynamic ambition, of his unscrupulous morals, of his invincible will, and he having at his command a mastery of the technological process which no other human being has achieved, I tell my fellow Senators and my fellow citizens that the time for action is now, before it is not irretrievably too late. It may—God forbid—already be too late.

To that end, Mr. President, in order that we may begin now something that is effective; that is short of war; that is a continuation of the same thing we are now doing; that offers the one hope that the Allies shall not be destroyed from the face of the earth, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I should like to take the privilege of reading these few lines from it:

Resolved, etc., That the President, under the authority of title 50, section 80, United States Code, entitled "Procurement of War Materials and Mobilization of Industries, in Order To Provide for the Adequate Defense of the United States," is authorized at once to place orders for 50,000 aircraft of the most effective type and design for modern warfare and all the necessary extra parts, and to direct that such aircraft and parts be ready for delivery at a date to be fixed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the introduction of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 278) authorizing the President to place orders for 50,000 aircraft of the most effective type, and extra parts, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, what I have in mind in that joint resolution is briefly this: We do not need to have new automobiles turned out by the various automobile factories of the country. We have plenty of automobiles to answer the requirements of the people of the United States for a while anyway, but we do dynamically and vastly need aircraft—aircraft which will literally fill the skies wherever the defense of the United States may require them to be. But the idea of our using the magnificent industrial capacity of America to make things we do not need so sorely right now when we are not adequately equipped in armament, and particularly in the air, seems to me to be a travesty in the policy of our country.

So what the joint resolution would authorize would be for the President to place orders for 50,000 military aircraft, some of them perhaps with Ford, some perhaps with General Motors, some with Chrysler, some with other automobile manufacturing concerns, some with some other industrial firms. If they are not now equipped to turn out airplanes, under the joint resolution the President would have authority to direct that they equip themselves to turn out airplanes.

I announce the solemn opinion that the one chance we now have, whatever we might will to do, to save the Allies from complete disintegration, and therefore from dissolution of our first line of defense, is to put the whole—not a part—of the industrial capacity of America to turning out airplanes. I know the people want that done. We have authorized the manufacture of several thousand planes in the past few weeks or few days. That is fine; I favor every bit of it; but, Mr. President, we are not putting the whole power of the Nation into the production of airplanes. That one thing alone may yet turn the tide of battle if we will start now, and start with a will characteristic of an aroused America to see that it is done.

So I earnestly hope that at the very next meeting of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate the committee shall recommend that that power may be conferred upon the President, and we may show Hitler and Mussolini that we have willed that the facilities of our magnificent, incomparable industrial plants shall, in the way of private exchange of money and goods, be put at the disposal of the Allies; and, in addition to that, we shall hearten hard-pressed Britain and France with the knowledge that we really are coming to their rescue in a perfectly permissible and proper way, yet with a determination as strong as American will, and as brave as American hearts, and as lofty in purpose as have always been American ideals.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 28, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever blessed God, who amid the gathering shadows and darkening gloom art the only true and lasting light: We beseech Thee to lighten our darkness and to harken unto our prayer, as in the secret of Thy presence we take refuge from the raging storms of life and the baseness of our own hearts.

Though the air be tremulous with anguish and we feel our own inadequacy to meet the exactions of the days that press upon us, do Thou empower us with gifts and resources of Thine own implanting and satisfy us with Thy mercy, that these, Thy servants, may be found faithful stewards of Thy bounty. In their leadership may they reveal to the world that sense of the dignity and majesty of life, which, inspired by a compelling vision of Thy purpose, shall bring all nations once more into Thy fold. We ask it in the name of Him who is the tender Shepherd of our souls—Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Saturday, June 15, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SAM ALEXANDER—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 213)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, S. 505, an enrolled enactment entitled "An act authorizing the President of the United States to summon Sam Alexander before an Army retiring board, and for other purposes."

This bill would authorize me to summon Sam Alexander, formerly a field clerk, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, and major, Signal Corps, United States Army, before a retiring board for the purpose of hearing his case and inquiring whether at the time of his separation from the service he was incapacitated for active service and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such hearing and inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated that I be authorized to appoint him a warrant officer, Regular Army, and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for warrant officers of the Regular Army.

The official records of the War Department show that Mr. Alexander served as an enlisted man in the Regular Army from June 12, 1900, to June 7, 1901, as a field clerk, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, from August 29, 1916, to February 10, 1918, and as an emergency officer during the World War from February 11, 1918, to February 9, 1920, on which last-named date he was discharged, for his own convenience, from his commission as an emergency officer. He also served as a civilian clerk, Adjutant General's Department and Quartermaster Corps, from 1898 to 1900, and from 1901 to 1916.

At no time during his military service was Mr. Alexander entitled under the law to be placed on any retired list of the Regular Army for any reason whatsoever.

I withheld my approval of a similar bill, S. 2594, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, and see no reason for changing my view with respect to the present measure. As I stated at that time, irrespective of any determination which might now be made of the extent of any disability which existed at the time of Mr. Alexander's separation from the service, February 9, 1920, I cannot give my approval to special legislation designed to confer upon an individual retirement rights not accorded under the general laws in effect at the time the individual is separated from service. There are no facts or circumstances in Mr. Alexander's case which render it unique and which would justify a departure from the general law. The retirement system of the military services is maintained primarily as a means of vitalizing the active list, and its use as a means for conferring a private benefit or gratuity upon an individual not entitled to such under the general laws is contrary to sound policy.

WALTER BALLHAUS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 214)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 897, "An act to correct the military record of Walter Ballhaus."

The enactment provides that the said Walter Ballhaus, who was in fact an enemy alien owing allegiance to Germany during the World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 28th day of March 1918.

It appears from the records in this case that the beneficiary entered Federal service with the Wyoming National Guard July 25, 1917, and left the United States for overseas service December 12, 1917. He was returned to this country on March 2, 1918, upon the recommendations of intelligence officers in their reports on undesirable aliens, and was discharged from the military service April 1, 1918. While in confinement at Fort Jay, N. Y., following his return to the United States, he signed the following statement: "I, the undersigned, born in Germany, do not wish to serve in the Army of the United States. I am not a citizen of the United States."

I fail to see any justification for the proposal to single out and place the beneficiary named in a status different from that of the other enemy aliens summarily discharged from the Army during the World War, such discharges having been considered necessary in the interest of a successful prosecution of the war.

DAVID J. SAWYER—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 215)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2295, "An act authorizing the President to reappoint and honorably discharge David J. Sawyer, second lieutenant, National Army, as of May 11, 1919."

This bill authorizes me to reappoint David J. Sawyer as a second lieutenant of Infantry, National Army, as of May 11, 1919, the date on which his dismissal by sentence of court martial took effect, and to grant him an honorable discharge to become effective as of that date.

Guilt of the specific offenses on account of which this man was found unfit to be an officer in the Army and dismissed, is neither denied nor disproved.

In view of the showing of the record, I do not feel justified in giving my approval to the act.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas under Sugar Act of 1937, the growing of sugarcane and the marketing of sugar produced therefrom is so restricted that

I., and conventions of the Lions Clubs in Missouri and Wyoming, endorsing the national-defense program and favoring the immediate enactment of legislation to stop subversive activities in the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the one hundred and tenth general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in session at Cookeville, Tenn., requesting that the President issue a proclamation calling for a season of special prayer in the existing crisis; that the national-defense program be speeded; that "fifth column" activities in this country be looked into promptly; and that the President be empowered to take necessary action for preservation of the principles upon which the Republic was founded, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that all material assistance short of war be rendered the Allied nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the alumni of Amherst College, Amherst, Mass., signed by Eugene S. Wilson, Jr., secretary, praying for the adoption of a system of universal compulsory military training in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petitions of South End Post, No. 105, and Navy Post, No. 297, American Legion, both of Boston, Mass., praying that Congress remain in session during the existing emergency, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the board of directors of the Building Trades Employers' Association of Springfield, Mass., favoring an adequate national-defense program and the abolition of subversive activities, which was ordered to lie on the table.

RESOLUTION OF WALTHALL COUNTY (MISS.) POST, NO. 16, AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. BILBO presented a resolution of Walthall County Post, No. 16, American Legion, Tylertown, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALTHALL COUNTY AMERICAN LEGION, POST No. 56,
Tylertown, Miss., June 4, 1940.

Senator THEODORE G. BILBO,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BILBO: At a meeting of the Walthall County Post of the American Legion, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, first, That it is the consensus of opinion of the membership of this post that the public safety will be best served by a speedy approval by the Congress of the proposal that the President be given authority to call out the National Guard for training at his discretion.

"Second. That this post feels that the interest of the United States in the war now being waged in Europe justifies the use of every means short of war to assist the Allies, and urges that the Congress give quick approval to the proposal to supply the Allies with vital war supplies and all airplanes available without materially crippling our own fighting forces.

"Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senators HARRISON and BILBO and to Representative MCGEHEE by air mail, urging their speedy and wholehearted cooperation in accomplishing these ends and in enacting other proposals having for their object the full and complete military preparedness of the United States for any emergency that may develop."

Since the National Guard is a part of our first line of defense, we feel that they do need more training than they are at present receiving. We, who have had a taste of war ourselves, feel that we are in position to know the value of training, and we also know that the National Guard is not sufficiently trained to meet a suddenly developed emergency.

As one of our representatives in the Congress, we respectfully ask your concurrence in these resolutions and that you lend your assistance to their support.

Sincerely yours,

C. O. ANDERSON,
Post Commander.
D. A. RICHMOND,
Adjutant.

MATERIAL AID TO THE ALLIED NATIONS—PETITION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I present a letter addressed to me by A. J. Taylor, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., together with a petition numerously signed by citizens of Santa Fe and vicinity. I ask that the letter and the body of the petition, without the signatures attached, be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter and the petition (without the signatures attached) were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE OLD MEXICO SHOP,
Santa Fe, N. Mex., June 14, 1940.

The Honorable CARL A. HATCH,
Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: The people of Santa Fe and vicinity send you the enclosed. It is the first chapter of a great petition urging material aid for the Allies, and it contains 1,004 names. More names will follow soon.

Please consider this in the same earnest manner in which it has been sent to you. We wish that you could have seen the enthusiasm and the determination of people here. The mass meeting in Santa Fe Wednesday night was first conceived on Monday. No one came here to organize nor to maneuver us through mob psychology into applauding another "cause." We approve the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, and we have reprinted its wonderful appeal in our local papers, but this petition to you is our own will and our own doing.

We are told that the Government is already doing things which we seek. If this be true, then we ask you to consider our appeal both as a stamp of approval for what has been done and as an urge to do even more.

The radio last night told us that the Government is doing all within its power to furnish supplies to the Allies. If this be true, then we are both pleased and ashamed. Pleased that we have done something and ashamed that "all within our power" should be so pitifully inadequate. Ashamed that this great Nation neither has now nor can it quickly produce the teeth and claws under whose protection it must henceforth live.

On behalf of the signers of this petition, I am,

Respectfully yours,

A. J. TAYLOR.

SANTA FE, N. MEX., June 12, 1940.

The Honorable CARL A. HATCH,

The Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: We, the following citizens assembled in mass meeting here tonight, believing that we bespeak the wishes of the vast majority of your constituents, do hereby petition you as our representative in the Senate of the United States to devote your efforts and your talents to the act of having immediately released to the allied democratic nations airplanes, tanks, guns, and all other supplies and munitions of war in such quantities as will be effective for modern warfare. We urge you to defend America by aiding the Allies, and we request you to send American horsepower today rather than American manpower tomorrow.

EXPEDITION OF SHIPBUILDING AND DEFENSE MEASURES—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS (REPT. NO. 1863)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent to file a written report from the committee tomorrow. I also ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum relative to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be placed on the calendar, and leave is granted to file a written report tomorrow. Without objection, the memorandum presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM BY MR. WALSH ON THE BILL TO EXPEDITE SHIPBUILDING AND OTHER NATIONAL-DEFENSE MEASURES REPORTED FAVORABLY, WITH AMENDMENTS, BY THE SENATE NAVAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

1. It permits the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury (Coast Guard), with the approval of the President during any national emergency declared by the President to exist, to advance from available appropriated funds, payments to shipbuilding contractors in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price, upon adequate security for these advances given by the contractor.

2. It permits the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate contracts for the acquisition or construction of naval vessels or aircraft, or machine tools, without competitive bidding. The purpose of this is to save time of advertising for bids and to place contracts where they can be most expeditiously completed.

3. It makes the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act applicable to purchases of materials and supplies on these negotiated contracts just as though they had been contracted for on the basis of competitive bidding.

4. It amends the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act by transferring from the Secretary of Labor to the President of the United States the power to change, modify, or suspend the provisions thereof. This is to have the Walsh-Healey Act comply with all other labor laws which vest the power of suspension, as needs of national defense require, in the President.

5. It requires the turning into the Public Treasury profits on contracts and subcontracts from the construction of naval vessels in excess of 7 percent of the total contract price on shipbuilding and 7 percent on aircraft for both Army and Navy. This is a reduction from 10 percent and 12 percent, respectively, provided for in the act of 1934.

An additional method of computing excess profits has been added to the bill in view of the fact that contracts may be negotiated. It provides that any profit in excess of 7.53 percent of the cost of performing the contract is to be considered as excess profits and must be turned into the Public Treasury.

6. It changes the present law, which provides that contracts under $10,000 are not subject to the limitation-of-profits requirement, by making contracts of $25,000 and less exempt from the 7-percent limitation-of-profits requirement. The reason for this is that so much accounting is required that many concerns will not take the small contracts if they have to go through the process of accounting for the profits thereon.

7. A new accounting procedure is set up whereby the Secretary of the Navy determines, before the contract is awarded, the amount that will be allowed for the cost of new equipment furnished by the Government to be exempt from taxes and the Internal Revenue Department issues a certificate based upon the agreement reached.

8. It provides that employees working in excess of 40 hours per week shall be paid overtime at the rate of one and one-half times their regular hourly wage. This applies to all employees who are on regular annual salary as well as those on a per diem basis.

9. It provides a limitation of overtime employment, in an effort to help increase employment, by requiring that overtime shall be worked only by those employees performing work that cannot be performed by other employees.

10. It provides that retired civil-service employees may be reemployed by various departments of the Government. This provision is for the purpose of bringing back into the service retired employees who are in good physical condition and who have been trained along special lines.

11. It provides that any civilian employee in the War, Navy, or Coast Guard may be summarily dismissed if, in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, it is necessary for national security, and also provides that such employees may be reinstated, after hearing, if subsequent investigation warrants.

12. It provides that employees who are now entitled to leave, instead of taking leave may be employed and paid their regular rate of pay. This means that such employees will receive double pay if they give up their leave period.

13. It provides that certain vessels authorized in 1937 which had a limit of cost on them, having now been found impossible of completion within the cost previously authorized, may have this limit of cost removed.

Other statutory limitations with respect to the cost of other individual naval construction projects are also waived.

It also empowers the Secretary of the Navy to employ additional personnel in the Navy Department and elsewhere and to use funds appropriated with or without competitive bidding to operate and maintain plants authorized by the act, either by Government personnel or through the agency of qualified commercial manufacturers.

It provides for the inclusion of Government-owned facilities in privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants and authorizes the disposal of such plants, buildings, and facilities when deemed advisable.

14. It provides that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to modify existing contracts by increasing the agreed price thereof, in order to expedite national defense.

15. It permits the President to make uniform any discrepancies between the labor provisions of this bill affecting civilian employees in the Navy with civilian employees of the War Department.

16. It provides that no aliens shall be employed by a contractor who has been awarded secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts unless he first obtains permission from the Secretary of the Department concerned.

It also provides for a fine or imprisonment for any person or firm who willfully violated the provisions regarding employment of aliens.

17. The powers granted in this act will terminate June 30, 1942, unless the emergency proclamation issued by the President on September 8, 1939, is terminated earlier.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Webster J. Oliver, of New York, to be judge of the United States Customs Court to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Otto F. Heine, of Hawaii, to be United States marshal for the district of Hawaii.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John C. Lehr, of Michigan, to be attorney for the eastern district of Michigan.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

REVENUE BILL OF 1940

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess on Saturday it had, by unanimous consent, made the tax bill the pending business of the Senate. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a few minutes of the time of the Senate.

This bill, as amended by the Finance Committee, will yield annually $1,007,000,000. This is $3,000,000 more than the House bill.

The scheme of the bill is a very simple one. The President has requested, for the fiscal year 1941, defense funds totaling $3,250,000,000. This money is to be provided through the issuance of $4,000,000,000 in defense obligations, which are to be issued for a period of not more than 5 years. To retire these obligations, the bill imposes tax increases.

Of the additional revenue of $1,007,000,000 to be raised under the bill, $685,000,000 will be placed in a special fund which is to be available only for the retirement of the defense obligations. This revenue is from the temporary defense taxes which are imposed for a 5-year period only. The remaining revenue from the bill—namely, $322,000,000—is derived by broadening the base through the lowering of exemptions, the increase in surtaxes in the middle brackets, and the increase in the corporation income-tax rate. It was difficult to segregate the revenue from these increases from the ordinary revenue derived from such sources, and it was, therefore, deemed advisable to require the additional revenue to remain in the general fund, where it will be available to make up any deficiency in the special fund necessary to retire these obligations. By this method we shall be able to liquidate this indebtedness within a short time.

It will be noted that the debt limit has been extended $4,000,000,000 over the $45,000,000,000 limit. This extension is limited to the issue of these defense obligations, and the additional authorization will terminate as soon as all of these obligations have been retired.

I shall discuss first the permanent changes made in the internal-revenue laws, and then the temporary changes.

The permanent changes deal with the income tax. The bill reduces the $2,500 personal exemption allowed to married persons and heads of families to $2,000, and in the case of single persons from $1,000 to $800. This amounts to a 20-percent decrease in the personal exemption, both for married persons and for single persons. The $400 credit for dependents allowed under existing law is continued under the bill. The lowering of the base will add to the rolls some 2,290,000 new taxpayers. The additional revenue to be derived from this change will be in excess of $75,000,000 annually, of which $14,000,000 will be derived from new taxpayers, and the balance will be secured from taxpayers who are now taxable under the law.

The most important change in our permanent law is the increase in the surtax rates in the middle brackets. These increases begin with a 1-percent increase on surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000, and reach the greatest rate increase of 13 percent in the brackets from $44,000 to $58,000. While the surtax rates on net incomes above $100,000 are not increased, the surtaxes of the taxpayers in these higher brackets are increased, due to the lowering of the exemptions and the increase of surtax rates in the middle brackets. Thus, under the bill, a married man with a net income of $500,000 will have a permanent increase of $7,120 in his surtax. This change is estimated to yield an additional $177,000,000 annually, which, if combined with the lowering of the exemptions, will yield a total annual revenue of $252,000,000.

Another important change is to require a single individual to file a return if his gross income is $800 or more, and to require a married person to file a return if either the aggregate or separate incomes of husband and wife amount to $2,000 or more. Under the existing law, a return is not required if their gross income is less than $5,000 unless the net income in the case of a married person is $2,500 or more, or, in the case of a single person, $1,000 or more. This will result in adding 8,000,000 additional returns. At the present time there are 7,500,000 returns filed. With these 8,000,000 returns added, there will be a total of 15,000,000 returns filed annually in the future. Undoubtedly, some additional revenue will be derived from this source, but since it was impossible to estimate it with any degree of accuracy, the yield under the bill does not include any additional revenue from this source. The Finance Committee made only one slight change in this provision of the House bill.

Under the House bill, a trust was required to file a return if its gross income was $100 or more. This was believed to put an unnecessary burden upon the fiduciary, especially since an individual is not required to file a return unless his gross income is $800 or more. Accordingly the Finance Committee adopted an amendment requiring a return from a trust only where its gross income for the taxable year was $800 or over, or its net income $100 or over.

The last permanent change relates to corporations. Under the bill the rate of tax on corporations is increased by 1 percent.

For those corporations whose net income is not in excess of $5,000, the 12½-percent rate under existing law is changed to 13½ percent. For those with net incomes between $5,000 and $20,000, the rate is changed from 14 percent to 15 percent, and for those with incomes between $20,000 and $25,000 the rate is changed from 16 percent to 17 percent. For corporations with net incomes in excess of $25,000 the rate is changed from 18 percent to 19 percent. This corporation increase will result in additional annual revenue of $70,000,000.

The total additional revenue from these permanent increases will be $322,000,000.

The temporary 5-year increases for the defense taxes, which are placed in the special fund, amount to $685,000,000.

These increases are briefly as follows:

Income taxes payable under the permanent increases under the bill are increased by 10 percent. Thus, if for the calendar year 1940, my tax is $100, I will pay a defense tax of $10, or a total tax of $110. The additional revenue from this defense tax on incomes will be $135,000,000 from corporations and $123,000,000 for individuals, or a total of $258,000,000.

This 10-percent increase is also applied to estate and gift taxes. Under this provision the defense tax will yield twenty-nine million from estate taxes and three million from gift taxes or a total of thirty-two million.

The defense tax is also applied to capital stock and excess-profits taxes. The capital-stock tax rate of $1 per $1,000 of adjusted declared value is increased to $1.10 per $1,000 of adjusted declared value. The excess-profits tax payable under existing law is increased by 10 percent. The additional revenue from the capital-stock tax and the excess-profits tax will yield twelve million additional.

Most of the other Federal excise taxes are increased 10 percent, effective July 1, 1940. However, taxes on liquor, beer, and gasoline have been singled out for special treatment. The tax on distilled spirits has been increased from $2.25 a gallon to $3 a gallon, or an increase of 33⅓ percent. The tax on brandy has been increased from $2 a gallon to $2.75 a gallon, or an increase of 37½ percent.

I may say in that connection that recently the House passed unanimously a bill relative to readjusting the taxes on wines and brandy. It has been reported out unanimously by the Committee on Finance, and we have included in the pending bill the increased rates, the additional taxes from which will yield about $500,000 annually. In a few moments I shall ask that the pending business be temporarily laid aside so that we can consider the bill to which I just referred. I am sure that very little discussion will be required.

The House did not impose any increased tax on rectified spirits. The Finance Committee increased this rate from 30 cents a gallon to 40 cents a gallon. In imposing floor-stock taxes on liquor equal to the difference in the rate under existing law and the increased rate, the House allowed an exemption of 100 wine-gallons to retail dealers. The Committee on Finance removed this exemption so as not to give the retail trade an opportunity to stock up with tax-paid liquor prior to the time the increased rates became effective.

The bill also increased the tax on beer from $5 a barrel to $6 a barrel. This is a 20-percent increase. The total additional income to be derived from these sources is as follows:

Distilled spirits	$76,000,000
Beer	46,000,000
Wines and other liquors	7,000,000
Total	129,000,000

No objection was raised in the Committee on Finance to the imposition of these specially increased taxes. The committee cooperated to the fullest extent with respect to these increases.

The House bill contained increases on tobacco, except chewing tobacco, of 16⅔ percent. The Finance Committee eliminated these increases, as it was believed that tobacco is already heavily taxed, the war rates of 1918 in most instances being still in effect. The loss in revenue due to not increasing these rates is $79,000,000, which is more than offset from additional revenues secured from other sources.

The Finance Committee also continued the exemption under existing law for books containing cigarette papers of 25 or less. It was believed that the elimination of this exemption would considerably curtail the consumption of smoking tobacco.

The tax on gasoline is increased from 1 cent a gallon to 1½ cents a gallon, or an increase of 50 percent. This will yield $112,000,000 in additional revenue.

The Finance Committee changed the tax on admissions from that under the House bill. Under the existing law, admissions of 40 cents or less are exempt. Those above 40 cents are taxed at the rate of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof. Under the House bill, admissions of 30 cents or less were exempt. The House bill was estimated to raise $25,000,000 over the return from existing law. The Finance Committee changed the tax on admissions as follows:

Admissions up to and including 9 cents, no tax.
Admissions of more than 9 cents and less than 20 cents, 1 cent.
Admissions of 20 cents or more, 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof.

It is estimated that this change will yield an increase in revenue which will more than offset any loss from the tobacco taxes.

The estimated additional revenue from this source, over the House provision relating to admission taxes, is 78.2 million dollars. As the House provision was estimated to raise $25,000,000 from admissions, the total additional revenue over that under existing law to be derived from this change in the admissions tax is $103,000,000.

The temporary excise taxes which would expire in 1941 have been extended so that they will not expire until 1945.

The rates of certain excise taxes are not increased at all by the bill. Among these are the regulatory taxes—for example, those on oleomargarine, bituminous coal, narcotics, white phosphorous matches, and certain types of firearms. These taxes are imposed, not for the purpose of raising revenue, but to regulate certain activities.

Likewise, those internal-revenue taxes have been excluded which are, in effect, import duties imposed for protection rather than for revenue—for example, the import excises on fish, animal, and vegetable oils, petroleum products, coal, lumber, and copper, and the processing tax on coconut oil.

Similarly, the bill does not affect the sugar tax, since the rates of this tax are adjusted to an integrated program of agricultural benefits and quotas.

The bill also makes no change in the taxes levied under the social-security program, since these taxes are imposed for a special purpose.

The Finance Committee also changed the title of "super taxes" in the House bill to "defense taxes," as it was believed this designation was more appropriate.

The Finance Committee also adopted an amendment offered by Senator Byrd directing the President to reduce appropriations for the executive branch of the Government for the fiscal year 1941, except appropriations for national defense, fixed charges, and trust funds.

The Finance Committee also adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] terminating the power and authority of the President and Secretary of the Treasury to acquire foreign silver, and repealing the internal-revenue tax on transfers of any interest in silver bullion.

So far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, I regret very much that the amendment was adopted, because a bill, identical with the amendment, had already passed the Senate, and many of us did not think the amendment had any place in this particular bill; but a majority of the committee voted in favor of it.

Mr. President, I have made a brief statement explaining the provisions of the bill, and as the debate proceeds I shall be glad to answer any questions which may be propounded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator might state that at least four or five or six of the members of the committee voted against the so-called Townsend amendment, and a minority report will be filed in due season, I hope during the day, indicating opposition to that particular amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is one figure I wish to get clear in my mind. Under the provisions of the bill as it was presented to the committee originally, as it came from the House, $729,000,000 of revenue would be raised in the next fiscal year. What would the figure be on the basis of the way the Senate committee has written the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Seven hundred and twenty-seven million dollars for the fiscal year 1941. For a full year of operation, the Senate bill will produce one billion seven million, which is three million more than the House bill would produce.

Mr. CONNALLY rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to speak in my own time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate now consider and pass House bill 9117, relative to taxes on wines and brandy, the increased rates of which are carried in the pending bill. There is no controversy about it at all. I hope it can be acted upon immediately. I should like to see the bill now pending, temporarily laid aside, and the Senate proceed to consider the so-called Buck bill, which was unanimously reported from the Finance Committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that form of action. I wanted to ask the able Senator from Mississippi, before he concluded his remarks, why he eliminated the tax on tobacco and cigarettes. I am willing to let the answer to that question wait until the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has had an opportunity to make whatever remarks he desires in reference to the bill in which he is interested.

TAX ON BRANDY AND WINE SPIRITS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9117) to eliminate the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; to increase the tax on wine; to compensate for the loss of revenue occasioned by the elimination of the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may have no objection, but I should like to have a brief description of the bill and its purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to give it, and will take only a moment to do so. Let me say that there is a reason for considering the brandy and wine spirits bill now, because the new basic rates on brandy and wine spirits are carried in the main tax bill which has just been presented to the Senate. Therefore this bill should be passed first, in order that certain provisions in the pending tax measure may be properly applied to the new basic rates.

The bill merely provides in the last analysis for the elimination of the 10-cents-per-wine-gallon tax on brandy and wine spirits used for the purpose of fortifying sweet wines. There is a tax now of 10 cents per wine gallon upon brandy and wine spirits when used for the purpose of fortification of wine. That, broadly speaking, is a tax of 3½ cents upon a gallon of wine, because 1 wine gallon of brandy or wine spirits will fortify 3 gallons of wine. That 3½ cents tax is raised by the bill to 5 cents. The 10-cent tax on brandy and wine spirits is not lost, but the tax is simply transferred to the wine in its fortified form.

Under the existing law the tax of 10 cents on wine spirits and brandy, when used for the purpose of fortifying the sweet wine is due and collectible within 18 months after it is so used. That has resulted in some loss to the wine growers and also in the postponement of the payment of the tax to the Government, and likewise in some litigation, because some of the wine producers have gone out of business, and suits have had to be instituted upon the bond of the wine producers.

The bill simply transfers the tax from brandy and wine spirits when used for the purpose of fortifying the wine, to the wine itself, and makes it possible for the Government to collect the same amount of tax—in fact a slight increase in tax—when the wine is withdrawn from the bonded winery or storehouse for the purpose of sale.

The bill is recommended by the Treasury. It is also said to be desired by the wine producers themselves, because many inconvenient circumstances have arisen under the existing law. Principally the producers of wine have been induced to delay the payment of this tax on brandy or wine spirits until the end of 18 months, and they have dumped large quantities of wine—sometimes improperly aged—on the market to the disruption of the wine market.

The bill simply amends the three sections of the existing internal revenue code, and adds a new section for the purpose of making effective the present tax on brandy and wine spirits, and on the wine itself, the tax on wine being increased from 3½ cents to 5 cents per gallon on all wines containing 14 and not more than 21 percent of absolute alcohol, and 5 cents additional on all wine containing 21 percent and not more than 24 percent.

The 5 cents basic tax on all wines containing less than 14 percent of absolute alcohol is not changed. Of course, the tax on wine containing 24 percent of absolute alcohol is not changed, because that wine is taxed now as distilled liquor or as whisky. That is a different tax altogether.

There are no amendments to the bill. It is recommended unanimously by the Finance Committee as it came from the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether there is any decrease in the tax?

Mr. GEORGE. There is no decrease. There is a slight increase. The increase is estimated by the Treasury to amount to four-hundred-and-eighty-odd-thousand dollars—near one-half million dollars—a year.

Mr. McNARY. Was this bill reported unanimously by the Finance Committee of the Senate?

Mr. GEORGE. It was reported unanimously some days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9117) to eliminate the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; to increase the tax on wine; to compensate for the loss of revenue occasioned by the elimination of the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

MAINTENANCE OF MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay the consideration of the pending tax bill; in fact, I am very much in favor of the early passage of the measure. I think for that matter we ought to pass a bill carrying much heavier rates of taxes and covering many more subjects than the pending bill covers.

I wish to advert for a few minutes to the situation which made the tax bill necessary, and to suggest that the Senate should take up at this moment—I think it will require only an hour of time—the consideration of a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations last week. All of us have been advised, through the radio and by other means of information, as to what is transpiring in France at this very moment. The French Republic, on account of the great military pressure upon it, will probably carry on the struggle in Europe no longer. We have announced to the world—first in 1823 through Mr. Monroe—the fundamentals of the Monroe Doctrine. That doctrine now is of more importance to us than it has ever been in the past. It may not be directly threatened at the moment, but the possibilities of its being threatened must be apparent to every Senator, and to every Member of the other House, and to everyone in the executive departments. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations last week favorably reported a resolution, which I ask to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 271) as follows:

Whereas many unexpected developments are daily arising from the present grave international situation; and

Whereas such developments are affecting states which have possessions in the Western Hemisphere; and

Whereas an endeavor to transfer such possessions or any of them from their present owners to any other non-American state would endanger the peace and security not only of this country but of the other American republics; and

Whereas the American republics agreed at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, held in Buenos Aires in 1936, and at the Eighth International Conference of American States, held in Lima in 1938, to consult with one another in the event that the peace, security, or territorial integrity of any American republic should be threatened; and

Whereas the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the American Republics, at Panama, October 3, 1939, resolved: "That in case any geographic region of America subject to the jurisdiction of any non-American state should be obliged to change its sovereignty and there should result therefrom a danger to the security of the American Continent, a consultative meeting such as the one now being held will be convoked with the urgency that the case may require": Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., (1) That the United States would not recognize any transfer, and would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer, any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power; and

(2) That if such transfer or attempt to transfer should appear likely, the United States shall, in addition to other measures, immediately consult with the other American republics to determine upon the steps which should be taken to safeguard their common interests.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator expect to ask for consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CONNALLY. Prior to obtaining the floor I had a conference with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and I understand it is his desire, as chairman of the committee, to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the opinion of the chairman of the committee that there would not be any prolonged discussion and that it would be passed speedily? I am in favor of the joint resolution, and, as I recall, every other member of the Foreign Relations Committee favors it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there was a meeting of the full committee at the time the joint resolution was considered, and it was unanimously reported. I do not think there is any necessity for prolonged debate on the matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The matter has just been called to my attention. I think no Senator outside the membership of the Foreign Relations Committee is familiar with the joint resolution. I do not like this practice, and I have objected many times to taking up piecemeal resolutions and bills from the calendar. Let it go to the calendar. I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time until I have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. There has been no request for the consideration of the joint resolution. Let me suggest to the Senator from Oregon that, as no doubt he will realize when he thinks about it, some measures on the calendar are of greater national importance than others. I think a reading of the joint resolution will indicate very plainly its importance. Those who have given their approval to the announcement of the State Department consider any attempt to transfer possessions in the Western Hemisphere a violation of the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I have no desire to press the joint resolution upon Senators who are unwilling to proceed with its consideration at this time; but it seems to me that it is a matter of such vital and fundamental importance that the element of time cannot properly be disregarded. I hope Senators who have not already familiarized themselves with the joint resolution will do so at an early hour. Important transactions are taking place in Europe right now—not next week, not next month, but right now. Any hesitation or delay on the part of this Government in asserting what is in the joint resolution will simply involve us in difficulties in time to come. If the United States means what we have been saying, if the administration's attitude is to be confirmed and strengthened, and if the pronouncements of Senators on this floor and the actions of our diplomatic representatives mean anything, they mean, and have meant for more than a hundred years, that the United States will not tolerate the establishment of any European system in the Western Hemisphere. At this very moment France owns French Guiana, Martinique, and other islands in the Caribbean. She owns two islands off the coast of Canada, and other possessions. The Government of the United States, viewing its own safety and the safety of the American people, cannot tolerate the transfer of title to any of these possessions, either by negotiation or by the sword.

What are we preparing for? We are preparing to protect our own security and our own defense, and the pending tax bill is supposed to give us a portion of the sinews. Our protection and defense include the safety of the Western Hemisphere, including Bermuda, Canada, Greenland, and other possessions of the allied governments in the Western Hemisphere. Do we mean what we say, or have we been merely orating for home consumption?

Mr. President, I hope Senators will read the joint resolution. There is nothing in it which deviates from our traditional policy. Of course, we need not say it unless we mean to back it up with all the strength of our arms and with all the wealth of our resources. Speaking for myself and my people, we are willing to pledge all we have to make good what is proposed in the joint resolution. We might as well let the powers of the world know it. If the Department of State has not already communicated the attitude of this Government to Germany, England, and France, I hope it may, within this very day, communicate to the chancelries of those Governments the declaration that irrespective of the joint resolution, the executive department of this Government will not for a moment tolerate the transfer of any possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

Speaking for myself, if necessary I would send battleships into the territory of these particular possessions right now, not to make war upon them, but to see that war is not made upon them in this hemisphere.

Mr. President, if we are to maintain the Monroe Doctrine we must go on building what I have long prayed for and spoken for—the greatest navy that floats upon any ocean. We must go on increasing our standing army, mechanizing it, and providing it with all the modern instrumentalities of warfare, and fill the clouds with our airplanes, not for aggression, but for defense, not for conquest, but to preserve the integrity of our own country first, and the integrity of the Western Hemisphere.

So, Mr. President, I believe that in view of what is happening in Europe we cannot hesitate, we cannot delay. Any delay or hesitation on our part will be taken as an indication of weakness and fear. If we are afraid to maintain the Monroe Doctrine, then we might as well relax some of our efforts for preparedness and defense.

The joint resolution has been reported unanimously, I believe, by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. It has the approval of the Department of State. I do not want to press matters upon any Senator if he has not had time to deliberate; but every Senator who is familiar with the history of his country has had the opportunity, ever since he could read and write, to deliberate upon whether or not he believes in the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish simply to call attention to the fact that the joint resolution has been on the calendar since the 5th of June. It is a very simple resolution, and it ought not to take long for any Senator to understand what it is and make up his mind whether or not he is for it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make no reflection upon any Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accord to every Senator what I always demand for myself; but it seems to me the Senator is correct. It is a simple matter, and all Senators ought to be familiar with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not something which has been rushed in from the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been on the calendar for nearly 2 weeks.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The implication from that statement is that it was objected to at the last call of the Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it was not.

Mr. McNARY. I take this opportunity to express my view that we should have more frequent calls of the calendar. I think the calendar should be called at least once a week.

It is my understanding that one of the members of the Foreign Relations Committee objected to the joint resolution. I am now trying to inquire as to his present state of mind. It is not my purpose to delay any legislation, but I do not like the practice which is sought to be followed. Secondly, I do not want anything brought up with respect to which there has been no opportunity for deliberation. I am trying to get in touch with the Senator to whom I refer, and later in the day I shall advise the Senator from Texas what I shall do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that my remarks are not directed toward him or his objection. He is certainly within his rights in objecting. The idea I sought to convey was that I hope that Senators who have not taken occasion to examine the joint resolution since it has been on the calendar will take occasion to do so at once so that they may be familiar with it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not heard of any American who believes in our form of government and in its protection expressing any doubt as to the wisdom and necessity of maintaining the Monroe Doctrine. I was wondering whether or not there had been any objection to any declaration that our Government believes in maintaining the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have heard of none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as I am concerned, I am very much in favor of the joint resolution; but I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that a few years ago one of our distinguished former colleagues took the trouble to write a book about the Monroe Doctrine, which he called an obsolete shibboleth. I refer to former Senator Bingham, of Connecticut.

Mr. KING. Let me say that I do not agree with the position taken by the former Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know the Senator does not agree with it; but the Senator said that so far as he knew there was no American who did not agree with the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a sufficient answer to that is that he is a former Senator. He is not here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that later the former Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Bingham, to whom the Senator from Missouri referred, practically repudiated his own book.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was the best thing he ever did.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have high respect for the Senator from Oregon and do not want to press any matter upon him, but if a Senator who is opposed to this resolution is not present, I hope the Senator from Oregon will put into operation his very effective and rather persuasive methods of getting his army here and having some consultation with them as to this matter, because I think it is very important that we should act, and act promptly. I think that any delay in connection with this resolution when events are so rapidly transpiring in Europe, will be construed to imply lack of courage and hesitation and weakness upon the part of the United States. Frankly, I think the welfare of North America and the United States is more important than that of one Senator—an absent Senator, at that. If he can do more than everybody else in the Senate and the Government, he is an exceedingly powerful man.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What I am about to say is hearsay. I am advised that one Senator, a member of the committee, does not like subdivision (2) of the resolution. I am trying now to get in touch with him and ascertain if he will insist on his objection. If he does not, after a roll call and a further statement of the subject, I am willing that the matter proceed. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, and I think his statement is exactly right. If I were, which I never expect to be, a leader on either side, I would have some consideration for the wishes of my privates and subordinates, because I might not be leader long if I did not do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I believe I am completely in accord with the joint resolution, and I know that I am entirely in accord with its purposes. I should like, however, to ask the Senator a question which relates to a matter which I presume was discussed in the Foreign Relations Committee. I refer to the language in paragraph (1):

> That the United States would not recognize any transfer, and would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer, any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power.

I am wondering if there is a possibility that we might encounter serious difficulties a little later if a non-American power, friendly to us, desired to transfer some of its Western Hemisphere possessions to another non-American power friendly to us. I am wondering if that language would complicate such a situation should one arise. Did the committee consider that question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think the committee considered that particular situation, but we were very much concerned about the present situation.

Mr. MALONEY. If Denmark, for example, or France, for example, should now desire to transfer to Great Britain some of their possessions, would this language raise a difficulty which would hamper such a desire?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am rather inclined to think that it possibly would, and I think there is good reason why it should. The Monroe Doctrine was intended to prevent the increase or building up of the European system in this hemisphere. If one European power should acquire all the possessions in the Western Hemisphere of all the other countries of Europe, it would strengthen and make more powerful in the Western Hemisphere that particular nation. If any of them have any real estate for sale, I do not see why we should not acquire it and take it over, rather than increase the power and influence of another European nation in this hemisphere.

I may say that the situation which the Senator from Connecticut envisions—and I congratulate him on his far view—could be dealt with at the time it may arise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, is there anything in this joint resolution that is not in principle covered by the original declaration of President Monroe? We simply make it a little more explicit or reaffirm it and give it a more or less particular application; but everything in the resolution, as I understand the resolution, is covered by the general pronouncement of what is known as the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I thank him for that friendly interruption, as I am always happy to have friendly interruptions.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I think what the Senator from Missouri says is entirely true, but what I am afraid of is that Congress might soon adjourn—I hope Congress will not soon adjourn; I hope that Congress will remain here—but if Congress should adjourn after passing this joint resolution, it seems to me it might afford to some who are, let me say, not entirely in sympathy with the policies of the administration, to raise a question that might be very aggravating.

While I am in accord with the resolution and what it is designed to accomplish, I think unless the particular matter to which I have referred has been discussed in the Foreign Relations Committee it is probably deserving of a little further consideration here. I am not going to delay the resolution at all; I can be satisfied with it as it is; but I felt in duty bound to bring the thought which occurred to me and which I have expressed to the attention of the Senator in charge of the joint resolution and the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can only repeat what I just said, that it seems to me the increase by any European power of its holdings in this hemisphere is violative, at least, of the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine as we have always known it, because that was the very essence of the Monroe Doctrine.

Spain had lost her colonies in Central and South America. Napoleon had been defeated on the Continent; there was a resurgence of monarchy and the Holy Alliance, and the leagued monarchs of Europe were encouraging Spain in an undertaking to reconquer in the Western Hemisphere her former possessions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield in a moment.

In the undertaking of repudiating that ambition and establishing the Monroe Doctrine, fortunately, the United States had the tacit consent and rather the encouragement of Mr. Canning, who was then the Foreign Minister of Great Britain; with that influence we were able to establish that doctrine, and it went unchallenged for a long period of years.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true, may I ask the able Senator from Texas, that the Monroe Doctrine and the joint resolution, if enacted, are only as good as our power to back them up; and without a proper Army and Navy they are just so much waste paper?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I had already made some suggestion of that kind before the Senator came into the Chamber. I had stated that unless we were willing to back up this pronouncement with all the armed forces that might be required and with all the resources of our wealth, we had better not make it.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator says that; it is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. With reference to the point raised by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that, in addition to the portion of the Monroe Doctrine dealing with the former colonies of Spain and Portugal, to wit, the South and Central American republics, there was another portion of the Monroe Doctrine directed particularly to Russia. President Monroe said, in a communication from the Secretary of State, John Quincy Adams, to Baron Tuyll, the Russian Minister to the United States, that with the possessions of European powers in this hemisphere we would not interfere and had no disposition whatever to interfere, but that the United States would regard any attempt on the part of any European power further to increase their possessions in this hemisphere as an unfriendly act.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Missouri. If there had been no Monroe Doctrine and there had been no armed power of the United States to enforce it, Maximilian's empire in Mexico might have survived. As soon as the Union was relieved of some slight pressure on its resources by reason of the War between the States, the Federal Government told Emperor Napoleon 3d that he must get his army out of Mexico, because its presence was a violation of the Monroe Doctrine, and Napoleon 3d got his army out of Mexico. Then the Mexicans took care of Maximilian.

I do not wish to delay the Senate by repetition of incidents affecting the Monroe Doctrine with which all Senators are familiar. We recall the boundary dispute with Venezuela, I believe it was, in which Great Britain made some show of armed strength, and Mr. Cleveland and his Secretary of State, Mr. Olney——

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that was in 1895.

Mr. CONNALLY. President Cleveland and Secretary Olney sent Great Britain a note which caused Great Britain to relinquish any military measures against Venezuela arising because of the boundary dispute. So we might go on and mention a number of other, similar instances; but this is a doctrine from which we cannot recede without the surrender of the national honor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator will remember that in 1912 the then Senator from Massachusetts, Henry Cabot Lodge—the grandfather of the present able Senator from that State—introduced a resolution, which was passed by a vote of about 70 to 4, which recited that the United States would not look with unconcern upon the attempt Japan was then making to colonize Lower California.

Mr. CONNALLY. Magdalena Bay.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. There were some apprehensions that Japan might acquire a naval base in Magdalena Bay. This Government did not hesitate a moment to assert its position.

By the kindness of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], I now have before me a copy of the resolution adopted by the Senate in 1912:

Resolved, That when any harbor or other place in the American continents is so situated that the occupation thereof for naval or military purposes might threaten the communications or the safety of the United States, the Government of the United States could not see without grave concern the possession of such harbor or other place by any corporation or association which has such a relation to another government, not American, as to give that government practical power of control for naval or military purposes.

Mr. President, some question is raised about section 2. Section 2 provides:

That if such transfer or attempt to transfer should appear likely, the United States shall, in addition to other measures—

"Other measures" is a very broad term. It does not mean that we have to wait. It means that we may adopt, in our own sovereign power, such other measures as we may deem necessary for our own security, or for the maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine; but we shall, in addition to other measures—immediately consult with the other American republics to determine upon the steps which should be taken to safeguard their common interests.

Mr. President, some provision of that kind is absolutely necessary. While I am not deluding myself, and understand that the burden of the defense of the Western Hemisphere will fall upon the shoulders of the people of the United States; while I realize that the sacrifices will be largely ours, and that the military strength will be that of the boys and, I hope, the middle-aged men of the United States; while the naval power in large measure will be our own, we cannot wholly disregard the people of Central and South America. Their own national pride, their pride of race, require that we consult with them as to measures looking to the common defense of the United States and of those republics.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think the Senator is absolutely correct in the position he has taken about consulting with the Latin American countries about our defenses. I now call attention to resolutions on the subject of island air and naval bases which I introduced some time ago. These resolutions received a hostile reception on the Senate floor. I submitted a resolution for the purpose of acquiring the Netherlands possessions mentioned in the report on this resolution. I did the same as to all Danish possessions. If we had acted then, we should have obviated the necessity for this discussion today so far as the Netherlands and Denmark are concerned.

RESOLUTIONS TO ACQUIRE BRITISH AND FRENCH POSSESSIONS

Tonight the Washington Daily News contains a United Press dispatch which I insert at this point in my remarks with the permission of the Senate.

UNITED STATES CLOSELY WATCHES NEARBY FRENCH ISLES

The United States is keeping close watch on peace developments in Europe which might affect French possessions in this hemisphere, Secretary of State Hull said today.

At the same time, Senator TOM CONNALLY (Democrat, Texas), a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, demanded immediate dispatch of United States warships to all French and British islands in the new world.

Mr. Hull declined to elaborate on steps which might be taken to enforce the Monroe Doctrine in the event Germany or Italy sought to take title to any of the French islands. The doctrine pledges this Government to resist any change in the sovereignty of foreign possessions in this hemisphere.

The article states that Senator TOM CONNALLY, Democrat, Texas, now demands immediate dispatch of United States warships to all French and British islands in the New World. Why not demand all British and French possessions in the New World? This would include British Honduras and British and French Guiana. Some time ago when we had plenty of time I dared to suggest negotiations for all of these possessions, and in the event negotiations failed I referred to Andrew Jackson and the French war debt of more than a hundred years ago. That red-blooded American stated in no uncertain terms that if the French failed to pay he would seize their territories in the New World. For that I was castigated and ridiculed in the press and on the floor of the Senate. Now, when the hour of 12 approaches—quarter of 12, if you please—a dark and forboding hour of danger and death both for individual and nation, I find my colleagues in panic asserting the very action I then demanded. Well, I am glad to see Senators returning to the great road of good American common sense. Senators are now beginning to realize that our first great line of defense is not Europe but right here in the Western Hemisphere, right here at our front door, the island possessions off our coasts belonging to Danish and Dutch, the British and French. God speed the day when no flags shall fly in American skies but American flags, a great family of American nations. So I am glad that Senators are beginning to see the light for—

While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

Not only these islands but Iceland and Greenland—and I quote here, with the Senate's permission, three articles on Germany and Iceland as an air and naval base:

[From the Washington Daily News of June 17, 1940]

NAZIS IN ICELAND NEXT?

STOCKHOLM, June 17.—Germany was reported today to be contemplating air and sea operations against British-occupied Iceland to obtain a new base for an offensive against the British Isles.

[From the Washington Times-Herald of June 17, 1940]

NAZIS TO SEIZE ICELAND, REPORT—SOUGHT AS BASE TO ATTACK BRITAIN

(By Ralph Forte)

STOCKHOLM, June 16.—Unconfirmed reports circulated in Stockholm tonight that Germany is contemplating immediate sea and air operations against Iceland, 500 miles off the northern tip of Scotland, in preparation for an invasion of the British Isles.

The Germany attack on Iceland, which was occupied by British naval forces immediately after Adolf Hitler's invasion of Norway, would be launched from Germany's new Norwegian bases.

Hitler and his general staff were represented in Stockholm as believing that the occupation of Iceland, now held by comparatively small British forces, is essential if and when the long-threatened Nazi attack against Great Britain is unleashed.

A considerable number of fresh German troops now are being transported to Norway.

[From the Washington Post of June 17, 1940]

NAZIS MAY USE ICELAND AS BASE AGAINST BRITISH

STOCKHOLM, June 16.—Unconfirmed reports circulated in Stockholm tonight that Germany is contemplating immediate sea and air operations against Iceland, 500 miles off the northern tip of Scotland, in preparation for an invasion of the British Isles.

The German attack on Iceland, which was occupied by British naval forces immediately after Adolf Hitler's invasion of Norway, would be launched from Germany's new Norwegian bases, it was said in these unconfirmed reports.

A considerable number of fresh German troops now are being transported to Norway, landing at Oslo, Kristiansund, Stavanger, Haugesund, Bergen, and Trondheim, it was reported.

Meanwhile dispatches from Finland said that German troops were occupying the Finmark region of Norway and establishing military headquarters in Kirkenes, as a result of the Soviet military occupation of Lithuania.

Time and again I have urged action, and long before this war on these far northern possessions of Denmark, but certain men seem afflicted with hindsight, never foresight; they see the wagon after it has passed, never before; and please remember that where there is no vision the people perish.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to his resolution about the acquisition of these territories by negotiation or peaceful means. My only objection in the special session was to his proposal that we should seize them by our military and naval forces during the time their owners were engaged in hostilities, when they could not protest. I did disagree to that. But so far as I am personally concerned, I should be willing right now, if it should seem at all necessary, to have the United States occupy, not for the purpose of conquest but in our own defense, any of those territories which might be threatened with conquest.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator tell me whether or not there is any disagreement on the part of any of the countries in South America as to the purport and scope of the Monroe Doctrine?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that officially there is not. Of course now and then there are outbursts by individuals in Central and South America who beat their breasts and say that they do not need any Monroe Doctrine; that they can defend themselves; and that they can look after their own affairs; but officially the republics of Central and Sputh America participated in the conferences mentioned in the preamble, and in the conventions which were adopted at that time we promised and covenanted that we would have these consultations; so it is necessary for the Government in good faith to carry forward a provision of this kind. I call on the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to state whether or not I am correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, Mr. President. I will add only one thing to the Senator's statement.

The reason why it was necessary to retain the preamble which refers to those two conventions is that the conventions themselves, while providing for consultation, expressly provide that joint action shall not be binding on any government; that each government, acting in its own sovereignty, may decide whether or not it wishes to adopt a certain course of action. Nevertheless, the governments do agree to consult whenever a matter is called to their attention, and it must be realized that in the defense of this hemisphere, if it is to be successfully accomplished, it will be essential for the United States to have naval, air, and other military bases in various parts of Central and South America. Those bases, of course, can be obtained only by the consent of the sovereigns involved.

We know that a very fine feeling exists with regard to cooperation for the defense of this hemisphere, and I think the enactment of this joint resolution now would announce that it expresses the sentiment of the Senate of the United States. It is already the sentiment of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Not only is it our sentiment that we shall hold that these transfers are contrary to the Monroe Doctrine, but we again notify the South American and Central American republics that we expect to consult with them in the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Answering the Senator from Illinois, will the Senator from Nevada indicate whether or not officially there is any dissent by any Latin-American republic to the Monroe Doctrine?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not any official dissent whatever. One reason for the former feeling was this:

A number of years ago, in carrying out the Monroe Doctrine, our Government insisted on going into a country and taking possession of it when there was a threat that some other foreign country was about to take possession of it, using the Monroe Doctrine rather as a protective measure. I think the first pronouncement by Woodrow Wilson of a policy of nonintervention commenced to relieve the fears of the South American governments. Then, when the present administration came in, the policy of noninterference in the domestic affairs of foreign countries and nonintervention in foreign countries became an established policy of the administration. It is now an established policy of the administration.

So I say the Senator is correct in stating that there is no official opposition to the Monroe Doctrine, and the former sentiment against it has practically died out under the changed conditions. I think the present situation is excellent, and at one of these conferences a resolution was adopted which holds that a threat to any one of these countries by a foreign power is a threat to all, which comes as near to being an endorsement of the Monroe Doctrine as could be expected from the large number of governments involved.

Before I take my seat let me urge, as has already been urged by the Senator from Texas, the great importance of passing the joint resolution at once. Events are taking place very rapidly in Europe. Perhaps today, perhaps tomorrow, there may be all kinds of transfers of French property. Not only should the executive department of our Government notify them of our position, but the Congress of the United States should notify them that the executive department of the Government is upheld in its action. So I hope that some time today this matter may be arranged.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Nevada. I am glad he has cleared up the question propounded by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

As I understand the force of these conventions, the only obligation they have is that we shall consult. After the consultation, each nation is free to pursue its own course.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. But it seems to me it is highly advisable that before we take armed action with regard to any of the particular powers that might be threatened we should show them the recognition of consulting them. If the Western Hemisphere is attacked, if the Monroe Doctrine is challenged, we shall need naval bases in Latin America. We shall need air bases. We shall probably need Army bases, military bases. Of course, in the acquisition of them we must not go in and just violently take control of them by force. We must first consult with the nations affected, and then we shall know better how to proceed as to our other measures.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not wish to take the Senator's time, but in connection with section 2, which the Senator has been discussing, I desire to say that the machinery of agreement has already been set up. I am so heartily in favor of the immediate passage of this joint resolution that I am willing to go a step further. I think the consultative machinery ought to be immediately put into operation; but, of course, this is the first step.

May I amplify what the Senator has said by calling attention to the provisions of the three conventions which have already been entered into?

In 1936 it was agreed that in the event that the peace of any American republic was menaced, each one should consult with the other members of previous conventions. It was also agreed that every act susceptible of disturbing the peace of any one of them should be regarded as susceptible of disturbing the peace of all.

Then in 1938, at Lima, it was provided that any one of the American republics, on its own initiative, might put into process of execution the consultative machinery.

Then, last October, going one step further, it was agreed—which agreement has been referred to two or three times—that in case there is a threatened transfer or attempted transfer of any territory in this hemisphere, the procedure of consultation shall be put into effect. Any American nation can, under the agreement and under the signed convention, put this into effect. I think it should be put into effect now. I think the resolution I offered should be adopted; but even if that is not done, there should be an immediate assertion of the views of the United States with reference to a redefinition of the Monroe Doctrine, and then the consultative machinery can be delayed if necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his very illuminating interruption.

Mr. President, in order that Senators may have their memory refreshed as to what the original Monroe Doctrine implied, let me quote briefly from excerpts from the message of President Monroe of December 2, 1823:

> The occasion has been judged proper—

Thus Mr. Monroe spoke, and I hope Senators will listen to him. James Monroe desires to address the Senate through his printed word, if Senators are interested—

> The occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers.

Then, skipping a great portion of it, Mr. Monroe spoke further:

> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider—

The United States, now, not Latin America—> that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any manner—

"Controlling in any manner"— > their destiny, by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

>
> It is impossible that the Allied Powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can anyone believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form with indifference. If we look to the comparative strength and resources of Spain and those new Governments, and their distance from each other, it must be obvious that she can never subdue them. It is still the true policy of the United States to leave the parties to themselves, in the hope that other powers will pursue the same course.

Mr. President, I think the Senate should today reaffirm, confirm, and ratify the policy given to the Nation by Mr. Monroe.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In the document read by the Senator from Texas, Monroe spoke of the fact that this country could not view with indifference any attempt to make conquest or transfer of property which affected this hemisphere. That brought to my mind the discussion just had with the able Senator from Iowa about the consulting machinery which is to be set up before anything might be done.

As I view it, one of the troubles with a democracy functioning in a crisis is that there is always too much consulting before it can act. One of the reasons for the failure of France and England at this particular time is the fact that, while they were consulting, the dictator acted.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator from Texas that, as a result of what is going on in Europe at the present time, this country should not wait for the consulting machinery to be set up, and should not hesitate to take alone whatever steps are necessary to see that the territory to which the Senator has referred is held inviolate from any foreign influence at this particular time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Illinois, and I think we can clearly differentiate and harmonize our views with respect to that matter.

Section 2, which requires consultation, requires consultation only to a limited extent. It provides:

In addition to other measures—

In addition to whatever other measures we adopted, we should consult to—determine upon the steps which should be taken to safeguard their common interests.

That is, the interests of the Latin-American republics, if they are attacked, or if they are invaded, or if they are threatened. That does not include the possessions of the European powers in this hemisphere in which the Latin-American countries have only an incidental interest. I think that under the joint resolution the United States would be entirely free to take such military or naval action as it might deem necessary with regard to possessions of European powers in this hemisphere without consulting Latin-American countries, unless their interests were directly involved.

Mr. President, I feel so strongly on this subject—and I am gratified to have the agreement of the Senator from Illinois—that rather than see any effort toward a transfer of title to any possession of a European power in the Western Hemisphere, I contend the United States should not wait a moment to send either its Army or its Navy to the protective custody, as it were, of these territories in the Western Hemisphere, if that answers the Senator from Illinois.

The Senator from Oregon is not in the Chamber at the present time, and of course I shall not press for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution; but I do wish to say that I hope we may be able to get it up during this day, not tomorrow, not Wednesday, not next week, because the things which are happening in Europe are happening with the speed of electricity, they are transpiring like the flash of lightning, and the swift flight of light and time. We should not hesitate a moment to let every European power that has ears, every European statesman who has an intellect, know that the United States is not for a moment going to hesitate in maintaining its traditional policy, which we call the Monroe Doctrine, and that we are going on to arm with navies and armies and aircraft, mechanized implements of war, until we shall be prepared, standing alone, to maintain the integrity of the Western Hemisphere, and to see that no totalitarian or monarchical system shall ever be established in the Western Hemisphere.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 21 and 22 to the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes; that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 11 to the bill; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER, Mr. TERRY, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. KERR, Mr. MAHON, Mr. POWERS, Mr. ENGEL, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

REVENUE BILL OF 1940

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Title I," on page 8, line 1, after the word "Corporations", to strike out "Section 231 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out '15 percent' and inserting in lieu thereof '16 percent', and by striking out '10 percent' wherever occurring therein and inserting in lieu thereof '11 percent'," and insert: "Section 231 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out 'except that in the case of dividends the rate shall be 10 percent, and', and by striking out 'of 10 percent.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to comment briefly upon the general aspect of the pending tax bill. The Republican minority side of the Finance Committee was glad to cooperate with the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in connection with the measure. It has some good aspects, but I want to submit a very brief analysis respecting its liabilities, its evasions, and its warnings.

The bill is certainly good in that it contains the amendment submitted by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], which for the first time in 7 pell-mell, spendthrift years commits the administration to some small semblance of compulsory economy. It is a good bill in that it approaches, however timidly, to the problem of doing something about a Treasury that has been milked completely dry since 1933.

The new taxes, of course, are called defense taxes. That is a very pleasant word to apply to them. It is sort of an anaesthetic. As the bill passed the House, and as originally drawn, they were known as supertaxes, which is, of course, precisely what they are. But in order to sugar-coat a bitter pill, the Senate Finance Committee changed the supertax definition to that of a defense tax. The poor taxpayer is supposed to be happier about it as a result of the camouflage.

Well, perhaps they are defense taxes in a sense, since any contribution to the maintenance of a sound government credit is essentially a contribution to the national defense, and inasmuch as sound credit is the first line of national defense.

But the people of America should have no illusion about the thing, or what it is. They have just started to pay the bill, not merely for national defense but for the accumulated deficit spending of 7 long, extravagant years in which Santa Claus was the administration's perpetual patron saint.

We finally have reached the end of the road, and we are at the bottom of the barrel. It just happens to be a coincidence that we collided with the statutory debt limit at that particular moment when added extraordinary taxes in the name of national defense could be levied because of the concurrent coincidental need for added defense expenditure. But I call the Senate's attention to this significant fact. The new defense tax bill, so-called, will raise $731,000,000 in the next fiscal year. Meanwhile, the regular operating deficit of the Government for the next fiscal year, without any reference whatsoever to these national-defense expenditures, is a minimum of $2,800,000,000 a year. In other words, the new tax, burdensome as it is, exhausting as it does the imagination of the Treasury Department in respect to taxes—this new tax bill raises only enough money to pay 25 percent of the regular operating deficit of the Government for the next fiscal year, without any respect whatsoever to the national defense.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator recalls the fact that the testimony before the Finance Committee was that even if we were to transfer, as it is proposed to do, all the ordinary normal expenditures, budgetary expenditures, for the support of the Army and Navy—not the extraordinary expenses now contemplated, but the ordinary expenses for the support of the Army and Navy—if we were to transfer them to a special defense budget, as it is proposed to do, there will be a deficit of $1,100,000,000 a year in the ordinary civil expenditures of the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is entirely correct, and he is simply emphasizing once more the statements that have been made during the last 2 weeks by the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

I wish particularly to tie the proceeds of this new tax to the fiscal situation which is involved in the fiscal year to which the tax is addressed, and I repeat that it raises just 25 percent of the regular operating deficit, without one nickel for extraordinary national defense. Yet, it is called a defense tax.

Well, Mr. President, you can call it a defense tax if you please. I repeat that it may be synthetically a defense tax, but in reality it is not even an adequate tax to pay the fiddler for the delirious dance of the last 7 years.

That is not the only interesting thing about the bill. Of course, we collide with the statutory-debt limit within the next few months, and there has been a very great desire to avoid, if possible, any increase in the statutory-debt limit, because that might awaken the American people to what is happening to them by way of this accumulated deficit spending, without any regard to national defense. There has been a very great anxiety to avoid increasing the debt limit. Well, they found a clever way to avoid it, and here it is in this bill. The debt limit remains at $45,000,000,000—oh, yes—but all the Regular Army and Navy expenditures are taken out of the regular Budget, although they have been regularly and annually recurring charges in the regular Budget for 150 years—they are all taken out of the regular Budget now, and they are put aside in a defense budget, and then into that defense budget is added all the new extraordinary defense expenditures, so that you get a $4,000,000,000 so-called defense-bond privilege which is in addition to the $45,000,000,000 privilege, and it is just as much in addition to the $45,000,000,000 limit as though it had been frankly added on. Indeed, the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the distinguished Democratic leader, almost spilled the beans in the Finance Committee when in a burst of candor he asked the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury why it would not be just as well to increase the debt limit from $45,000,000,000 to $49,000,000,000, so everybody could understand what is going on. And, of course, he was exactly right.

But what we are now to have—I would not call it "trick" arithmetic, because that is an invidious word—but it is a sort of fiscal magic which once more we are embracing. It is one more white rabbit out of a hat. We are now going to have two budgets, a regular Budget and a defense budget. We are going to have two deficits, a regular deficit and a defense deficit, and we are going to have three bond limits, one of them the statutory limit, one of them the defense limit, and the other the limit, if there is any, on the debt, which can be accumulated by the Government corporations, which is entirely outside the jurisdiction of these other limitations. Then I defy anybody to discover whether the Government is balancing its books. So, instead of simplifying the fiscal picture, instead of realistically approaching a cure to the fiscal ills, we are simply once more putting a mustard plaster on a cancer.

Mr. President, I voted for the bill in the committee, and I shall vote for it on the floor of the Senate, because it is better than nothing; but I wish to repeat that the American people need have no illusions about it. It is only a preview, and a very small taste of the taxes which must be paid by the American people during the next few years, first, for the purpose of catching up with the deficit spending of the past 7 prodigal years, and second, for the purpose of paying for the new national defense. If this Congress has the slightest conception of its responsibility to the American people, instead of even giving a moment's thought to an adjournment next Saturday or any time thereafter, it will proceed to sit down honestly, frankly, and courageously, look the fiscal situation in the face, reorganize the entire tax structure of the Government, reorganize the entire spending program of the Government, and present the American people with the truth. We must pay as we go, not only in respect to the national defense but also in respect to all Government expenditures, or the public credit will collapse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second committee amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, on page 9, line 16, after the words "per centum", it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and "and by striking out '15 percent' and inserting in lieu thereof '16 percent', so as to read:

(a) Section 143 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out "10 percent" wherever occurring therein and inserting in lieu thereof "15 percent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, to strike out:

(b) Section 144 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out "15 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "16 percent"; and by striking out "10 percent" wherever occurring therein and inserting in lieu thereof "11 percent."

And to insert in lieu thereof:

(b) Section 144 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out "except that in the case of dividends the rate shall be 10 percent, and" and by striking out "of 10 percent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall very reluctantly vote for the bill. It contains provisions with which I am not in entire accord. Months ago it seemed to me that we ought to proceed realistically—if I may adopt the phrase of my friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]—to enact a revenue measure which would in part at least meet the situation. I therefore prepared a bill which would have raised between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000. I could find no support for the suggestions which I made. The recommendation was made by the executive department that Congress enact a bill which would raise approximately $600,000,000. That, obviously, was so inadequate that the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate dealing with revenue measures felt constrained to increase the tax which was to be levied upon the American people. So we now propose to tax them approximately $1,004,000,000.

Obviously that is inadequate to meet the situation. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] stated, it will scarcely meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. Certainly it will not meet the ordinary expenses of the Government if, as we should do, we allocate to national defense the ordinary expenses of the Army and Navy.

I think we should have prepared a tax bill which would raise at least two or three billion dollars, in order not to add to the enormous deficit, which is increasing year by year, and, of course, becomes a stumbling block to the resuscitation of our shattered industries, and to place the American people and the American Government upon the highway to a sound fiscal policy and to the rejuvenation of our industrial and economic life.

There are several provisions in the bill which I think are very unwise. One of them, of course—and that will receive attention later—is the measure offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] dealing with the silver question. It is a rider upon the bill. It is a sort of wart, if I may use a vulgarism, which he seeks to attach to what would otherwise be—I will not say a very healthy body, but one which would have greater health without it than it would have if the rider were incorporated in the bill.

I shall vote for the bill, particularly if we eliminate the provision to which I have referred, but I shall do so reluctantly, because it is inadequate to meet the situation. We ought to raise at least $2,000,000,000. I think the American people will be very much surprised when they begin to learn of the frightful expenditures and the enormous burdens which rest upon them.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. While I was on my feet I intended to refer to one other matter, and with the Senator's permission I should like to do so briefly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I refer to the joint resolution regarding the restatement of the Monroe Doctrine, which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] presented a few moments ago. I voted in the Foreign Relations Committee for the restatement of the Monroe Doctrine with respect to the present situation. I confess that I have some reservations on the subject, as respects the major countries south of the Brazilian bulge, which have matured to the point where perhaps they are entitled to consultation and a right to consider the Monroe Doctrine on a partnership basis. However, be that as it may, I think the Senator from Texas is correct when he asserts that we should make it plain that we intend to sustain the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine in this emergency.

But, Mr. President, that entails an obligation which neither the Congress nor the executive department of the Government dares ignore. We are accepting an obligation to make good upon the defense of the Western Hemisphere, and since that obligation may fall due within 60 days so far as we are concerned, I submit that we had better conserve our national defense—what little we have of it—if we intend to reassert the Monroe Doctrine and our obligations under it. I know of nothing which would be more unfortunate at the moment than to pretend to sustain the Monroe Doctrine, and then to be unable to do it. At best we have available only the utmost minimum nucleus of a national defense, and in view of the action which obviously the Senate will take in the course of the next 24 hours on this particular question, I think it is double notice to the executive department of the Government that it must not under any circumstances release those portions of the national defense which are essential to our protection.

Furthermore, I think it would be most unfortunate if we were to give those with whom we sympathize in Europe any idea that we intend to sustain the Monroe Doctrine in behalf of their New World interests as well as our own, unless we are prepared to do so.

At this point, dealing with the whole general subject, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from this morning's Washington Post entitled "False Hopes Are Cruel." And they are cruel.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FALSE HOPES ARE CRUEL
